The other conductors this season will be Alfred Hertz and Arturo Vigna. Mr. Hertz will conduct German and Mr. Vigna Italian and French operas. Franko will conduct opera in all languages. He has been the concertmeister in so many productions that he is conversant with them all.

In the past one of Mr. Franko's duties was to engage the entire orchestra for the Metropolitan. He is a member of the Musical Union, and if any dispute came up he was in a position to bring about a satisfactory agreement. His efforts have always been in the way of conciliation. More than once if he had not stepped in and advised peace there might have been a strike that would have stopped grand opera for many performances.

"SWEET KITTY BELLAIRS" AGAIN.

Miss Crosman Begins a Short Season at the Belasco.

Henrietta Crosman came back to the Belasco Theatre last night for a return engagement in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." She will stay four weeks, until David Warfield comes to New York with his new play, "The Music Master." The company that enacted the pretty comedy last night practically is the same as last year. A large crowd turned out and gave the performers liberal applause. As Kitty, Miss Crosman was as bewitchingly frivolous and fascinating as ever.

The scene in Verney's bedroom is still the most telling part of the comedy, and the actress here rises to the height of her power. The drunken Colonel, who furnishes a good proportion of the laughs, is as tearful and maudlin as ever. Edwin Stevens, who has been in the Belasco companies several seasons, is still on hand. Others are Charles Hammond, Rees Davies, Fanchon Campbell, Fannie Burt, Clyde Fogel, and Genevieve Reynolds.

After her short stay in New York, Miss Crosman will go on the road with "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" and take in all the big cities of the country. Her plans for the season after this tour are not known, but it is said she will appear in another Belasco play.

Indian Hero of Edeson's New Play.

When Robert Edeson next appears in New York it will be in a new American play not yet named. Edeson will appear in the role of a college-bred Indian, who has finished the course at the Carlisle Indian School. William C. De Mille, son of the late H. C. De Mille, is the author of the new play. He has been at work on it for over two years. The play will not be presented until after Jan. 1.

Little sons and daughters of the Patch.
Other neighbors, children and goats residing in the Cabbage Patch.

After almost a year of prosperity on the road, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" opened at the Savoy last night, and while a characteristic metropolitan first-night audience at times took occasion to laugh at the play, it oftener laughed with it. There is little doubt that it will prove popular.

The stage version is the work of Anne Crawford Flexner, author of "Miranda of the Balcony," which Mrs. Fisk produced some years ago. Mrs. Flexner has drawn liberally on both "Mrs. Wiggs" and "Lovey Mary" and has added as liberally from her own invention. The result is called "a character comedy with heart interest." It might equally well be called a sub-rural melodrama.

The heart interest is fitful and incidental to a pretty continuous performance of character turns. It is largely supplied by bringing the late Mr. Wiggs back from his alcoholic grave of the novel and making him the bigamous father of an "orphan," with whom Lovey Mary has run away from the asylum. When Mr. Wiggs traces the truants by the light of Mary's red hair, he finds himself face to face with the first and only genuine Mrs. Wiggs, into whose soul the iron of shame and jealousy makes a passionate entrance. But the second and false Mrs. Wiggs, a circus rider by profession, has been killed by her horse, and the well-known optimism of the first Mrs. Wiggs pulls her through the heart interest.

The audience last night was chary of its tears, but it laughed amiably at the humors of life in the Cabbage Patch. Mrs. Wiggs herself was far from occupying the centre of the stage, though the authors had evidently done their heroic best by her. Philosophy, even when optimistic, is undramatic. Mrs. Cook showed her customary intelligence and ability, but bowed to the inevitable and surrendered the centre of the stage. Even Miss Taliaferro, exquisite as are her personal grace and artistic skill, was of secondary importance. The honors of the evening went to Helen Lowell and Will T. Hodge. These admirable comedians took the parts of an ill-assorted couple of advanced years, whom the optimism of Mrs. Wiggs, abetted by a matrimonial bureau, had been the means of splicing. Miss Lowell gave a reserved and highly individualized sketch of a forlornly unhappy scarecrow, and Mr. Hodge was the dry husband whose life's young dream was shattered by discovering that the pies his intended had fed him had been in reality cooked by the meddling Mrs. Wiggs.

It can scarcely be said that the character sketches in the play are of the utmost freshness and sincerity. Something is certainly at fault when cynicism and unhappiness are represented as merely absurd. One laughed, but somehow felt a little ashamed of himself and of human kind for laughing. It is true that on the stage, and even in the elder novelists, comedy has been often just so heartless. But is not that the best of reasons for ceasing to make it so? The French have a good word for this sort of thing—poncif, by which they mean conventionalized and stenciled art. Such art is sure to be recognized by the great public; but it does not afford one of the instances in which popular art is the highest art.

It was also too often apparent that the points were prearranged by the authors working in the interests of good people who are glad of a laugh at any cost, instead of springing simply and spontaneously out of the souls of the characters. Here again the French have hit on the most descriptive phrase. They call such points "jests of the author," as distinguished from "jests of the situation." It must be admitted that the author of the novels is equally guilty in this respect with the author of the play. And after all, to draw such distinctions is perhaps to take the whole thing far too seriously. Where there are so many Wiggses in the Cabbage Patch, why should there be wigs on the green?

However conventional and immature the technique and the manner, both book and play are at bottom abundantly human and genuinely felt. One would know that Mrs. Wiggs was a real Mrs. Wiggs, even if she had not gained newspaper notoriety by objecting to the intrusion of curiosity seekers in her Louisville shanty. The play brims with a lively sympathy, in spite of its conventional hardiness in certain parts. And the optimism of Mrs. Wiggs—crude, even gross as it often is—is a real spiritual refreshment. It is just possible that New York, the cynical and sophisticated will not take to it as remoter centres have done. But if it does not, that will not be altogether to the credit of New York.

"The Garden of Lies" in London.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—"The Garden of Lies," a romance adapted by Sydney Grundy from the story of Justus Miles Forman, had its first London production at the St. James's Theatre to-night, with George Alexander as Denis Mallory and Lillian Bracthwaite as Princess Eleanor. The piece achieved only fair success.

SPAIN HAS RECOVERED.

A German Consular Official Says New Economic Conditions Are Good.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—Richard Guenther, United States Consul General at Frankfort, Germany, quotes from a report of the German Consul General at Barcelona, Spain, as follows:

"The economic condition of Spain is much improved, and the country has recovered from the crisis brought on by the war with the United States in 1898. The recovery was much assisted by the increased demand for goods from Spain's lost colonies, as the war had interfered with receiving supplies. Another stimulant was given by the return of many [illegible] capitalists, who settled in Spain [illegible] their money there, [illegible] to trade, finished, and [illegible]

"The [illegible] in [illegible] amounted to [illegible] 735,000; exports, [illegible] the colonies has induced [illegible] to give their attention to [illegible] ment and enterprises, and a [illegible] commenced. Much, however, remains to be done in improving the economic condition by exploiting the rich natural resources of the country, establishing better means of communication, placing the finances in order, and reducing the heavy taxation.

"Spain has a productive soil, and could raise a much larger quantity of food stuffs than is required for home consumption. Last year Spain paid for imported coal $12,416,269, while her coal deposits are scarcely touched. Her extensive coast is rich in fish, yet $5,790,000 were spent last year for imported fish."

The Germans are very active in canvassing Spanish markets, says Mr. Guenther, and German capitalists and promoters are alive to the exploiting opportunities which Spain's rich natural resources offer.

SOLDIERS EASY TO ROB.

Gen. MacArthur Says Their Imbecility is Unbelievable.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—The feature of the annual report of Major Gen. Arthur MacArthur, commanding the Department of California, is the strong language used in reference to the treatment in San Francisco of the soldiers returning from the Philippines and mustered out there.

He says the greatest matter of concern which occupies the attention of the department is to get the soldiers returning from the Philippines into possession of their money due on their final payments and safely out of the city before they can be swindled. Quoting from Col. Markley, the Chief Paymaster, on this subject, Gen. MacArthur writes:

"The stupidity and imbecility of these 'short-term' men coming from the Philippines is almost unbelievable. Young Americans, amply able to take care of themselves anywhere, under any circumstances, while in service abroad, seem to take leave of their senses when they arrived on United States soil, and willingly become the prey of the sharks found in every big city.

"Instances and figures could be given to prove that out of 200 of these men paid off and permitted to go to the city on leaving boat, with railroad tickets purchased and money orders, (payable to themselves at their home,) fifty would turn up next morning robbed of everything, many dangerously injured by blows and drugs.

"On one occasion, out of thirty men who foolishly stayed over one night, nineteen turned up next morning, beaten, robbed of tckets, orders, and clothes."

BOSTOCK MAY QUIT AMERICA.

Intends to Devote His Time to His Paris Hippodrome.

Frank Bostock, who is now with his show at Dreamland, is about to leave America, probably for all time. He will shortly sail from this country for Paris, where he will establish a permanent home and where he will devote his whole time to the development of his hippodrome. Mr. Bostock also desires to take his children to Paris, where they may enjoy the benefit of a European education.

Mr. Bostock said that his ventures in this country had been entirely successful, but that he believed Paris would be a better field for him.

"I shall keep part of my show here," he said yesterday. "Some of the acts now presented at Dreamland will go to Paris, but I shall unite the remainder of the show with my Cleveland production, all of which will then be sent to Richmond for the Winter. It will return to Dreamland in the Summer of every year for four years more, and after that I do not know what I shall do with it."

THIRTY-TWO PAGES.

THE RUSSIAN DEFEAT.

The point that was left doubtful in yesterday's dispatches from the Tai-Tse is now settled. Gen. KUROPATKIN has been decidedly beaten practically on ground of his own choosing. It is plain that it was his intention to make a stand at Liao-Yang and there offer to the Japanese the utmost resistance of which he was capable. Every advantage was taken of the position, the most perfect preparations were made in the way of fortifications, all possible reinforcements were brought down from the north. It is equally plain that he counted on the possibility of a flanking movement on his left, and that he hoped, when he threw the main part of his army across the river, he would be able to crush KUROKI and then to resume the offensive against the rest of the Japanese, worn out with their long series of attacks on the south and west.

Not only has he failed in this plan, but he has been forced to sacrifice the bulk of his stores in Liao-Yang, and an entire corps, the famous Siberians under Gen. STAKELBERG, has been surrounded by KUROKI's army. It is a very serious defeat, far the worst that Russia has yet suffered in this war. So far as can be now foreseen nothing remains for Gen. KUROPATKIN but a forced retreat to the north, and his ability to make that good with his shattered and exhausted army is by no means assured. If the railroad remains to him, he may, with his extraordinary tenacity of purpose and with the heroic quality of his troops, be able to escape. But escape is all that seems even possibly open to him, and it is not likely that he will find repose short of Harbin. Had he elected, or had he been permitted, to retire thither at the outset, the blow to the prestige as well as to the actual military strength of Russia would have been far less crushing. Such a course now is only less disastrous than the surrender of the whole Manchurian army. Nor is it certain that that can be avoided.

"CONTROLLED MARKETING."

We invite the attention of the Attorney General of the United States to a circular reported in press dispatches from Indianapolis to have been issued by the American Society of Equity, an organization which appears to be engaged in acts in restraint of trade among the several States. The Society of Equity is the concern which last year urged the farmers of the West to hold their wheat until they secured the price of one dollar a bushel. It has now sent out what is called "a 1904 Bulletin," exhorting the farmers to insist upon a minimum price of $1.20 a bushel for their wheat. The circular points out that the Winter wheat crop this year is 100,000,000 bushels short of the average, and gives these words of advice:

> Controlled marketing is everything. Keep the price $1.20 before you. If you can hold all your wheat, do so. If you cannot hold all, hold what you can. If you cannot hold any, sell it. Those who hold will make the market better for those who cannot hold. If all hold, the price will go to $1.20—your price—in a few days. If few hold, it will take longer.

The American Society of Equity, of course, may be merely an invention of the "bulls" in the Chicago wheat pit. But if it is a reality, if there is such an organization, and it actually fathers the "1904 Bulletin," we think Attorney General MOODY ought to take steps to secure a judicial determination of the question whether this attempt at monopolizing a part of the wheat crop is not a violation of the second section of the Sherman Anti-Trust law, which declares that "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," and, upon conviction, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or one year's imprisonment. The Dingley act retains those clauses of the Wilson Tariff act which declare unlawful any form of combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract, "to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported or intended to be imported into the United States." That is a declaration of the National policy with regard to imported merchandise. Is the Anti-Trust law of 1890 a declaration of policy applicable to attempts to monopolize one of the products of the soil, and to force consumers to pay a higher price for it? Wheat, manifestly, is not in itself "trade or commerce among the several States." The decision of the court in the Knight case will, of course, be recalled. That was an action to break up the Sugar Trust, and it failed because the court declared that the Sherman act was not framed "to assert the power to deal with monopoly directly as such, or to limit and restrict the rights of corporations created by the States or the citizens of the States in the acquisition, control, or disposition of property, or to regulate or prescribe the price or prices at which such property, or the products thereof, shall be sold." This may appear to be conclusive as against any attempt to restrain the monopolists in wheat. But appearances are unsafe guides in these matters; even the lawyers are often misled. Doubt can be removed only by a decision of the court. The attempt by combination and conspiracy to secure $1.20 a bushel for wheat is a restraint of trade. If it is unlawful, the law would provide the remedy if the Attorney General would bring the matter up.

Every farmer who is persuaded by the Equity Society to hold his wheat until he gets $1.20 a bushel was, of course, an enthusiastic supporter of ROOSEVELT's action against the Northern Securities merger. But in the culinary lexicon of an Administration entirely just, no distinction is made between goose and gander in respect to sauces. The monopolist farmer should be hauled over the coals with no more ceremony than was exhibited in the case of the monopolist railroad men.

Everybody knows that the greatest restrainer of trade in the United States is organized labor. We know of no law, however, which would authorize the Attorney General to begin an action against labor unions. Nor have we the least idea that a bill imposing penalties upon the unreasonable restraint of trade by walking delegates, if any man deeply learned in the law should come forward with such a bill, would have any chance whatever of receiving even fair consideration in either branch of Congress. Real and serious restraints of trade appear to be beyond the reach of that body. The demagogic Sherman act was aimed mainly at acts that only in form restrain trade. The Republican majority in Congress in 1890 felt that no votes would be lost because of an act aimed at conspiracies of capitalists. Conspiracies of farmers or of wage-earners are safe from molestation by either party.

AN AMAZING PREMIER.

Great Britain has had many Prime Ministers who occupied themselves in fields other than that of politics often with solid results, sometimes with brilliant. CANNING was a satirist and a writer of light verse with so saving a grace in it that the tale of the knife grinder and the apostrophe to the candid friend will be likely to live long after his share in the evolution of the pregnant Monroe Doctrine will be forgotten. In recent times DISRAELI was as interesting, subtle, and complex a novelist as he was a politician, which is saying much. GLADSTONE dug widely, if not deep, in the furrows of Homeric research and of theologic speculation. ROSEBERY was and is an essayist and a historian of distinctly charming quality. Lord SALISBURY, in his youth, was one of the keenest and most savage of the then unmatched Saturday Reviewers, and the scars of some of the wounds he inflicted marked—and irritated—some of the most eminent men with whom he was associated in his later years. He was, moreover, in his hours of retirement, which were many, even in the time of his supremacy, a student of experimental science, in which he seemed to take a much livelier, if not a more profound, delight than in the exercise of his unrivaled leadership in public life.

But all the Ministers here recalled were primarily men of affairs and followed their other pursuits, with whatever zest, with a sense of their essential subordination to the duties of the head of the British Government. It is hardly too much to say that in the mind of Mr. BALFOUR this order of importance is reversed. He seems a philosopher and a metaphysician first and Premier of the United Kingdom and the Empire of Great Britain afterward. And this impression is not due to the fact that he shirks his public duties. His enemies accuse him of that, it is true, and some of his bewildered friends, but neither class really holds that opinion when he meets a great emergency and triumphs over all sorts of perplexing difficulties as, recently, he has done with the utmost persistence. It is due rather to the mental attitude he betrays when engaged in one or the other of his fields of activity. Mr. BALFOUR, in the House, wearily watchful of the heady currents of contention amid which his Government is threatened with destruction, and gently, almost indifferently, guiding his party to what has as yet been a successful issue, is a very different man from Mr. BALFOUR facing the scientists of the British Association and challenging their standing, their methods, their authority, in matters of the deepest concern to the human intellect.

For this is what he really did in his remarkable address, modestly entitled "Reflections Suggested by the New Theory of Matter," which, as President of the association, he delivered at Cambridge on the 17th of August. It is impossible in the space allowed in these columns to undertake even the briefest summary of the argument he submitted. It was, as we have said, the challenge, practically the defiance, of the philosopher and the idealist, addressed to those who have devoted their lives to natural science. A single passage toward the close will indicate its spirit:

> Considerations like these, unless I have compressed them beyond the limits of intelligibility, do undoubtedly suggest a certain inevitable incoherence in any general scheme of thought which is built out of materials provded by natural science alone. Extend the boundaries of knowledge as you may; draw how you will the picture of the universe; reduce its infinite variety to the modes of a single space-filling ether; retrace its history to the birth of existing atoms; show how under the pressure of gravitation they became concentrated into nebulae, into suns, and all the host of heaven; how, at least in one small planet, they combined to form organic compounds; how organic compounds became living things; how living things, developing along many different lines, gave birth at last to one superior race; how from this race arose, after many ages, a learned handful, who looked round on the world which thus blindly brought them into being, and judged it, and knew it for what it was—perform, I say, all this, and, though you may indeed have attained to science, in nowise will you have attained to a self-sufficing system of beliefs.

In moving the customary vote of thanks, Dr. CHASE, the Vice Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, described this as a "great Presidential address," "a wonderful exposition of the conclusions of the science of to-day as to the nature of matter." Such appreciation from such a source is sufficient proof of the extraordinary character of the achievement of the leading politician of England. It is an achievement in which all interested in things of the mind in our own still buster and more strenuous National life may regard with the keenest pleasure.

THE BRIDGE AND THE COMMISSION.

The recently published bulletin of the Municipal Art Society concerning the Manhattan Bridge contains all the correspondence on the subject upon which the Art Commission is expected shortly to take action. It ought to be read by every citizen who feels called upon to form an opinion upon the merits of the controversy.

The issues involved really go much beyond the particular question of the Manhattan Bridge, highly important as that question is. It concerns us all that the city shall get its money's worth in the most extensive and the most expensive of the bridges the city has been called upon to build, the capacity of which is to be so very much greater than that of either of its predecessors. But it concerns us still more, as the Municipal Art Society points out, that there shall in some manner be insured some continuity in the administration of public works so important that their execution must extend beyond the limits of a single municipal administration, which the amended charter has so shortened that no Mayor can see, within his term of office, both the beginning and the end of one of such works. The community ought to be secured against the danger that mere caprice, or mere vanity, or mere spite, may upset plans deliberately and carefully formed, and provided with all the guarantees that expert approval can furnish that they are abreast of the present state of the art of which they are examples.

The design for the Manhattan Bridge prepared under the direction of ex-Bridge Commissioner LINDENTHAL furnishes such guarantees. The design with which Bridge Commissioner BEST is endeavoring to supersede it distinctly fails to furnish them. Although Mr. BEST in his letter to the Art Commission cites the opinions of his engineering staff, he yet avows his own responsibility for discarding the plans of his predecessor and substituting others which that predecessor declares are unworthy of the present state of the art, and threaten a less strong and trustworthy bridge than that to which the city is entitled. To quote the authority of Mr. BEST as opposed to that of Mr. LINDENTHAL on a question of bridge engineering would of course be a mere absurdity. But that is not the worst of it. Mr. BEST overrules also the report of the five distinguished bridge engineers whose report approved the plan of Mr. LINDENTHAL, although he declares that they did not institute a comparison between the two constructions. All the more, then, should he be willing that the two constructions should be compared by that commission or by another of equal authority. Mr. LINDENTHAL courts such a comparison. The Municipal Art Society insists that the only way of deciding the question so as to assure the community that it is getting the worth of its money is by the reference of it to a commission of engineering experts, and fortifies its opinion with the opinions of Prof. BURR of Columbia and Prof. WEBB of the Stevens Institute. Since the Art Commission is not itself a body of experts in engineering it seems that the only way in which it can assure itself that it is doing its duty by the city is to ask the Mayor to appoint such a commission, and that it would be by no means justified, in advance of such an investigation, in approving another design for the work for which it has already approved one, with guarantees of its structural suitability, which the second thus far entirely lacks.

FOR AN ENGLISH COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.

ADOLF BECK, the victim of a remarkable English judicial error or conspiracy, whose extraordinary case received some attention in these columns last Sunday, has declined the £2,000 offered by the British Treasury as a quid pro quo for wounded feelings, temporary loss of good name, and enforced retirement from industrial pursuits, and has addressed to the Home Secretary a demand for a thorough investigation of his case. His position, if one may judge by the communications appearing in the London press, is supported by the most prominent legal lights of the British bench and bar. And in demanding an investigation the English legal profession, as we announced the other day, has naturally revived the question of the expediency of a Court of Criminal Appeal.

English jurisprudence is based on the assumption that the law can do no wrong. The function of pardon as orginally employed by the Home Secretary meant simply mercy, grace, and forgiveness, but experience having shown that the application of law might err, new attributes were given to the significance of the pardon so that now a "free pardon," such as BECK received, conveys the meaning of the entire belief of the Home Office in the innocence of the one pardoned. The Home Secretary, in receiving a petition, has this alternative: After reviewing the case, he may deny the petition or he may grant a pardon. If the testimony plainly shows that the petitioner was illegally or unreasonably convicted, or denied the privilege of reasonable doubt, the Home Secretary of these modern days has been accustomed to ameliorate in various ways the position of the petitioner without, however, making any acknowledgment that the law had erred.

Even taking into account the latest significance of "free pardon," it is plain that the office of Home Secretary is an anomaly in English jurisprudence. Appeals may be made from judgments in every civil court, but not from the judgment of a criminal court. Criminals tried before different Judges and juries for the same kind of crime may receive varying sentences. Judgment in each is final. Or, to show the anomaly in a still more absurd light, let it be supposed that a man is prosecuted both criminally and civilly. He is tried and convicted on the civil charge first. The evidence here used against him is then employed to secure his conviction on the criminal charge. He is sentenced; there is no appeal from this judgment. But he appeals from the judgment of the civil court, is granted a new trial, and is declared to be innocent. The only thing to save him from a felon's punishment is the intelligence and mercy of a single man—the Home Secretary—whose legal mind is already prejudiced by the principle of the utter righteousness of law.

There is nothing new in the points brought out by the present agitation; they have all been proposed before, and have even been discussed by Parliamentary committees appointed for the purpose. But Parliament itself has never done anything. Should the Beck case, as it undoubtedly will, form a subject of discussion in the coming session, not only England but an enlightened public abroad will watch the progress of the debates. The demands for a change in the English judicial system based on the grounds of both justice and practicability will have to be answered. It is inconceivable that, with the eyes of the world upon them, a majority of British Commoners will be satisfied with the answers which were given ten years ago: That a change would mean such an increase of appeals as would "choke the channels of justice"; that the right of appeal "would destroy the finality of verdicts"; that the "responsibility of jurors would be injudiciously affected by the mere knowledge that an appeal might be taken from their opinion," and that, finally, an innocent man should be debarred from proving his innocence simply because his action would thereby prove a "sinful disturbance of the administration of law."

These are some of the convincing reasons which ten years ago caused a bill for a Court of Criminal Appeal proposed by Sir HENRY JAMES and eloquently defended by him and by Judges like Lord BOWEN and Lord Justice MATHEW to be shelved in the House of Commons.

WAR OF PURSES ABOUT POLES.

The war between the Poles and the Prussian Government goes merrily. Just now it is West Prussia, the ancient seat of a tribe called the Cassubians, which is considered in danger from the colonising gulle of the German-Poles, or, if you prefer, the Polish-Prussians, who are accused of a fiendish plan of buying farms and estates there in order to raise the proportion of Polish voters and "conquer" the province. As the Cassubians have a traditional dislike of Germans dating from the Middle Ages, the Poles of Prussia hope to influence them to their way of thinking with comparative ease so soon as enough land is acquired to make that influence potent; for in the eastern provinces, where West Prussia lies, the land owners as employers of field labor exercise sovereign sway. So far the new rules and regulations adopted with the hope that they would discourage colonizing by Polish-speaking citizens have produced no appreciable effect, and a paternal Government stands aghast at its inability to make the bad sons keep away from lands which ought to belong to good boys only.

It is hard that a well-meaning but somewhat partial Government should have to worry in this way; that, besides the unfortunate events in Southwest Africa, where the imperial colony is on its last legs owing to bureaucracy, military swagger, and the incidental ferocity of the Hereros, the Prussian colonies in Prussia itself should languish. German immigrants into Posen and East and West Prussia cannot be obtained from the Elbe or the Rhine. Alsatians would not make humble and loyal colonists, neither could the Danish folk in lands wrested from little Denmark be safely utilized. But there is a great German population, a floating population, too, which seems to have escaped the notice of the Prussian Solons in Landtag assembled. It swarms in Paris and London and penetrates Italy even unto Naples, and it is a particularly keen, thrifty tribe, wideawake for Trinkgeld. It centres chiefly in the hotels and restaurants of these cities, and consists for the most part of able-bodied Germans who perform various duties from managers of hotels down to scullions in cheap restaurants. Here is a very army of good German materials lost to the Fatherland, who would be willing, for a free passage, the bestowal of a farm and some trifle of an official salary thrown in, to repatriate themselves and settle down as a bulwark against the wicked Poles.

What the Government intends to do next year in its war against its Polish subjects is not yet clear; but judging from the indignant remarks of certain German papers it will be something drastic. Poles will wish they had never been born. Better fighting OYAMA and KUROKI under the flag of Russia; better prisoners to the Japs in lovely Nippon than landowners in Eastern Prussia. The Landtag has a rod in pickle for them. Meantime the ordinary man fit to be a farmer, whether he be of German or of Polish speech, may regard the situation with some complacency. On the one side a Government which has already squandered millions in its attempt to settle up the country with Teutons; on the other a formidable league of Polish politicians and financiers, buying estates and founding banks, urging the wealthy to invest in farms in the disputed districts—surely many crumbs must fall to the poor man of either side from the table round which these magnates quarrel. And the swarthy, short-set Cassubians and the lean, long-bodied Lithuanians, are they not likely to gain through all this manoeuvring, this rise of the price of real estate, this cajolery and sudden interest taken in the common folk? If the Deputies to the Landtag are wise they will enlist all the German porters and waiters in Europe and establish them in the Eastern provinces. What these do not know of ways to plunder the unsophisticated is not worth much.

REGULATING STRIKES BY LAW.

A valued correspondent proposes as a means of averting the public misfortune of strikes into which wage earners are drawn or driven by union leaders a plan which he thinks should commend itself to the approval of sane men in all relations of life. This contemplates:

First—The enactment of a law which will give a proper recognition to labor organizations and provide for an official supervision of them.

Second—The prohibiting of any individual or body of individuals, other than a majority of those directly affected, from ordering a strike.

To make such a law effective the following plan is proposed:

Any one or more representatives of a labor union, duly organized or otherwise, shall have the privilege of recommending a strike. When so recommended, under any rules that may be desired, the men who are employed shall decide by secret ballot whether the said recommendation be approved or disapproved. If a majority of all employés affected do not vote affirmatively there shall be no strike. The voting and balloting shall be in charge of and managed by city or State officials, in order that coercion may be avoided. Ballots to be as carefully prepared, guarded, and supervised as in the case of voting at State or municipal elections. Every safeguard possible should be provided to protect each workingman in the exercise of his rights. It should not be possible to detect his vote. He should be as free to express his desire, without influence or molestation, as when voting at a Federal or State election.

The difficulties with the plan above outlined are many and serious. Primarily, organized labor does not want such a law and would denounce its enactment as gross oppression. If enacted, it could not be enforced. If enforced, it would not accomplish the object in view. If the object in view could by any chance be accomplished, the restriction of the right of labor to refuse to work when the conditions of employment are not satisfactory would be abused by employers—not by all, perhaps, but by enough to do great injury to labor. There are several other objections which might be suggested, but those offered will probably suffice.

Most persons who discuss this and kindred subjects make the mistake of supposing that organized labor always regards the questions of its duties, obligations, and interests from a sane and reasonable point of view. Unfortunately, it does not often, as yet, do this. It does not wish to be restrained from even the most ruinous excesses. An illustration of this is found in the recent history of the building trades of New York.

There is no convenient expedient for bringing about and maintaining industrial peace. The existing condition of strife is a superficial indication of a deep-seated and general unrest, partly the result of American conditions and, in some part, of the influence of the vast multitude of naturalized aliens who continue as citizens to think as they had learned to think as subjects.

A POST OFFICE COMEDY.

The Postal Service is commonly prosaic, with a dramatic touch sometimes when thieves of the Star Route and other kinds break into it, but it is not so often enlivened with comedy as it might be to the improvement of its amusing aspects if not of its regularities and utilities. Not long ago it was found out that a New Jersey Postmistress had undertaken to inspect the correspondence of the neighborhood, and with the knowledge thus acquired was enabled to contribute to it over fanciful signatures, with the most pungent and startling effect. For a certain time the inhabitants of the rustic hamlet thus served were in a state of violent communal agitation, as if Satan in his most flagrantly postal and mixed-up manifestation had broken loose among them. But investigation by proper officials traced the confusion and irregularity to its proper source in the curiosity and native spirit of mischief of the female in charge of the office. She would not condescend to any explanation, and, though thus contumacious and impenitent, was "let down easy" and allowed to emigrate, closing the incident so far as that postal centre was concerned, but leaving a background of the most thrilling epistolary memories.

It does not appear from the record that Miss GRACE DECKER, late mistress of the Post Office at Linoleumville, S. I., was stirred with any idle curiosity as to the contents of the letters which came into her hands, or that she deliberately transposed them from one wrappage to another, so that they should reach other persons than those to whom they were addressed; nor did she seek herself to mix an anonymous statement with the correspondence to the wide-eyed and hair-raising bewilderment of its recipients. She was apparently superior to all monkey shines of this grade, and did not care a rap for the contents of any of the missives which were scooped into her official net. Owing to the nationality of the operatives employed there the greater part of these were in ragged foreign dialects which the most prying female in the island, official or non-official, could not under conditions of examination "halcyon and vociferous" to the limit make head or tail of; but even those in the plain open patois of Staten Island remained unviolated, showing that in the mind of Miss GRACE DECKER no prurient curiosity as to their contents existed. What she did with them was to hide them away in nooks and corners till bushels of them were thus piled up, the air around the lettered pigeonholes electric with vain inquiries for them from dawn to dewy eve, week after week and month after month, till ministers of investigation dropped in from Washington straightened out the tangle and appointed a new Postmistress. So far the retiring one gives no account of her motives in thus holding up the mail and distributing in lieu of it an amount of local perplexity unparalleled in the annals of the island; very likely she did not have any admitting of definition, but was the victim of some mysterious obsession from which she could not deliver herself and which forbade her to deliver the letters twice a day poured in upon her from all quarters for that purpose. It is a curious case, presenting no lesson to the service of much importance, as its like has never happened before and probably will not again; but it may enforce the precept that things of all kinds, including Postmistresses, are not always what they seem, and that of the latter the most exemplary and efficient and conscientious in appearance may have as much of the devil in them as a witch out of the rabble of Walpurgis night. Linoleumville may congratulate itself that it has got a new one, but ought to keep the old one as a curiosity.

Unsatisfactory Street Sprinkling.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a taxpayer of New York City, and a frequent user of the highways, I wish to raise my voice in protest against the present, primitive, senseless, and dangerous method of street sprinkling, which accomplishes no good whatever, but on the contrary is a distinct menace to the safety of all classes of citizens, pedestrians, riders, and drivers alike.

Until a few weeks ago a very excellent system was in use, viz., the washing of the streets with a hose early in the morning and again at 11 or 12 o'clock. This effected the desired purpose, viz., the cooling of the streets and the thorough cleaning of the asphalt, for when it dried off it certainly was clean, all dirt and foreign matter having been driven from its surface by the force of the water; and our streets smelt sweet as a result and were pleasant and safe to drive over.

The present system, which seems to be to keep the streets wet all the time, does not clean the roadway, but mixes the dirt with a greasy, evil smelling paste. As a consequence, bicyclists get smothered with mud and dirt in a ride over the city streets, and falls and accidents with varying results are frequent; automobilits completely lose control of their machines on the slippery surface, particularly in turning corners, and under circumstances requiring prompt action to avoid running down a pedestrian, or collision with another vehicle, a sudden stop is an impossibility. In addition, horses may be seen floundering at any time in the day during the wetting process, and pedestrians get freely spattered with the all-pervading mud.

I sincerely hope that this letter may come to the notice of thoughtful public spirited citizens whose interest in the matter may be aroused, and by the help of whom we may hope for the adoption of a better system and one which will be more to the satisfaction and convenience of the traveling public. A. SKIDDER.

JAPANESE FOREIGN TRADE.

Germany Coming to the Front in the Far Eastern Markets.

From The London Standard.

It is accepted as inevitable (writes a correspondent) that war should affect commerce adversely. But that it should be altogether destroyed by nebular contraband theories is naturally irritating to our traders. A striking table is just to hand showing that in Japan, Britain and America are wise in taking strong measures lest a manifestly less important trade—the German—should be benefited. For the last ten years of the nineteenth century British and American trade with Japan increased at a prodigious rate. Since 1900—when Manchurian affairs became first critical—trade has been tremendously disturbed, as the figures show. America possessing practically a monopoly of petroleum and cotton in Japan's imports, does well to take a firm stand:

	British.	American.
1890	$15,000,000	$3,000,000
1895	22,500,000	4,500,000
1900	25,500,000	31,000,000
1901	25,000,000	21,000,000
1902	25,000,000	24,000,000

(Exports of Great Britain and the U. S. A. to Japan, 1890-1903.)

Japan's importance as a market may be gauged by the following figures, which give her imports from the countries mentioned. Germany's stake is but a quarter of the combined commerce of Great Britain and the U. S. A.:

	1902.	1903.
Great Britain	$25,150,000	$24,300,000
British India	25,400,000	35,050,000
United States	24,350,000	23,100,000
China	20,300,000	.....
Germany	12,400,000	.....
France	3,370,000	.....

The Ancestral Tail.

From The London Chronicle.

A German traveler claims to have discovered in the forests of Borneo a people who still wear the tail of our primitive ancestors. He does not write from hearsay; he has seen the tail. It belonged to a child about six years old, sprung from the tribe of Poenans. As nobody could speak the Poenan tongue the youngster could not be questioned, but there was his tail sure enough, not very long, but flexible, hairless, and about the thickness of one's little finger. The Poenans are reported to be very simple, honest folk, with a childlike system of barter. They deposit in public places the goods they wish to exchange, and a few days later they find there the equivalents they desire. Nobody dreams of stealing. This is almost as remarkable as the vestige of the ancestral tail.

FAIR PLAY FOR D. B. HILL.

Editorial Estimate of Him Indorsed by Readers.

I read your editorial to-day on David B. Hill's retirement from politics after Jan. 1, and I must say, from the standpoint of fairness, it is to be commended. I have been a reader of THE TIMES for over thirty years and, like its editors, I never was a strong Hill adherent, but am willing to give him credit for acting most earnestly and honestly in the interest of Judge Parker's nomination and election. There is one thing in Hill's favor—he is an honest man and has never benefited by his influence as a great and powerful political leader, but yet he did the right thing in his recent declaration.

Now, what about the others now in command of the Democratic forces? Is THE TIMES of the opinion that "Billy" Sheehan, who seems to be the head and front at National headquarters, will ever have the confidence of the voters in the State of New York? When you think for a moment and go back ten or twelve years, it will be remembered that he was back of more vicious legislation in one year than any other Democrat that ever held official position at Albany. It don't seem possible that the voters will ever stand for W. F. Sheehan's control of affairs in this State or elect a President whom Sheehan will claim as his own. From what we hear noised around Taggart is no better and entitled to no more consideration.

Indeed, Parker is to be pitied on account of the men he has to depend upon to elect him. I have also been reading your articles and letters on the tariff. Do you think Sheehan, Belmont, and "Jim" Smith are in favor of a real reduction or revision of the tariff? Of course not; they are in favor of all the trusts, especially all those they are in, and they are in most of them, and for this reason they are protectionists at heart and for the highest kind of a tariff, and what can Parker do?

A REAL DEMOCRAT.

New York, Aug. 30, 1904.

IF RUSSIA SHOULD WIN.

It Might Prove of Greater Evil to Her Than Defeat.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your correspondent, Mr. "McQ." who presents in to-day's issue of THE TIMES a plea for pro-Russian sympathy, seems to build a very clever argument on rather flimsy legs. He thinks we should sympathize with Russia first, because he thinks her civilization differs from ours only in being more backward, whereas that of Japan in addition to being more backward is also divergent. Secondly, we should sympathise with Russia because she is white and Japan isn't.

On what authority does Mr. "McQ." base his assertion that the civilization of Japan is backward? Why does he ignore what is a matter of popular information, that the spirit of Japan is progression while that of her unfortunate antagonist is retrogression. The oft-repeated and well-substantiated theory that Russia is less Occidental than Oriental he also chooses to ignore.

Statistics tell us that but about 22 per cent. of Russia's vast population is literate; they also tell us that in Japan education is compulsory and that 92 per cent. of her available young people are in school. According to the editor of The Cosmopolitan Magazine Japan is second only to Germany in matters pertaining to popular education. As to his reiteration of the tiresome bowl of "Yellow Peril," that is something which has been thoroughly thrashed out in the public prints and is now deceased, or ought to be. Mr. "McQ.'s" appeal to race prejudice is certainly worthy of the pro-Russian. The ignorant condemn the negro for his color; the educated judge him by his record, and unfortunately the conclusions coincide. It is unnecessary to point out that the history of the Japanese is not that of the negro. There can be no comparison.

Would Mr. "McQ." assist in crushing right because it happens not to be white? Finally, has he ever stopped to consider that victory for Russia might after all prove for her the greater of two evils?

ANTI-PREJUDICE.

New York, Aug. 31, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter of "L. McQ." of Croton Falls, N. Y., published in THE TIMES this morning, thanking you for your editorials on "The Czar's Gift" and "The War and International Law" has filled me with a desire to thank you.

The presumption of nearly all the metropolitan journals is that because there are a number of dissatisfied ex-subjects of the Czar resident in this country all of us should be delighted at each reversal of Russian arms. I am certain a large number of citizens hold directly opposite views. Again thanking you for your fair play.

A Beautiful Skyscraper.

From The Houston Chronicle.

The new TIMES Building has now reached a point of completion which enables the New Yorker to form an opinion as to its beauty. THE TIMES Building is the first really beautiful skyscraper of the new era. Its position at the head of the street gives the eye a grand sweep from the north and the south, and sets off its monumental proportions to the best advantage. Indeed, many people think that it is a monument, so tall and stately and narrow does it appear.

Present Location Unknown.

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

A caller stopped at the house of a certain man and asked if he was at home.

"'Deed, an' he's not," replied the woman who answered the ring.

"Can you tell me where he is?"

"I could not."

"When did you see him last?"

"At his funeral."

"And who may you be?"

"I'm his remains," said the widow, and she closed the door.

VERSES BY PRIGGISH PRUE.

"Ten years old if she's a day."
—Richard Le G.

How sad it is to hear Papa
Say "Dash it all!" to dear Mamma.
And, my! there is another word,
Which is the worst I ever heard!
Oh, if we say such naughty things,
We may be angels, but—no wings.

To sit and rock while we're at play,
And sleep the whole night through,
Is surely not the proper way
For grown-up folk to do.

They tell me it is wrong to stuff—
All I may eat is "just enough."
But, what's "enough" I'd like to know,
If 'taint enough as feelings go?
I'm but a little sinful child;
I am not meek, I am not mild,
And, O, I do like pie, and candy!
And Mamma says—"Whatever's handy."

A butterfly should not be proud
Because it looks so bright and pretty;
She has but that one dress allowed,
And cannot change it. What a pity!

I learned to sing, and sing right well,
As soon as I had learned to spell.
I sing about the Missionaries
And Heathen in the wild Canaries.
I hem warm things for them to wear,
And not catch cold when in the air.
And then, it isn't nice to go
With only shells for dress, you know.
Papa says, "Give 'em calico."

JOHN HARRISON.

LONG-DISTTNCE WOOER IS SICK OF LOVE NOW

Septuagenarian Hoagland Denies Misleading Nebraska Girl, Though.

TELLS ABOUT THAT PICTURE

'Twas of Vintage of '63, to Be Sure, but Time Doesn't Count Much at Bound Brook.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Sept. 3.—George Hoagland of Bound Brook, the carpenter who attracted attention this week because of the arrival at Bound Brook of Miss Minnie Humphries of Lincoln, Neb., who said that she had come, on the strength of correspondence, to wed Mr. Hoagland, but that she would not carry out her bargain when she saw he was gray-haired and seventy, was in town today.

Mr. Hoagland says that it was he that balked when he saw Miss Humphries. He said that she had sent him a photograph and that he did not recognize her as the original of the picture. He says that he sent $28 to Miss Humphries to come on, but afterward, on the advice of a relative, he says that he wrote to the woman not to come, but to return his money and letters. In answer to this he received the following letter from the woman, he says:

"Haven't had a word from you for more than a week. What is the matter? Am so worried about you. Am afraid that you have met with an accident. If you are displeased with anything I have said or done, or with me, seems like you would say so or say something anyhow. I can bear anything better than suspense. Write me at once, dear, and tell me all. Have come up to the Post Office every day for a letter from you, and have been disappointed every time. Please write and tell me why you are silent. Am so anxious to know what's the matter. Good-bye, dear."

Concerning the Nebraska girl's statement that he had sent her a photograph of a much younger man he said:

"There isn't a word of truth in that. I sent her a photograph of myself taken in 1863, and I know that I have changed very little since then. I tell you I know how to keep young, and if I call myself "Doctor" it is because I know a great deal more than most doctors."

Miss Humphries, reports of her return to Nebraska to the contrary, notwithstanding, has now secured employment in Bound Brook, and will remain there. She has been working this week as seamstress for Henry Garretson.

Mr. Hoagland says that some of the letters which he received are full of endearing terms. He says that he is sick of love and intends to remain single.

CHINAMEN'S RIGHTS UPHELD.

Laborers Cannot Be Deported If They Came Here as Merchants.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 3.—In a decision rendered to-day in the deportation case of Lee Won Tong, a Chinaman, Judge John H. Rogers of the United States District Court held that Lee could remain in this country. The decision determines the status of a Chinaman who changes his occupation while in this country, Judge Rogers's opinion being the first ever handed down on the subject.

The Chinese Exclusion act grants merchants the privilege of coming into the United States. It excludes laborers. Lee Won Tong entered the country as a merchant, and remained one for several years. He then became a laborer, and the Government sought to deport him, holding that as a laborer he had no right to enter this country, and therefore had no right to remain.

The Chinaman contended, and Judge Rogers's decision sustains him, that he came into the country legally, and once here, the Government had not the right to deport him.

A VICTIM OF SAUSAGE.

Mrs. Federsen Says Husband Used Liberwuerst for Weapon.

The trials and tribulations of a sausage maker's wife were told yesterday in the Supreme Court, when Mrs. Sophie Federsen applied to Justice Clarke for alimony and counsel fees pending an action which she has brought against her husband, James Federsen, for a legal separation. Federsen is a sausage manufacturer. His wife alleges that he is a prosperous sausage maker. They were married on May 28, 1897, and she alleges that ever since their marriage he has constantly abused her. She says that he has refused to contribute to her support since May 21 last.

On many occasions, she says, he has beaten her with bologna sausages which he manufactured, and, she says, he threatened to kill her. He has thrown her down on the floor, she says, and choked her and turned the hose on her. She says he hit her with bolognas so often that she feared he would kill her some day, so she is afraid to reside in the house with him.

Lawyer Charles Hoffman, counsel for the sausagemaker, submitted an affidavit from Federsen, in which he denies his wife's allegations, and says that he is unable to pay alimony and counsel fees to his wife for the reason that his sausage factory has been crippled to a great extent by the meat strike. Federsen indignantly denied that he had been in the habit of striking his wife with bolognas or sausages. On the contrary, he says, he always provided a good home for her, and was a kind and indulgent husband to her. He declared emphatically that instead of turning the hose on her or hitting her with bolognas, that he was affectionate toward her.

Mrs. Federsen's lawyer said that Federsen was in the habit of picking up a leberwurst and striking her on the head with it. Counsel said that a blow from a leberwurst was worse than a blow from a sand bag. This last assertion was not denied. He also said that Federsen always seemed to get sufficient meat to manufacture bolognas to beat his wife with. Justice Clarke said that the woman had not made out a prima facie case against her husband, as her story was not corroborated.

The sausagemaker thereupon offered to provide a home for his wife, but the offer was not accepted, as Mrs. Federsen's attorney said that she had become tired of stronding blows from bolognas.

Under the circumstances, Justice Clarke said, he did not feel warranted in compelling the sausagemaker to pay alimony. The application was then dismissed.

MILLVILLE DRESSMAKERLESS.

Seamstresses All Got Married—Women in an Awful Plight.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J., Sept. 3.—A wail comes from Millville that the good women of that village are without dressmakers.

Last Winter there were sixteen seamstresses in the place, and the women patrons grew haughty in their independence. Now not a dressmaker's shingle is in sight. Dressmakers are no more immune to the wiles of Spring than other mortals, and before the Summer had grown old the entire sixteen were plucked by as many men seeking wives. When they married the hum of the machine was heard no more, and several prospective September brides are spoiling their beauty by worrying over trousseaus.

THE WAR VIA THE BRIDGE.

Eminent Phoneticians Throw Light on Far Eastern Conflict.

Barney, the lamp cleaner on the Brooklyn Bridge, met Henry Poulson, the bridge sweeper, under one of the stairways of the bridge last night, and asked him for the latest news from the scene of the Eastern war.

"It ain't ouder yet," said Henry. "We'll first know vhen ve read to-morrow's paper cause ve don't get it to-morrow till to-day is yesterday. But I bellef mebbe der Yaps killed der Russian Army by dot place vhich nobody can speech der name of der Yeneral."

"If yer mane th' Russian Gineral," remarked Barney, "it's Kuro-Pat-McCarren. He was outflanked on the Young Liar River be Gineral O. K. and Kuremquick, but the Russian half backs made for the Japs goal and killed tin thousand min in traps made wid bayonets in the Chinese cornfields."

"I read-ed dot," said Henry, "but I can't speech der name of der place vhere it happened."

"It was near Shoe-shine-pay-up," replied Barney. "Then the Japs crossed the river to Hung-one-lung and the Russians fled wid general disorder."

"Did he swim der river over, too?" asked the sweeper.

"Who?" asked Barney.

"General Disorder."

"No," explained Barney. "General disorder followed the battle."

"Dot vas vhere der Yaps got in hit deir sewing machine guns," suggested the sweeper.

"I don't know about the sewing part of it," replied Barney, "but I do know the Russians got hemmed in."

"I guess dot vas by der place vhich I can't speech," said the sweeper. "It spells mit plenty of letters like dis: Sa-kan-kan-kwan-tun. Can you speech it?"

"No," said Barney, "but if I had me banjo here I cud plunk it."

At this point one of the bridge foremen appeared and the cleaners retreated with a quick flank movement.

CINDERELLA OF THE CAR.

Much Conjecturing Follows the Discovery of Two Slippers.

"The Mystery of Car 2,318" is the title which has been affixed to a perplexing case by the officials of the Metropolitan Street Railway. The only evidence in the case is a pair of woman's three-button slippers of fashionable make. They were discovered underneath one of the seats of the car by Conductor No. 314.

He made the discovery when his car reached Forty-second Street and Broadway at 11:45 o'clock yesterday morning, but whether or not it was because he thought the case was one for the Coroner or because he did not have any place for the slippers, he left them where they had been placed. As the car was an open one, every passenger who boarded it from Forty-second Street down and got into seats within three rows of where the slippers were discovered became acquainted with the mystery.

"How did they come there?" the conductor was asked.

"The only way that I can explain it," he said, "is that the woman suddenly became a convert to the Kneipp cure and walked off in her stocking feet."

One of the curious said that the slippers evidently hurt the wearer's feet, and she had therefore preferred to walk in her stockings, relying upon the length of her dress to prevent the fact that she was without leather footgear from being observed. But another passenger, of a Sherlock Holmes turn of mind, immediately disposed of that theory by pointing out that the slippers had been worn for some little time. They must have been comfortable, he contended, otherwise they would have been discarded before. So the mystery deepened until everybody gave up trying to solve it.

If Cinderella will call at the office of the road she can have her slippers by proving her right to them by trying them on.

A TURTLE IN A BOX.

Just Like a Pig in a Poke, Some Jersey Jokers Find.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, Sept. 3.—This is a story of William L. Crawley and his turtle. Crawley is a member of the Hook and Ladder Company of Harrison, a town just across the river from Newark, and the turtle is a snapper which one of Crawley's friends sent to him by express. Crawley left the box in the yard of his house, and, giving several of his intimates a peep at it, bade them to a soup feast which he intended to spread next Wednesday evening.

Others of his friends thought it would be a mighty good joke on Crawley to steal the turtle from him for a feast of their own, to which, by way of making the joke more pungent, they purposed inviting Mr. Crawley himself.

Town Hall Janitor McWalters and a friend visited Crawley Thursday evening, and when they had gone the turtle box was missing. McWalters fixed next Wednesday night for his little soup party.

Some members of Crawley's hook and ladder company heard of McWalters's feast, and at the dead of night took the box from the City Hall basement. They thought it would be a far better joke all around if they stole that turtle for a little jollification of their own. Yesterday the chief of the fire-ladsy banqueters opened the box for the turtle. Under a heavy covering of seaweed he found a stone—and only a stone—of about the turtle's weight.

Mr. Crawley snickered. His invitations for Wednesday night have not been withdrawn.

PRESIDENT'S UNEVENTFUL DAY.

Weather Forces Him to Forego Excursion—Transacts Department Business.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Sept. 3.—President Roosevelt had intended to go on a boating trip with Mrs. Roosevelt and his sons to-day, but the threatening weather deterred him. He remained at Sagamore Hill the greater part of the day.

He and Secretary Loeb transacted considerable business, the official mail being heavy. The matters brought to his attention related principally to department business.

The President was invited to attend a yacht race sailed from the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club on Center Island to-day, but he could not see his way clear to accept the invitation, although he is a member of the club. The contesting yachts were sailed by women members of the club for a silver cup.

BISHOP POTTER CRITICISED.

Methodist Conference in Kentucky Disapproves the Subway Saloon.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 3.—The resolutions presented by the Committee on Temperance to-day at the Methodist Episcopal Conference here caused a warm, and almost heated, discussion. One resolution scored the ministers who have so recently sanctioned saloons.

In the discussion the names of Dean Baker P. Lee and Bishop Potter were used, but the Rev. John R. Deering, one of the committee, said he would not sign a resolution containing the name of Bishop Potter. Another committeeman was named, and the following resolution was adopted:

Since, as head of a great Church, Bishop Potter has publicly given his blessing to the notorious "Subway" saloon in New York, we, as a Conference, record our unalterable disapproval of such conduct and express ourselves as believing it will be fruitful of the loss of the souls of many men and women.

ONLY GO TO JERSBY IF YOU'D MARRY AGAIN

Wife's Answer to Divorced Husband Seeking New Wife.

DECREE STOOD IN THE WAY

Bleezard Wants to Marry Girl of Nineteen—His Daughter Is Eighteen—Referee Favors Him.

"Why, certainly you may marry again if you will only go over to New Jersey to be married," is in effect what Mary J. Bayreuther, who got a divorce from Oscar J. Bleezard of 498 Chauncey Street, Brooklyn, ten years ago, told her former husband when he wished to marry a Brooklyn girl only one year older than his eighteen-year-old daughter. This is contained in the report made yesterday by Referee Maurice Goodman to the Supreme Court as to the testimony taken on Bleezard's application to have the divorce decree modified.

The decree forbade Bleezard from marrying again in this State while his wife was alive. His wife became Mrs. Bayreuther three years ago.

She appeared before the Referee and said that she was willing that her former husband should marry the nineteen-year-old Brooklyn girl provided the marriage ceremony should be performed in New Jersey. She said she had not married again until she was satisfied that she and her former husband could never again be reunited. She added, however, that since she had obtained a divorce from Bleezard, she had heard that there was nothing in his conduct to show that he was not deserving of the privilege of marrying again. In fact, she said, she saw no reason why Bleezard should not have the privilege of marrying again, but she thought in justice to her daughter that the marriage should not take place in New York but in New Jersey.

Bleezard's mother, Mrs. Rebecca Bleezard, testified that her son had made his home at her house since his wife obtained the divorce, but he has been very good ever since.

George F. Alexander, a lawyer of 132 Nassau Street, who has employed Bleezard for many years, testified that Bleezard's conduct for the last five years had been of an exemplary character. He would now make a good husband, the lawyer thought.

Referee Goodman asked Mrs. Bayreuther whether she intended to present any further testimony against her former husband's application for permission to remarry, and she said she did not.

The Referee decided that the decree of divorce be modified so that Bleezard might remarry.

SOLDIERS' NEW CLUBHOUSE.

Structure on Governors Island Will Be Opened Sept. 30.

The new clubhouse on Governors Island will be formally opened Sept. 30, with a farewell reception given to Major Gen. Corbin by the army officers in the Atlantic division, which he is soon to leave for the Philippines. Gen. Frederick D. Grant, who will succeed Gen. Corbin at Governors Island, will attend the reception.

The new clubhouse is larger and finer in every way than can be found elsewhere at a military post in the United States. It is on the site of the old South battery, which will not be disturbed by the plans for the new Governors Island. The parapet of the fort, overlooking Buttermilk Channel, will be used as a promenade terrace.

In the new club there is a theatre, in which the officers and their families will give amateur theatricals, and a commodious dance hall. Bedrooms have been provided for officers from out of town who may wish to spend the night on the island. The dining room of the club is so situated that non-members can make use of it without infringing upon the privacy of members.

In the basement of the clubhouse is a bowling alley for enlisted men. The entrance to it is quite distinct to the entrance for officers. When the War Department gave Gen. Corbin money to build the clubhouse, a New York architect made him a present of the plans for it.

TUXEDO HAPPENINGS.

Special to The New York Times.

TUXEDO PARK, N. Y., Sept. 3.—As the Autumn season opens at Tuxedo a large number of the cottage residents who were either abroad or at the seashore are returning, and every indication points to a most successful Autumn. The cool weather of the midsummer had a tendency to keep many in their cottages who would otherwise have gone away had the weather been hot.

A large crowd came out to-day to take part in the week-end gayeties at the cottages and at the clubhouse, and to remain over Labor Day. Several house parties during the week's end are in vogue, and many preparations are on foot for the Fall entertainments, which will probably surpass other seasons. Parties are being given to-day by several of the cottagers, among whom are Mr. and Mrs. William G. Davies, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer, who have just returned from Southampton; Mr. and Mrs. George F. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Woodbury, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas G. Condon, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Redmond, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Seton, Jr., and Mr. A. T. French. The tennis courts and the golf links were well patronized to-day, and several very interesting matches were in progress.

Among those who returned to their cottages this week are Mr. and Mrs. George Griswold, who were at Narragansett; Mr. and Mrs. Edson Bradley, from abroad; Mr. and Mrs. Dane Appleton Pearson, from Southampton; Mr. and Mrs. W. M. V. Hoffman, who passed the Summer in Europe; Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Lee, Mrs. Charles Coster, and Mr. W. M. N. Rodewald.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel R. Bertron, who have leased the Deerham cottage, arrived this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowen Bancroft Smith have leased the Wetmore cottage.

Mrs. Charles W. Cooper has gone to Canada for several weeks, but will return to Tuxedo for the Autumn.

Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Y. Olcott are at Bar Harbor, and Mr. and Mrs. Price Collier are at New Bedford for several days.

Miss Adelaide Spofford, who passed the Summer abroad, has arrived and is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Woodbury.

Among those expected to return next week are Mr. and Mrs. William B. Dinsmore, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. H. N. Voss, Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Poor, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. Howland Pell, Mr. and Mrs. B. P. Steinman, and Mr. and Mrs. John Greenough.

Ramsay, Scotland, John Lawson of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Westcott, Jr., Charles E. Sampson, and others.

NINETY AERONAUTS TO BATTLE IN AIR

Flying Machine Men After Rich Prizes at St. Louis.

$100,000 THE BIG AWARD

Prof. Langley May Enter Competition—Maxim, the Lebaudys, Greth, and Stevens Among Contestants.

Heralding a series of races in the skies, which promise to eclipse all previous efforts to solve the problem of aerial navigation, was the premiere balloon contest last week between Aeronauts George Tomlinson and Carl Meyers for the $5,000 prize offered by the St. Louis Exposition management to the balloonist who first reached the Washington Monument in Washington, D. C.

Following the Tomlinson-Meyers race and beginning this month the stellar aeronauts of both hemispheres will battle in the air for the $100,000 in prize plums awaiting those who can fly far and high enough to pluck them.

Already ninety airships, not including the Santos-Dumont entry, which unfortunately was mutilated beyond recognition and, according to the Brazilian aeronaut, beyond hope of competing, have qualified for the races and are now receiving their final touches preparatory to the starting gun. As the owner of each entry has deposited $250 with the Chief of the Department of Aeronautics as a guarantee of good faith, every obstacle seems to have been removed in assuring the success of the approaching contest.

Many of the foremost aeronauts are now either on the ground with their entries or are hurrying there—and they are a formidable flotilla.

Starting from a given point near the Administration Building, the contestants must mount into the air and successfully navigate over a course mapped out by the race officials. Will they sink or will they swim? Certainly the prize is tempting enough to encourage the small army of aeronauts to take their lives in their hands and court the dangers of aerial collapses, and even tragedy. For imagine the result should one or more of the huge affairs go wrong and plunge down into the up-gazing concourse assembled to witness the thrilling panorama. Only a few days ago the ninetieth entry was received and registered. Although the fair officials are not at liberty to make public the full quota of contestants, it was unofficially announced that this tail-ender was the Lebaudy ship. The entry was accompanied by the regulation draft for $250 and the assurance that the mysterious applicant would arrive in time to compete this month.

The following information regarding the novel competition is from an official source, and there will be no deviation from the rules and regulations as herewith condensed. According to the best information obtained to date, the first race of the series will be sailed on or about Sept. 24.

Under rules of the contest every vessel will be permitted to pass over the course in continuous flight as many times as desired, and the time as recorded by the judges in each flight will be averaged. The judges will be stationed in captive balloons, 150 feet in the air, at points along the course. No trial will be considered unless the full course is traversed and each ship and crew must make three revolutions of the course at an average speed of twenty miles an hour in order to share any portion of the prize money.

No applicant will be considered who has not presented satisfactory evidence of having at some time flown over at least a mile course and return with a machine similar in principle to the one entered for these races.

Each vehicle shall carry at least one person during its flight.

One hundred thousand dollars goes to the competitor making the best average in three rounds of the course, provided they are made during the regular racing hours. Starts must be made between 10 A. M. and sundown.

Shaped like an L, the course shall have one side in full view from all parts of the Exposition grounds and it shall not be more than ten nor less than fifteen miles long. If, on Nov. 1, two or more competitors have made equal records a further trial will be adjudged by the aeronautical jury.

Additional prizes amounting to $50,000, and ranging from $250 to $5,000, shall be awarded competitors who attain the greatest height; remain the longest time in the air; cover a mile in the best time, and, finally, for landing nearest the Washington Monument, in Washington, D. C., the start being made from the Exposition grounds in St. Louis.

All the foremost aeronauts, besides scores of dark horses—or ships—will sail or fail in the month's competition. Owing to the postponement occasioned by the demolition of Santos-Dumont No. 7, it is possible that Prof. Langley will have a new vessel completed in time to enter the races. Since the airship came to grief during the December trials near Washington, the American aeronaut has been busy grooming his racer for which he ventures glowing predictions. Among the other contestants who will either take part in person or by proxy are Sir Hiram Maxim, the Lebaudys, August Greth, Leo Stevens, Octave Chanute, Stanley, Spencer, and E. Alexander Barton. They will be the stars.

Among the lesser lights are E. W. Appleman and A. W. Dorston, representing Indiana; Marcellus McGary of Missouri, (in case his invalid invention is nursed into shape in time); M. Morris and A. E. Kindler of Colorado, Samuel T. Beall of Kentucky, Adolph Reiferscheid of Illinois, and William Roescher of New York.

While only the best known of these candidates have much chance to pluck the $100,000 plum, the others are trimming their sails to share in the minor prises to be divided among those whose vessels prove steady even though slow. Additional interest is given the race by the promise that the Archduke Leopold will enter a mammoth dirigible balloon christened the Meteor.

Dr. August Greth, who shares honors with Prof. Langley as the foremost American aeronaut, is a practicing physician on the Pacific Slope, whence he emigrated from Alsatia. He is forty years of age, and for some time has devoted his spare moments, when not busy in his profession, to solving the problem of aerial navigation. He made his first public ascension last October in San Francisco in the presence of 5,000 persons who came to laugh and remained to applaud his remarkable achievement.

Another dangerous rival of the Santos airship is an all-aluminium vessel invented by Charles Stanley, also of San Francisco. The Greth as well as Santos airships are mere pygmies as compared with the Stanley monster. It is bigger than a Hoboken ferryboat, and has accommodations for passengers, freight, mail, and other necessities of travel.

This airship is unique in that it has no balloon attachment, being cylindrical, with a conic prow and stern.

Considerable mystery surrounds a strange aeronautic automobile which is being put together at the fair and which is believed to be either a Girardot or Spencer airship.

All in all, the competition promises more in the spectacular line than anything yet produced by the Exposition. Whether the monster balloons are to vindicate a Bellamy or tickle a Twain will be shown before another month in the calendar is turned.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S OPENING.

Harlem Music Hall Begins Season with Strong Vaudeville Bill.

Hurtig & Seamon's Harlem Music Hall, on West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, opened its season last evening with a strong bill. During the Summer the house has been thoroughly overhauled and many improvements made. The new decorations in green and gold are especially attractive.

In last night's bill were James Thornton, the monologuist; John Mason, assisted by Miss Eva Grau, in a clever little sketch entitled "Another Story"; Howard Brothers, banjoist; Chris Bruno and Mabel Russell, late comedy stars of the "Shogun" company, who made a decided hit; the Wilsons, in a black-face act, and Pat Rooney's street urchins. The best musical number on the bill was by Doris Goodwin, prima donna soprano, from La Scala, Milan, Italy.

Manager Benjamin Hurtig stated that it was his intention to show during the coming Winter the highest class of vaudeville, including many European novelties.

CHARLES F. CLARK DEAD.

President of the Bradstreet Company Expires in London.

Charles Finney Clark, President of the Bradstreet Company, died in London yesterday morning of heart failure, presumably caused by an attack of indigestion. Mr. Clark was born in Preble, Cortland County, N. Y., on Aug. 30, 1836; was educated at Homer (New York) Academy, and studied law in the office of Crane & Wesson of Detroit.

For a time he published a Detroit city directory, and was associated with Carl Schurz in the publication of The Detroit Post. Mr. Clark, however, found his lifework in the development of Bradstreet's, the mercantile agency, which was established by J. M. Bradstreet. From his first association with it as a correspondent, he became successively Superintendent of the Detroit, Philadelphia, and Boston offices, and general manager, with headquarters at New York. The business was incorporated in 1876 as the Bradstreet Company, Mr. Clark becoming Secretary, and later being elected to the Presidency, which office he held until the time of his decease.

He had also served as Vice President of the Washington Trust Company and as Director of the American Cotton Oil and Niagara Falls Power and Cataract Construction Companies. He was a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the St. Andrew's, American Geographical, New York Genealogical, and New England Societies, and of the Union League, Metropolitan, Lotos, Grolier, Hardware, Church, and Merchants' Clubs, and for many years was Treasurer of St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church. Mr. Clark's home in this city was at 881 Madison Avenue, and his country residence was Fairacres, Normandy Park, Morristown, N. J.

He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Ellen M. Fogg of Providence, R. I., as well as by one son, Charles Martin Clark, and two daughters, Mrs. Henry P. Ross and Miss Ella Mabel Clark. The body, which will be brought back on the Oceanic, due Sept. 14, will be accompanied by Mrs. Clark, her daughter, and by his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. G. K. Clark.

CAPT. J. R. BEERS DEAD.

Had Gold Medal for Bravery in Fire at Sea.

Capt. James R. Beers, who once received a gold medal from the Emperor of Brazil for saving passengers and crew from the burning steamship Allianca, died at the Dudley Memorial Hospital, in Brooklyn, on Friday of a complication of ailments. The Allianca was loaded with rum and cotton when she took fire at sea. First placing the passengers in lifeboats, he sent them adrift, and then set to work with his crew to extinguish the fire on the ship. This he succeeded in doing.

Capt. Beers was born at Brookhaven, L. I., on March 19, 1829. His father was George Beers of Fairfield County, Conn., and his mother Hannah Satterlee of New York City. In the civil war he served as a Lieutenant in one of the blockading squadrons. Capt. Beers was a member of the Loyal Legion. For ten years he had made his home in Panama, where he was Port Captain for the Panama Railroad Company. A son and three daughters survive him.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Clark Caryl Haskins.

CHICAGO, Sept. 3.—Clark Caryl Haskins is dead from insanition, at his residence here. He was born in Buffalo in 1827, and was the son of R. W. Haskins, a well-known scientist and writer.

Mr. Haskins was well known in the electrical world as an inventor and writer. In 1844 Mr. Haskins is said to have sent the first telegraphic message that ever passed between two countries, wiring it from Buffalo to Queenstown, Canada. His most notable achievement was evolving the multiple switchboard, now used for telephones all over the world, which makes it possible to operate any number of lines from the same exchange.

Obituary Notes.

ALEXANDER POLLOCK, a retired mechanical engineer, died at his home in Glen Ridge, N. J., yesterday. He was sixty-six years old. Mr. Pollock lived in New York until a year ago. He was well known in marine engineering circles. He was at the head of the staff of engineers which Capt. Ericsson had with him in the construction of the Monitor, and who served with Ericsson until the close of the war. UNKNOWN MAN AFTER FUNDS.

Gives Name of Davis, but Is Repudiated by His References.

A man giving the name of Davis has been visiting business men during the last few days soliciting funds to be used, as he alleges, for the establishment of a Press Club, to be located on one of the floors of the new Times Building. The several newspapers with which he has asserted he is connected have repudiated him. So far as can be learned there is no movement on foot for the organization of a new press club. Certain it is that no steps have been taken for acquiring quarters for such an organization in the new Times Building.

Won Fordham College Scholarships.

The winners of the competitive examinations for the scholarships offered by St. John's College, Fordham, are Francis A. Hemmer, St. Joseph's School, East Eighty-seventh Street; Richard V. Hastings, Immaculate Conception School, East Fourteenth Street; John R. Dillon, Public School No. 10, Bronx; William E. H. McDonnell, Mount Vernon Public School No. 2; Francis J. NEW YORK ATHLETES' VICTORY PROTESTED

Objections by Chicago A. A. Prevent Award of Championship.

OLYMPIC GAMES END IN DISPUTE

N. Y. A. C. Scores Highest Team Total, but Trophy Is Withheld Pending Decision of Protest.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 3.—After a meet probably unequaled in the sporting annals of this or any other country, the Louisiana Purchase Exposition revival of the Olympic games was concluded this afternoon. The weather was ideal, and some time before the contestants in the first race faced the starter's pistol the immense Stadium was packed to its capacity and many hundreds were standing in the field.

Owing to protests made by the Chicago Athletic Association the award of the magnificent loving-cup emblematic of the Olympic championship was not made to the New York Athletic Club, whose representatives scored the most points in the Olympic championship events during the meet.

The final scores, according to the official figures, of the frist four clubs, are as follows: New York Athletic Club, 63; Chicago Athletic Association, 59; Milwaukee Athletic Club, 46; Greater New York Irish Athletic Association, 31.

The Chicago Association, however, has protested the entry of John R. De Witt of the New York Athletic Club, who won second place in the sixteen-pound hammer event, and the New York Athletic Club tug-of-war team, which finished fourth in the international tug-of-war. The result of these protests will be, unless the charges are withdrawn, that the awarding of the championship cup will be delayed until after the meeting of the Governing Board of the Amateur Athletic Union in New York next November. Should the protests be allowed by that body, it will result in a tie, as De Witt won 3 points and the tug-of-war team scored 1 point for the New York club.

The keenest competition of the entire week's programme developed in the discus throw to-day. M. J. Sheridan of the Greater New York Irish Athletic Association and Ralph W. Rose of the Chicago Athletic Association tied for first place, with throws of 128 feet 10½ inches, breaking the Olympic record by more than 10 feet. As splitting points is not allowed in an Olympic championship, the men were forced to throw off the tie. The best that Rose could do was 120 feet 6¾ inches, while Sheridan threw the disk 117 feet 10½ inches. Summary:

110-Meter Hurdle Race.—Won by Fred Schule, Milwaukee A. C., Milwaukee, Wis.; T. Shideler, Chicago A. A., Chicago, Ill., second; L. Ashburner, Ithaca, N. Y., third; F. Castleman, Greater New York Irish A. A., fourth. Time—0:16.

Pole Vault.—Won by Charles B. Dvorak, Chicago A. A., Chicago, Ill., with 11 feet 6 inches; Leroy Samse, Indiana University, Bloomington, Ind., second, with 11 feet 3 inches; L. Wilkins, Chicago A. A., Chicago, Ill., third, with 11 feet 3 inches; Ward McLanahan, New York A. C., New York, fourth, with 11 feet. Tie was jumped off.

Three Standing Jumps.—Won by Ray Ewry, New York A. C., New York City, with 34 feet 7¼ inches; C. M. King, McKinney, Texas, second, with 33 feet 4 inches; James P. Stadler, Franklin A. C., Cleveland, Ohio, third, with 31 feet 8 inches; G. B. Serviss, Jr., Cornell University, fourth, with 31 feet 3¼ inches.

LEAPED FROM LONG BRIDGE.

Thrilling Feat of a Crazy Negro in Washington Cost Him $20.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—The Long Bridge has been the scene of many adventures in war and peace, but it never witnessed such a time as a colored man with the strenuous name of Tillman had there early this morning.

In some manner the African was possessed of the hallucination that he was a choice morsel for the "night doctors," and he climbed to the top of the superstructure. When the officers called to him to come down he refused, and ran like a deer along the timbers, sixty feet above the Potomac, screaming "Murder!" "Help!" and "Police!"

The man ran nearly half a mile on top of the bridge until he reached the open draw, where he was cornered. A policeman climbed to the timbers at the top of the draw to seize the fugitive, who, however, sprang from the bridge, landing headfirst in the water. A boat was put out and took him in.

Later he was fined $20 or sixty days.

DRAGGED BOY FROM TRACK.

Train Dashed by as Crowd Cheered Policeman's Act.

Special to The New York Times.

PORT CHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 3.—Policeman Curtin saved Fred Ryder, a New Rochelle boy, from being killed by an express train at the station here to-day. A large crowd of commuters applauded the policeman's act. The boy was stealing a ride on a freight train, and, jumping off just east of the station, landed directly in front of the express train.

The policeman, who was on the street below, saw the lad's peril, and, running up a steep embankment, seized him by the collar and dragged him off the track just as the train shot by.

THROWN FROM POLO PONY.

Groom Probably Fatally Hurt When Animal Slipped.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Sept. 3.—While riding a polo pony owned by Benjamin Nicoll, one of the best-known polo players in New Jersey, John Norris, a groom of Mr. Nicoll's, was thrown from the pony on Water Street this afternoon and sustained injuries to his head which, it is said at Memorial Hospital to-night, will result fatally.

Norris had taken the pony, after a practice game of polo at the Whippany Country Club in which Mr. Nicoll had participated, and was exercising it along the road. In some way the long blanket which had been thrown over the animal caught in its front feet. The pony made a lunge, throwing Norris head first into the street.

SCHOONER ATLANTIC WON RACE FOR PURSE

A. C. Bostwick's Vergemere Beaten in Match on the Sound.

LARCHMONT Y. C. HELD EVENT

Two-Master Secured an Early Lead in a Light Wind—Sailed Over 25½-Mile Course.

Wilson Marshall's schooner yacht Atlantic, which recently won the ocean race for the Brenton's Reef Cup, yesterday defeated Vice Commodore A. C. Bostwick's schooner Vergemere in a match race under the auspices of the Larchmont Yacht Club. Both yachts are auxiliaries, but used sails only in the race.

The Atlantic has three masts and the Vergemere two. The race was over a 25½-mile course, for $1,000 a side. The wind was light, from the south at the start, and the yachts started on a reach to Shippen Point off Stamford, Conn. The Vergemere got the better of the start and secured a long lead. Both boats carried balloon jibtopsails, but the Vergemere carried a balloon main topmast staysail, while the Atlantic carried only working topmast staysails.

At the Shippan Point mark the Vergemere had a lead of over four minutes, but when they hauled up on the wind the Atlantic at once began to both outpoint and outfoot her. On the second tack the latter passed her to windward east of Lloyd's Neck. Subsequently the Atlantic steadily increased her lead, and she won by 3 minutes 1 second above the five-minute time allowance agreed on. The Atlantic's time was 3:04:57, while the elapsed time of the Vergemere was 3:13:10, and her corrected time 3:07:58.

The Larchmont Club also held races for the twenty-one-foot class, and the Manhasset Bay one-design class. In the former the Vaquero beat the Adelaide, and in the latter the Chickioker won from the Arizona.

YANKEE AGAIN THE WINNER.

J. R. Maxwell's Seventy-Footer First in Indian Harbor Y. C. Regatta.

J. Rogers Maxwell's seventy-footer Yankee added another victory yesterday to her unbroken string for this season. In a stiff breeze she defeated her two class competitors even more handsomely than on Tuesday.

The race yesterday was the feature of the Fall regatta of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club, sailed on Long Island Sound off Greenwich, Conn. Although the start was delayed for more than two hours from lack of wind, the event was a great success.

The Yankee, as usual, made a good start, and the Rainbow, as on Tuesday, was the last of the trio to cross the line. The Virginia was some distance astern of the Yankee, but she worked out to the southward and caught first the freshening breeze. That carried her to the front, and she led the Yankee around the first mark. But when the yachts came on the wind on the second leg the Yankee speedily recovered her lost ground and took the lead. At the Centre Island mark, the end of the windward work, she was more than two minutes ahead. The Rainbow meanwhile had dropped far astern of the Virginia. The last leg was a free reach home with booms on the starboard hand and balloon jibtopsails set. The Yankee beat the Virginia 3 minutes and 50 seconds and the Rainbow 7 minutes and 55 seconds. YACHT DESIGNERS QUIT.

Watson and Fife Decline to Plan Any More Cup Challengers.

GLASGOW, Scotland, Sept. 3.—George L. Watson, the yacht designer, giving as a reason ill-health, has positively decided not to design a new challenger for the America's Cup. His refusal is much regretted in yachting circles.

William Fife, Jr., also says that he will never desgn another challenger. One of Mr. Watson's pupils is desirous of undertaking such a task, but it is said that Sir Thomas Lipton is not willing to make an experiment with a young designer.

Mr. Watson has designed four challengers for the America's Cup. His first effort was the Thistle, which was beaten by the Volunteer. His second was Valkyrie II., which was beaten by the Vigilant, and his third was Valkyrie III., which was beaten by the Defender. He also designed Valkyrie I. in 1891, but she did not, in her trial performances, come up to expectations, and consequently was not sent over. The fourth and last challenger designed by Mr. Watson was Shamrock II., beaten by the Columbia.

Dh. COOK WINS WIMBLEDON CUP

New Yorker First in Principal Individual Match at Sea Girt.

Special to The New York Times.

SEA GIRT, N. J., Sept. 3.—To a member of the Manhattan Rifle and Revolver Association of New York went to-day the greatest individual honor of the tournament of the National and New Jersey Rifle Associations and the chief honors to which American riflemen aspire to win—the Wimbledon match for the five-thousand-dollar cup presented by the National Rifle Association of Great Britain to the National Rifle Association of America. This year's victor is Dr. George E. Cook, formerly a private in the District of Columbia National Guard and winner last year of the President's match for the military championship of the United States. His score to-day was 88. Capt. W. H. Richards of Ohio scored 91 last year, but under excellent conditions. The conditions to-day could hardly have been worse, as there was a very tricky strong wind and light that varied greatly.

The match was sharply contested, the first eight men varying only eight points. Lieut. W. A. Terves of the First New Jersey was second with 85, while Capt. W. B. Martin of the Second New Jersey made 83, as did Capt. C. B. Winden of Ohio and Harry M. Pope of Chicopee Falls, Mass. Lieut. K. K. V. Casey of the Seventy-first New York, who won in 1902; J. E. Murray of Cleveland, and Lieut. C. S. Benedict, also of the Ohio team, each made 81.

The all-comers' revolver match was won by Lieut. R. H. Sayre of Squadron A, New York, with a score of 130. Col. Thomas Anderson of Boston was second, with a score of 127.

Squadron A and the First Troop of New Jersey were defeated in the carbine team match by the Second Troop of Philadelphia City Cavalry, which scored 288, four points better than Squadron A, and eight more than the Newarkers could do.

STEEPLECHASE RIDERS HURT.

E. O. Hayes of Meadow Brook Hunt Thrown at Baltimore Race.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 3.—The first day's meeting of the Patapsco Hunt Club produced two serious accidents, in which Ernest O. Hayes of Westbury, L. I., a well-known gentleman rider, and a professional received injuries, which are likely to prove fatal in both cases. The accidents occurred in the fourth race, the open hunters' steeplechase. Mr. Hayes had the mount on his own horse, Westown, which was the favorite, and had been making a runaway race far in the lead of the field. When he came to make the third to the last jump the horse cleared the obstacle successfully, but blundered in landing, and threw his rider, who came down hard on his head. He was rendered unconscious, and is believed to have sustained internal injuries.

In the same race Elmer Berlin, a stable boy for H. A. Parr, had the mount on Norton. The horse balked at the first jump, and threw the lad with terrific force headforemost against a post. Berlin was found to have sustained concussion of the skull. The two men were placed in the ambulance cies and hurried to the Maryland University Hospital.

Mr. Hayes was accompanied to the hospital by his father. At the hospital to-night it was stated that he probably had concussion of the brain. He was semi-conscious, but the physicians say that his condition is extremely serious. Berlin is also reported to be in a very critical condition. Mr. Hayes is a brother of W. C. Hayes of Westbury, who is considered one of the most accomplished gentleman jockeys on the turf, being also a member of the Meadow Brook Hunt. He has been visiting here for about a month, and his father has been the guest of Mr. Merriman at Lutherville.

Yachts and Yachtsmen.

The race for the Cape May Challenge Cup will be started from Buoy 5, off the Point of Sandy Hook, at 1 P. M. on Saturday, Sept. 10. Entries will be received by the Regatta Committee of the New York Yacht Club up to 5 P. M. Sept. 9. So far only three entries have been made, the same yachts that started in the race for the Brenton's Reef from Newport on Aug. 22, namely, the schooners Atlantic, Wilson Marshall, Resolute, John W. Masury, and Endymion, George Lauder, Jr. The cup cannot become private property until it has been won and successfully defended by the same yacht in two consecutive contests. However, as an extra inducement, Capt. Charles F. L. Robinson has offered a cup for the winner in the forthcoming race. There has also been a suggestion of a money prize, but the matter has not yet been decided. This is the first race for the Cape May Cup on this side of the Atlantic since it was won by the General Englehard in 1885.

The sloop yacht Valhalla II., J. F. Wills, Boston Yacht Club, has been sold through MacConnell & Cook to S. W. Ferguson of this city. She will be used as an auxiliary cruising yawl and used for cruising South during the Winter. The same agency has sold the knockabout Raduga, Charles A. Hatch, Stamford Yacht Club, to H. E. Miller of Greenwich, Conn.; the launch Wanoka, William A. Brown, of this city, to W. B. Ellis of Freehold, N. J., and chartered the sloop Phebe, H. C. Quinby of this city, to Lieut. J. W. Hawkins, United States Army, who is making a cruise eastward through Long Island Sound.

The New York Yacht Club will hold a race off Glen Cove on Thursday next, Sept. 8, for the Autumn cups. It is open to all classes of yachts enrolled in the club, and there will be a prize for each class in which two yachts start and a second prize if four or more start. Special classes in cruising trim will be arranged for on application to the committee.

The annual Fall regatta of the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club will be sailed on Saturday, Sept. 10, over the club courses on Long Island Sound, off Oyster Bay. It is open to all classes of schooners, yawls, and sloops. Entries must be made in writing with Howard C. Smith, Secretary of the Race Committee, 45 Wall Street, New York City, before noon of Sept. 9. A prize will be given for each class having more than one starter, a second prize if more than three starters, and a third prize if more than five starters. If a winning yacht is manned by a Corinthian crew the owner will be given a prize handsomer than ordinary and each member of the crew a Corinthian prize.

AUTOMOBILE RECORD ACROSS THE CONTINENT

BEST PREVIOUS TIME 61 DAYS

Favorable Weather Contributed to Success of Trip, the First Made with Air-Cooled Motor.

L. L. Whitman of San Francisco, Cal., and C. S. Carris of Syracuse, N. Y., who left San Francisco on Aug. 1, arrived at the clubhouse of the Automobile Club of America, Fifty-eighth Street and Fifth Avenue, yesterday at 1:20 P. M., having completed the transcontinental trip of 4,500 miles in the remarkable time of thirty-three days, less 40 minutes.

This lowers the previous record of 61 days, made by Thomas Fetch and M. C. Krarup last Summer by almost one-half. Unusually favorable weather during almost the entire trip was the principal cause of the remarkable reduction in the record.

Another consequence of the good weather and consequent easy going was that there were no serious accidents and few mishaps of any kind. There was also very little night riding done. The longest day's run was 325 miles, between Toledo and Rochester.

An interesting feature of the accomplishment is that Whitman's automobile, a ten horse power runabout, is driven by an air-cooled motor, and is the first vehicle of that type to make the transcontinental trip. The car in which Fetch and Kramp made the trip last year was of the ordinary water-cooled type.

Whitman had made a previous trip last Summer, in which he was seventy-three days on the way, but gained experience which was of great value this year. He and Carus left San Francisco on Aug. 1 at 5 P. M., local time, or 2 P. M. New York time, and crossed the ferry to Oakland.

Their route thence was by way of Ogden, Utah, which was reached in ten days; Denver, Col., reached in five days more, Omaha, Neb., reached in four days from Denver, and Chicago reached in three days from Omaha. Stops of one day each were made in Ogden and Denver and half a day was spent in Omaha.

Chicago was reached on Aug. 26, and thence to this city the route was by way of Toledo, Cleveland, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Albany, and the east bank of the Hudson River. The Central Bridge was reached at 12:35 P. M. yesterday and the Automobile Club at 1:20 P. M., where a letter from President Scherwin of the San Francisco Automobile Club was delivered to President Scarritt of the Automobile Club of America.

NUTTALL FIRST IN SWIM.

Newport Cottagers Offer Prizes and Clubmen Act as Judges.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 3.—Joey Nuttall, the noted English swimmer, won first prize in a competition with a number of other prominent swimmers this morning over a course in the inner harbor, starting from William B. Leeds's yacht Noma, anchored off Long Wharf, to and around the float off the bathing station. The contestants had to swim twice over the course, making a distance of three miles. Nuttall's time was 1:22:54 3-5. Percy Cavill of Australia, the former champion, was second, in 1:24:15; John McCusker of Boston, third, in 1:25:16 4-5; George Kestler, swimming instructor of the University of Pennsylvania, fourth, in 1:35:30 2-5; Alfred Brown of College Point, N. Y., fifth, in 1:50:53 3-5, and Arthur Beisel of New York was the last to finish, in 1:52:42.

The prizes were offered by the cottagers, and the judges were James De Wolfe Cutting, Charles L. Osborne, William H. Hunter, and Joseph Boyer. First prize was $450, second $150, and third $75.

TENNIS TOURNAMENTS LIVELY.

Kings County Club Leads in M. T. L. Championship—Good Play at Elizabeth.

Championship honors in the Metropolitan Lawn Tennis League have not been cinched by any means by the Kings County Tennis Club of Brooklyn. This developed yesterday at an active session of the committee of the New York Lawn Tennis Club at the grounds, One Hundred and Twenty-third Street and St. Nicholas Avenue. It is more than likely that the forfeited games with the Crescent Athletic Club will be played by the New York Lawn Tennis Club, in which case the Crescents have a fine opportunity of scoring over the Kings County men. The decision is to be given this week, and the series finished at once unless stormy weather prevents. The matches scheduled for yesterday were not played, as the Crescent Athletic Club team again postponed its unfinished series with the West Side Tennis Club, and the Kings County team did not play the men of the Montclair Athletic Club. The standing of the clubs in the league is as follows:

	Won.	Lost.
Kings County Tennis Club	24	9
West Side Tennis Club	23	10
Crescent Athletic Club	22	11
New York Lawn Tennis Club	22	15
New York Athletic Club	18	15
Englewood Field Club	17	25
Montclair Athletic Club	1	32

Frederick C. Anderson, the ex-Canadian champion, and T. B. V. Lyon, the Yale expert, won their places in the final round of the championship singles yesterday in the annual tournament for the East Jersey Challenge Cup. The matches were well played and drew a large gallery to the courts of the Elizabeth Town and Country Club. The Yale man, Lyon, had as his opponent Sydney L. Smith, who was so strongly aggressive in the first set that he captured it at 6—4. Smith was not steady enough to hold to his first speed and took the two remaining sets and the match at 6—1, 7—5. Anderson defeated H. F. Allen at 6—4, 6—4, and will meet Lyon in the final to-morrow morning. In the third round of the consolation singles M. S. Charlock defeated N. S. Charlock, 6—0, 6—2. In the semi-finals of the same class Charlock defeated J. F. Cross, 6—2, 6—1; A. Tucker defeated E. S. Cameron 8—6, 6—2. Allen and Pell played a spirited match in the doubles with Anderson and Tallant, the scores being 6—4, 6—1. The finals will be played next week.

Tennis players of the veteran class began the second annual tournament yesterday for the Golden Challenge Cup, held under the auspices of the Sea Gate Field Club on the courts of the Atlantic Yacht Club. The cup was won last year by John Appleton Allen, the ex-champion of Yale. The preliminary round matches of yesterday brought out some good tennis, and with one exception the contests were won in straight sets. The tournament will be continued to-morrow and throughout the week. The summary yesterday:

Men's Championship Singles. — Preliminary Round—John A. Allen defeated A. Plass, by default; G. W. Bailey defeated G. P. Platt, 6—4, 6—4; C. McDonald defeated H. H. Ansell, 6—0, 5—7, 6—4; C. H. Engle defeated R. S. Weeks, 6—3, 6—4; Robert H. Allen defeated H. A. Engle, 6—3, 6—4; Percy Cavill defeated R. S. Weeks, 6—3, 6—1; E. Fisk defeated G. M. Amstead, 6—3, 6—1; H. Fisk defeated Paul Bernard, 6—4, 6—1.

Ross Burchard successfully defended his title and the trophy as champion of the Hudson River Lawn Tennis Association yesterday on the courts of the Englewood Field Club. He defeated Harry Torrance, 6—4, 6—3, 6—4, in a tempestuous tennis. It is the second consecutive year that Burchard has gained the title. The score yesterday was 6—3, 6—3, 4—6, 6—4.

Atlantic Yacht Club Boats Race.

The third of the September series of races held by the Atlantic Yacht Club brought together fifteen yachts yesterday afternoon and, as on Thursday, the event was marked by some close finishes. In the thirty-five-foot class W. H. Childs's Maydie won. In the thirty-foot class E. F. Luckenback's Bobtail defeated the Bagheera by 35 seconds. Four started in Class P for twenty-five-footers. The Lizana won, beating the Bonito by 4 minutes and 39 seconds. In the small class Miss Oudy, owned by D. D. Allerton, won.

Schooners Start in Ocean Race.

The schooners Corona and Endymion started on the long ocean race yesterday at 1 o'clock. The Corona, on the starboard tack, crossed the line at 1:03:00 and the Endymion at 1:07:00. They carried all jibtopsails and small main topmast staysails. It was a reach at the start to the Fire Island Lightship, and the Corona at once began to draw away from the Endymion. From the Fire Island Lightship the yachts go to Cape May Lightship and then return to Sea Gate. The race is for $1,500, offered by the flag officers of the club.

CHAMPION GOLFERS TO MEET.

National Championship Will Be Contested This Week at Baltusrol.

Nearly 150 golfers, representing the pick of the players in the United States, will meet Tuesday morning on the links of the Baltusrol Golf Club, near Short Hills, N. J., in the first round for the amateur golf championship of the United States. Walter J. Travis, who held the honor three years, and who recently won the amateur championship of Great Britain, will naturally be the most conspicuous of the competitors, but the strong field he will have to meet will force him to play his best game if he hopes to retain his American championship honors for another year. Charles B. McDohald of this city and Louis James of Chicago, both former champions, are among the leading contestants, and great things are expected of H. Chandler Egan, who won the Western amateur championship a few days ago, playing the most brilliant golf ever seen in that event. His cousin, Walter E. Egan, will prove another strong Westerner, and Frank O. Reinhart, the intercollegiate champion and a Princeton student, has been steadily improving this season, so that he, too, may loom up among the dangerous men.

Besides Travis, two other golfers who represented America in the English championship, Eben M. Byers and John Moller, Jr., will compete. Byers was runner-up last year at Nassau to Travis for the National championship, and he has been playing better golf this year than ever. Moller has also been playing a consistent game, and has been getting good practice for the big event by playing in the Stockbridge tournament during the past week. Malcolm McBurney, the new Berkshire County champion; Harold Wilcox, the metropolitan champion; Murray Olyphant, the New Jersey champion; A. G. Lockwood, one of the leading Boston golfers; Max Behr of Yale, and Dr. Fredericks of Pittsburg will be among the good men who are expected to find a place in the qualifying number.

The method of play this year marks a return to the medal play qualifying round, but in this a change has been made from the old plan. On Tuesday all of the golfers who have entered will make an 18-hole round of the Baltusrol course, and the sixty-four leading scores at medal play will qualify to meet on Wednesday in a 36-hole medal play round, from which the best thirty-two will be picked.

Playground Basket Ball Champions.

The basket ball game played yesterday between Public School No. 137, Gustave Hartman Principal, and No. 188, Eugene C. Gibney Principal, to decide the championship of the district vacation playgrounds for the year, resulted in a score of 7 to 6 in favor of No. 188. When the game had been on for fourteen minutes the score was 6 to 1 for No. 137, and it looked as if the representatives of that school would finish with a good margin.

The official referee of the game was John Wendelken, Principal of Public School No. 49, and the instructor of No. 188's team is "Jeff" Wetzler. The game was played on the grounds of Public School No. 137, at Grand and Essex Streets. Yesterday was the closing day of the exercises on the city's vacation playgrounds.

Women Cricket Teams in Match.

Young women cricketers in a game between teams of their own sex proved an attraction for a large crowd yesterday at Prospect Park, where the East New York Ladies' Cricket Club defeated the Prospect Park Ladies' team by the narrow margin of 4 runs. Miss Belva Tattersall made a great effort to save the game for her side, and played a capital innings of 15 for the Prospect Park team. This proved to be top score of the game, the next best being 9 by Mrs. Stiles. The honors in bowling were captured by Miss Almay, who took six wickets at a low cost. The totals were: East New York Ladies' C. C., 38; Prospect Park Ladies' C. C., 34.

Trotting and Pacing Notes.

Frank E. Stanton, owner of the speedy little bay gelding Ten Eyck, has purchased a new Texas-bred trotter, which is said to have stepped a mile close to 2:15 this Spring. The new trotter will be started in the 2:20 and green classes on the Fall championship matinées on the Harlem River Speedway.

Col. John F. Cockerill, owner of Swift, the famous trotter which dropped dead a fortnight ago, has added four new green mares to his Speedway stable.

The New York Driving Club has arranged a special matinee to be held at Empire City Track, Yonkers, N., to-morrow. The star event will be a tilt between Anna Little and Princess Pique. The race may decide the disposition of the championship cup. Among the pacers Don Riley, Free Advice, and Bud Stout will have an inning. There are eleven races in all, insuring some high-class sport.

There will be a series of cup races at the Readville Track, Readville, Mass., on Sept. 27, 28, and 29, in which about a dozen members of the New York Driving Club, and the Road Drivers' Association of New York will enter their trotters and pacers. There will be a cup for trotters and cups for pacers and cups for the 2:11 trot, 2:14 trot, and the 2:17 trot. Also a cup to the club winning the most points.

The question as to whether horses under suspension by the National Trotting Association had the right to start in matinees came up for discussion among a group of horsemen on the Speedway several days ago. No one has been able to settle the matter, and the question was referred to Secretary Alfred Reeves of the New York Driving Club, who, realizing the importance of it, has sent the following circular letter to all the members of the organization: "Attention is drawn to the fact that horses which are under suspension by the National Trotting Association cannot compete in the matinees. The National Trotting Association has given certain advantages to members of the League of Amateur Driving Clubs, and in return the clubs must enforce the rule against suspended horses. This matter is emphasized so that members may exercise care in purchasing a horse. In all cases they should ascertain if the horse has any claims against him."

Arrangements have finally been completed for a Fall meeting at the Parkway Driving Club's track during the week of Sept. 27, 28, 29, and 30, immediately following the Mineola Fair. Forty prominent and responsible citizens of Brooklyn, headed by George H. Innken have pledged their personal purses to the discharge of all financial obligations, so that horsemen may feel sure that the backing is strong enough to meet all demands. Fourteen classes will be decided during the four days, the purses being $300 each, except the free-for-all, which is $400. The following are the classes: Pacing, free-for-all, 2:10, 2:12, 2:15, 2:19, 2:22, 2:25; trotting, 2:10, 2:14, 2:16, 2:18, 2:20, 2:24, 2:27. There are classes for all grades of speed and every horse in every stable can get a race. The entries close on Sept. 12.

AMERICAN CYCLISTS WIN

Walthour Leads in International Race on London Track.

HURLEY OF N. Y. A. C. FIRST

Six Nations Represented in the Main Contest—Simar of France Second to Georgia Racer.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—Robert Walthour of Atlanta, Ga., winner of the last two six-day races in New York, won the 100-kilometer professional championship of the world from Simar of France at the Crystal Palace to-day by 4¾ lengths. The time was 1:33:57 3-5. This event was the feature of the day. The starters, who did not include Dickentmann of Holland, the holder, were Walthour, America; Gerbi, Italy; Hansen, Denmark; Simar, France; Von der Stuyft, Belgium; and Andemars, Switzerland.

Simar led at the start, but was overhauled and passed by Walthour at the twentieth lap, notwithstanding the fact that at one time the Frenchman

STALWART WON CENTURY IN NEW RECORD TIME

E. R. Thomas's Colt Beat Ort Wells a Head for $20,000 Stakes.

TRADITION TOOK FLATBUSH

Two-Year-Old Waterside Furnished a Sensation at Sheepshead Bay Track by Beating Old Horses.

A head between them at the winning post, Ort Wells, the best winner among the three-year-olds of the 1904 season, and Stalwart, cast off by the William C. Whitney stable last Fall, finished for the twenty-thousand-dollar Century Stakes at Sheepshead Bay yesterday, and with the balance of luck in favor of the Whitney-bred colt, Stalwart, striding just as the post was reached and rising at the crucial moment, squeezed home first in the fastest race at a mile and a half ever run in the East, and in time that fell just a little short of the world's record, held since 1898 by Goldfinch to the credit of the Washington Park, Chicago, track.

It was a truly great race for both the winner and the beaten horse, but, splendid as was the performance of Stalwart, the belief was general among horsemen that Ort Wells was the better of the two and lost only through the eagerness and impatience of his rider. O'Neill rode Ort Wells, which started favorite at odds of 20 to 11 on, while Redfern rode Stalwart, the second choice in the race at 9 to 2, five horses in all running for the big prize, with the two old horses, Major Daingerfield and Shorthose, carrying 126 pounds each, and the three-year-olds, which included the fast Delhi, with Ort Wells and Stalwart, in at 115 pounds each. The Century Stakes was the fourth event on the programme, and though in promise it only shared with the Flatbush Stakes the place of honor on the card, the contest it produced made it the real feature of a most excellent afternoon's sport.

Two stables noted for heavy betting each backed its representative, E. R. Thomas backing Stalwart with nearly as much confidence as J. A. Drake and J. W. Gates bet on Ort Wells.

Not a horse of the five looked other than fit and ready for a hard race in the warming up and in the preliminary preparations in the paddock, but the weight of opinion held firm in favor of Ort Wells throughout, as it was not believed outside the Thomas Stable that Stalwart would care to go a mile and a half in first-class company. The old horses led the parade to the starting post at the three furlongs up the Futurity course straight. There the horses hung for but a short space of time before the barrier was lifted, and the field came on with a rush for the first run past the stand. Delhi was the first to move, and bursting away from the others with the old sprinting powers that are his marked characteristic he led to the stand for the first time two lengths before Major Daingerfield, and Ort Wells lapped, while Stalwart galloped in fourth place.

Around the first turn and into the back stretch there was no change of position, but just as the horses entered the back stretch Ort Wells drew clear of Major Daingerfield and took second place, three lengths behind Delhi. Shorthose at the same time began to move forward, while Redfern sat still waiting patiently on Stalwart. Until the far turn was reached there was no marked change of places, except that Ort Wells had closed somewhat on Delhi, but the moment the turn was begun, O'Neill sent Ort Wells on after the pacemaker and he went up with a rush, just at the moment when Delhi was stopping of his own accord under the fast pace he had set. O'Neill paid no attention to that, however, and took Ort Wells forward with such a burst of speed that in the middle of the big turn, the Drake colt caught and passed Delhi, which at once began to drop back, having done all that was in his power before he was headed. Shorthose moved with Ort Wells, but further back, and rating along within striking distance of the leaders, Redfern sat snug on Stalwart, and never made a move until the leaders were on the bend into the quarter stretch, where Ort Wells led, with Shorthose second and Delhi going back to the rear guard soundly beaten.

Just as the horses were straight for the run to the winning post and the exultant shouts of Ort Wells were loudest, Stalwart made his bid, and went up to Ort Wells like a flash, O'Neill, who had taken hold of his mount to steady him, awoke promptly and set to work, but good and game as Ort Wells has proved himself to be the use made of his speed in his rush after Delhi, and the mistake of his rider in easing him on the last turn had let up the comparatively fresh Stalwart, and the two locked in a terrific struggle to the end. O'Neill rode in his strongest style, but for once Redfern seemed to be exactly suited as to his finishing powers, in the horse he was on, and Stalwart hung on with dogged resolution, the horses nodding together, head and head, to the end, where, with the advantage of rising first to a new stride, Stalwart passed the judges first. Shorthose, about a dozen lengths back, was third, while Delhi stopped so fast that he was last. The time of the race was 2:31 1-5, making a new track record, and marking the best race ever run on an Eastern course at the distance. The fractional time was first quarter, 0:24 4-5; three furlongs, 0:36 1-5; half mile, 0:49; five furlongs, 1:01 3-5; three quarters, 1:14; seven furlongs, 1:26 3-5; one mile, 1:39 2-5; mile and a furlong, 1:52 2-5; mile and a quarter, 2:05 2-5, and mile and three furlongs, 2:18 2-5.

For the Flatbush Stakes only two horses that ran for the Futurity went to the post in the field of seven runners, these being Tradition, the top weight and second horse in the Futurity, and the Western colt, Oiseau. One new horse was introduced, however, in the H. B. Duryea filly Sandria, formerly Cricket.

Sandria broke first and led to the last turn, though swerving back and forth across the track and seeming to interfere with several of the others, notably Tradition, while Oiseau, on the rail, escaped interference. Oiseau was in front at the head of the stretch, with St. Bellane and Tradition close up, but even at that point the filly was going so easily that both Oiseau and St. Bellane had to be hard ridden to keep up. From the head of the stretch Tradition drew away at her will, and won cleverly by a length from Oiseau, which was ridden out to beat St. Bellane. The time of the race—1:25 1-5—was the fastest ever recorded for the stakes.

The sensation of the day for the betting men was furnished in the high-weight handicap, at six furlongs, in which J. S. Madden's two-year-old Waterside was backed from odds of 20 to 1 down to 10 to 1, and, breaking first, went on with a feather on his back and won away off from a fast lot of old horses, Waterside outrunning the speedy Lady Amelia at the half mile and finishing all alone. DRAKE PLUNGES WENT WRONG.

Western Turfman and His Stable Following Credited with Big Losses.

Two plunges on losers were credited to the John A. Drake Stable and its followers at the Sheepshead Bay track yesterday, and in consequence betting men gossiped as industriously about the present "hard luck" of the Drake-Gates alliance as early in the season they talked of the phenomenal successes that the same betting combination achieved. The ill-fortune of the Drake Stable lasted practically through the Saratoga meeting, and has continued up to date at Sheepshead Bay.

On Friday the stable and its followers made a plunge on High Chancellor, and lost a great sum in bets when that horse was beaten in the race won by Dekaber. Yesterday the Drake Stable started what was thought to be a sure winner in Ort Wells, then an attempt was made to regain the loss by backing J. E. Madden's Councilman, and plunge No. 2 went wrong when that colt stopped close on the post and was beaten out by Cairngorm. None but the members of the party knows just how much money the Drake-Gates combination has lost in the past month, but the estimate of the betting ring puts the sum at above $100,000.

YEARLING HORSES SOLD WELL.

Best Prices of the Season Were Realized for Kentucky Thoroughbreds.

The best sale of thoroughbred yearling horses of the 1904 season was held at the Fasig-Tipton Company's Sheepshead Bay paddock yesterday, when the regular consignments of the Dixiana, Kingston, Larchmont, and Raceland studs, all of Kentucky, were offered. The best price of the sale was $8,500, paid by W. C. Whitney's old trainer, S. C. Hildreth, for the Sorcerer—Tea's Over colt, half brother to Dick Welles and Ort Wells. Brooklyn Shut Out by Quakers—Athletics and Chicagos Lose in Double-Headers.

By their victory over Detroit and the Bostons' defeat by Cleveland yesterday the Greater New Yorks assumed the lead again in the American League. Double-headers were played by the Philadelphias and Chicagos with the two tail-enders, evidently with the view of strengthening their positions, but in this they failed, as each lost a game. Three contests were decided in the National League, the New Yorks beating Boston through errors of the Eastern team, while Brooklyn was shut out by Philadelphia. At Chicago the local team was successful over St. Louis by three to one. Summary follows:

Greater New Yorks Defeat Detroit for the Third Consecutive Time.

Chesbro was in his finest form yesterday, and by receiving faultless support the Greater New Yorks won their third straight game from Detroit by a score of 2 to 1. Over 7,000 persons were present, and the fast and effective fielding of the local men aroused much enthusiasm.

Dougherty started the enthusiasm among the "rooters" in the first inning by sending the ball to right field for three bases, but in attempting to score on Elberfeld's hit to O'Leary was put out at the plate. The first run of the local team was scored in the third inning. Kleinow led off with one base hit to left field; and Chesbro followed with a single. Dougherty hit directly to Hickman, who made a bad throw to second base to catch Chesbro, and the result was Kleinow scored and Chesbro went to third. Chesbro was left there, however, as Keeler, Elberfeld, and Anderson were retired on flies.

In the seventh inning Williams batted for one base, but Conroy made a failure at sacrificing and was sent back to the bench on a foul fly to Drill. Williams then stole second and got to third on O'Leary's failure to hold Drill's throw. Kleinow scored Williams on a rather long fly to McIntyre at left field.

The run by Detroit was scored by Hickman in the fourth inning. After Elberfeld had thrown out Robinson at first, Hickman hit for a base, and on Crawford's three-bagger to right field tallied. The score:

TWO GAMES IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—Washington and Chicago split even here to-day in the double-header, the visitors winning the first game by the score of 6 to 5 after the locals had made a rally in the ninth inning, which netted them four runs and put the game on ice. The second game was a pitchers' battle, Patten and Walsh being in the box for the visitors and Falkenberg and Orth for the locals. Chicago won by the score of 5 to 4. Both games were called at the end of the seventh inning on account of darkness. Attendance, 4,000. Score:

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

New Yorks Celebrate Their Return Home by Beating Boston 3 to 1.

As they had done on thirteen other occasions this year, the New Yorks, without the services of McGann, Dahlen, and Bresnahan, defeated the Bostons at the Polo Grounds yesterday by a score of 3 to 1. Notwithstanding the great disparity in the record of games won, the Bostons being successful in only one contest with the local team, the official figures showed that 14,763 persons were present. It was the ninth straight victory for McGraw's men, and all received an enthusiastic greeting as they appeared upon the field.

The game soon developed into a contest between the pitchers, and at the finish only seven hits had been made, of which New York secured four. A fumble by Gilbert was the only mistake that could be credited to the New Yorks, but two of the three errors by the Bostons were very costly. They were responsible for the two runs scored by the local team.

Taylor started off by giving Geier and Tenney bases on balls, but weak hitting that followed resulted in no scoring. Although Donlin was placed on first by being hit by pitcher, he was forced out at second by Browne, and then a double play ended the inning. Browne started the fourth inning by reaching first on Tenney's error. A sacrifice sent him to second, and on Raymer's fumble of Mertes's hit he landed on third. Dunn's two-base hit scored both runners, and Devlin's three-baser enabled Dunn to cross the plate. Boston's run was earned. Cannell hit for three bases to left field, and scored on Raymer's out from Gilbert to Bowerman. The score:

GIRL RAN TO HER DEATH.

Wire Across Street Tripped Her—Companion May Recover.

AUBURN, N. Y., Sept. 3.—Running hand in hand to escape the storm, Miss Grace Wright and Miss Clara Severson ran into a wire across the walk at Weedsport last evening, and were thrown headlong to the sidewalk.

Miss Wright, aged eighteen, died in half an hour of concussion of the brain. Miss Severson, who lives in this city, has been unconscious ever since, but hopes of recovery are entertained.

Miss Wright was a daughter of James A. Wright, a well-known lawyer, and was an unusually bright girl.

I., Sept. 3.—Sam Herlingola, an Italian who killed his brother at Huntington on June 25 and shot his cousin, Mrs. Piera, afterward attempting suicide with revolver and knife, and who tried to kill himself in the County Jail on Aug. 8 by cutting two arteries in his arm, made a third attempt to end his life in the jail yesterday by stabbing himself with a piece of iron from his cot.

He was found before he had inflicted a serious injury. Two guards were then posted at his cell.

POSTAL THIEF LOST NO TIME.

Clerk Got Jewel Package Minute After It Was Mailed.

Chief Post Office Inspector Walter S. Mayer is anxious to discover who mailed a package yesterday morning in the Branch Post Office at One Hundred and Third Street and Third Avenue addressed to Mrs. Eugenia Kearns, Boherbue County, Cork, Ireland.

The package contained a very handsome gold breastpin, set with a valuable pearl. A moment after it had been mailed J. J. Harris, the registry clerk at Station U, put it in his pocket after destroying the wrapper.

Postal Inspectors had Harris under surveillance, and saw him pocket the package. He was arrested, and later made a confession to Chief Inspector Mayer.

BRICKLAYERS ACT IN BUILDING TROUBLE

Said to Desire Revision of Arbitration Plan.

STRIKE ON 71ST ARMORY

Will Not Work on Buildings with Non-Union Men or with Members of New Employers' Unions.

The bricklayers' unions have taken a hand in the building trades trouble and have decided to demand the calling of a special session of the General Executive Board of the Building Trades Employers' Association this week to settle the dispute by arbitration. A meeting of the Greater New York Executive Board of the bricklayers' unions was held last week, at which James J. Daly and J. McKeon, representing the Building Trades Alliance, were allowed the floor. They explained the situation from the standpoint of the Alliance, and after some discussion the board passed a resolution to the effect that the bricklayers will not work with non-union men or members of the new unions formed by the employers.

It was then decided to write to the General Arbitration Board of the Employers' Association demanding that a special session of the board be called early this week to settle the troubles by arbitration. A committee was also appointed to see the Emergency Committee of the Employers' Association and notify that body of the action of the Greater New York Executive Board of the bricklayers. Unless the special meeting of the arbitration board is called the bricklayers will order strikes wherever non-union men or members of dual unions are employed.

The bricklayers went on strike yesterday morning at the new Seventy-first Regiment Armory, Thirty-fourth Street and Park Avenue, against the employment of non-union men. This is the second strike ordered on this building for the same cause.

It was learned unofficially last night that the bricklayers' unions want to have the entire arbitration plan revised. They did not sign the arbitration agreement last year until the principal building trades unions with the exception of the Housesmiths and Bridgemen's Union had signed it. Some of the unions signed it unwillingly because of the fact that the bricklayers had a trades agreement with the Mason Builders' Association providing for a joint Arbitration Board in that particular trade, which had been in existence for twenty years.

The bricklayers say that the arbitration agreement must be revised before the present troubles can be ended. They want to have an arbitration agreement with most of the features of the present agreement embodied in it and with some other features changed which will be agreed to at a joint conference of employers and employes in place of the present one. The employers admit that before the present trouble began a conference on this very subject had been arranged.

The question of calling off the strikes and lock-out pending arbitration will be decided this week. The bricklayers say they mean business and that as no action of theirs precipitated the present fight, they have no right to be made involuntary victims of it.

There are 6,000 bricklayers employed by the members of the Mason Builders' Association in the Greater New York. A strike of the bricklayers would throw a number of trades which come after the bricklayers idle. Under the present building law the iron skeletons of the modern skyscrapers must not exceed a specified number of stories over the brickwork.

The general impression last night was that some action will be taken before the end of this week toward settling the building troubles.

SHOT CHUTE INTO ICE WATER.

Horstman Escaped from Forty-four Slide Uninjured.

Henry Horstman found out yesterday that Coney Island is not the only place where one can "shoot the chutes." After being fished out of a pool of ice water at Armour's packing house in East New York, he said he had had an experience that would not soon be forgotten.

Horstman is employed in the packing house, and was walking across the floor of the storeroom, when he slipped down an ice chute. Before he had time to realize his predicament he shot into a pool of water at the bottom, a distance of forty feet from where he started. Horstman was so dazed that his fellow-workmen thought he was seriously hurt, and called Dr. Smith from the Bradford Street Hospital. The doctor said that he had escaped with a few bruises.

CONSCIENCE AFTER 31 YEARS.

When It Awoke Its Possessor Notified Collector Stranahan.

Collector Stranahan yesterday received a letter containing a ten-dollar bill from a reader of THE NEW YORK TIMES, who is evidently the possessor of an awakened conscience. The letter was as follows:

Sept. 1, 1904.

Please find inclosed $10 conscience money for two small gifts brought through the Port of New York from England in 1873.

"Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."—Matthew xxii., 21.

NO THANKS FOR RESCUER.

Motorman Who Stopped Runaway Got Not a Word from Driver.

Motorman James McAvoy was taking his electric car east on One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street yesterday afternoon when he saw a horse rushing toward the car, dragging an express wagon whose driver was trying vainly to stop the runaway. McAvoy stopped the car, jumped off, and seized the runaway by the bridle. He was dragged for about fifty feet, but stopped the horse.

The express wagon driver drove away, without saying even a word of thanks to the motorman.

MEASLES IN GYPSY BAND.

47 Children Ill—Crowd of 250 Held at Ellis Island.

Forty-seven cases of measles have been discovered among the children of the band of gypsies that arrived in this country on Friday on the steamship Carpathia, and the entire band, men, women, and children, has been detained at Ellis Island. Some of the patients have been sent to the hospital and the rest have been segregated. It is not known at Ellis Island whether the disease was contracted at Liverpool or on the ocean.

The band comprises, all told, about 200 members.

Trolley Car on Fire on Bridge.

The controller on Car No. 3,502 of the Gates Avenue Line took fire at the Brooklyn end of the bridge yesterday afternoon. Although there was a crowd on the car at the time, a panic was averted by a policeman who was on the car. The motorman ran his car as far as the middle of the bridge, where the fire was allowed to burn itself out. Traffic was only slightly delayed.

GOULD EXPECTS GOOD TIMES.

Is Optimistic as to Business on Return from Europe.

George J. Gould, Mrs. Gould, and Miss Marjory Gould were passengers on the American Line steamship Philadelphia, which got in yesterday morning from Southampton. They went directly to the Catskills to remain over Labor Day.

"I firmly believe from all I have heard," said Mr. Gould, "that the country is about to start on a period of general business activity, unequaled in its history. The general feeling of depression which for a long time hung over the country seems to be entirely gone, and I look to the coming year as a record-breaker all along the line.

"I went away with the idea of securing a complete rest from business troubles, and I have carried out my idea. I have motored over 4,000 miles in England, France, Switzerland, Austria, and Germany, with no mapped-out route, just staying for a day or so at any place that pleased my folks. I made good time on the trip, but, strange to say, in the entire distance I didn't even kill a chicken."

Mr. Gould said that Americans in Europe were taking a great interest in the Presidential campaign and that the majority expected Roosevelt to win.

SUBWAY RUMOR EXPLODED.

Latest Yarn About Cars Being Too Long Disproved by Company.

From time to time the story that the opening of the subway has been delayed because of misfit cars crops up. As fast as one rumor is discredited another succeeds it. It was at first said that the cars were so long that they could not get around the curves without striking the sides of the tunnel. The actual operation of the cars showed a clearance of a foot and a half.

The newest report, which is not only denoid by the compny's officials, but is disproved by the physical conditions in the subway, is to the effect that the length of the cars precludes the safe passage of two trains if they chance to meet on a curve.

"The report is too absurd to merit attention," Chief Engineer S. L. F. Deyo of the Rapid Transit Subway Construction Company, said yesterday. "As a matter of fact any one who has ever been in the subway knows that if one train can get around a curve two trains can pass, for there is a line of iron columns between the tracks, and each train practically runs in a separate tunnel. There is a foot and a half clearance between the cars and the line of columns, so there is really clearance of three feet between the trains."

READY TO CART OFF SIDEWALK.

Policeman Discovered Men with Wagon Just in Time.

Five men were discovered last night trying to load a piece of sidewalk flagging from West Twentieth Street near Third Avenue into a truck backed up against the curbing. Policeman John Maim of the West Twentieth Street Station saw the mysterious actions of the men, and hid in a hallway across the street to await further developments.

When he saw the men prying at the sidewalk with a crowbar he rushed across and arrested them. Ordering them all into the wagon, he drove to the station house. What the men wanted with the flagging is a mystery.

The truck was owned by George Lehman of Hackensack Avenue, Weehawken, N. J., and the men gave their names as Joseph Graham, 3 Hackensack Avenue, Weehawken; Ernest Tereria, 317 West Twenty-first Street; Arthur Tiffany, 404 West Twenty-fifth Street; Joseph Norman, 442 Tenth Avenue, and Joseph Kelly, 420 West Twenty-seventh Street.

CORONER ACCUSES POSTMAN.

Misbehaved on Car, He Says—Letter Carrier Fined $10.

Coroner Scholer was complainant in the West Side Court yesterday against James Lanning, a letter carrier. The Coroner said that Lanning was on a Broadway car when he, the Coroner, got on.

"Your Honor," said the Coroner, "this man behaved in a shameful manner while he was in his uniform, and I told him he was a disgrace to the uniform. There were ladies in the car, and they were shocked at this man's conduct."

Lanning said in excuse that he had been troubled with a toothache and had taken a couple of glasses of whisky. After that, he said, his mind was a blank.

"You are fined $10," said Magistrate Barlow. "Coroner, make complaint to the Federal authorities about this man."

"I shall," said the Coroner.

WOMAN ACCUSES BLUECOAT.

Negress Says Gunn Slapped, Beat, and Choked Her.

Policeman Patrick Gunn of the Mercer Street Station was arraigned before Magistrate Pool, in the Tombs Court, yesterday on the complaint of Mamie Stack, a negress, of 121 West Third Street. She said that on the morning of July 19 Gunn met her at Macdougal and Third Streets and asked her for some money. She refused, and then, she says, Gunn slapped her in the face and arrested her. On the way to the station, according to the woman, the policeman struck her with his club, choked her, and kicked her. Two witnesses told the same story.

Gunn was paroled for a hearing on Sept. 27.

BOY CHARGED WITH HOMICIDE.

Threw Lump of Coal at Italian and Fractured His Skull.

George Humphreys, seventeen years old, who says he is from Maine, and who is wanted in Linden, N. J. on a charge of homicide, was arrested in the freight yard of the Staten Island Rapid Transit, at St. George, yesterday. On Aug. 31 Humphreys stole a ride on a coal train going from Elizabeth to Linden. While passing through Linden, it is charged, Humphreys threw a large lump of coal at Antonio Bovo, thirty years old. The missile fractured Bovo's skull and he died.

Humphreys disappeared and was not seen until early yesterday morning, when the Elizabeth police sent word to St. George that he was trying to obtain work in he freight yards there. The prisoner was committed to the County Jail at Richmond.

Boy Cashes $420 Check and Disappears.

Frank McWhorter, manager of the Baker & Williams warehouse at 274 Water Street, notified the Oak Street police yesterday that Peter Heilman, nineteen years old, living somewhere in Perry Street, an errand boy in the employ of the warehouse, had been sent to the Oriental Bank with a check for $420 in the morning and had not returned. At the bank Mr. McWhorter was told the boy had collected the money.

Smallpox Case in Steerage.

The steamer Campania, from Liverpool and Queenstown, was held at Quarantine several hours yesterday because of a case of smallpox on board. The patient, a woman steerage passenger, was transferred to a shore hospital, and twenty-six of the steerage passengers were sent to Hoffman Island for observation. The steamer was released after she had been disinfected.

Senator Kesnan's Picnic for Children.

More than eleven hundred children were entertained by Senator Luke A. Keenan at Schuetzen Park, Astoria, yesterday afternoon and evening. The little guests were from Long Island City, Corona, Elmhurst, and other parts of Queens and Nassau County. In the afternoon the boys and girls were provided with ice cream, cake, lemonade, and fruit, and the entire park was thrown open for their amusement. In the evening they enjoyed moving picture shows and listened to illustrated songs.

BRITISH DELEGATES TO PEACE CONGRESS ARRIVE

Interparliamentary Union Now Ready for Business.

WILL DISCUSS EASTERN WAR

Although Not Possessing Power of The Hague Tribunal It Will Take Up Similar Arbitration Problems.

The Cunard Line steamship Campania, in from Liverpool yesterday morning, brought the last of the delegates from Europe to the congress of the Interparliamentary Union which will begin at St. Louis next week. The delegates on the Campania were from England, and with them was Count Albert Apponyi, President of the Hungarian Parliament. The delegates to the congress are all members of the legislative branches of the various Governments which they represent, and the object of their meeting is to cause an agitation which will work to the settlement of all international disputes by arbitration.

The English members who arrived here on the Campania were W. P. Byles, James Caldwell, S. T. Evans, John Hammond, Vincent Kennedy, Thomas Lough, George M. Lukacs, John Lund, Lieut. Col. E. Pryce-Jones, Arthur Priestley, J. Bryn Roberts, J. W. Spear, Philip Stanhope, Francis Steiner, J. Aeron Thomas, Dr. E. C. Thompson, Col. Sir C. E. Howard Vincent, and Herbert Whiteley.

Count Appenyi will remian in New York for several days before going to St. Louis as the guest of the United Hungarian Societies. This afternoon he will be tendered a reception by them at the Grand Central Palace. All of the delegates were in good health on arriving here, and reported that but one or two of their number had been ill.

The congress at St. Louis will be the twelfth in the history of the Union. It has never before been held in this country. The United States, although always a member of the congress, has never had more than two delegates at any conference. Samuel J. Barrows of the House of Representatives and Richard Bartholdt are the only men who have ever represented the country abroad.

The congress has no power at all to settle international disputes. When it convenes reports will be read by the various delegates on the steps their countries have made toward the discouragement of war as a means for settling disputes, and of those which argue for arbitration. Mr. Barrow, the American representative, will read a paper on the fact that the United States has abolished the practice of giving prize money, and will ask the other delegates to start agitations in their countries for its abolition there.

It is not unlikely, according to the statement of some of the delegates, that a proposal may be made to the congress to call upon Russia and Japan to refer their troubles to The Hague. It was through the efforts of the Inter-Parliamentary Congress that The Hague Tribunal was formed, and the delegates now here are anxious to learn to just what extent the peace tribunal can be used.

It is the intention of some members of the American Delegation to call on the Conference to pass a resolution requesting the President of the United States to invite the other nations to send representatives to a conference for the purpose of discussing the organization of a permanent authoritative World's Congress. In this congress it is proposed that every nation shall have one representation, and shall have the right to deliberate upon, find a solution for those questions which affect all nations, and which often end in war. Members of the British Delegation are known to be in favor of this motion.

Besides dealing with this question of Government, the Conference will discuss such question as:

1. Laws of war.
2. The rights and duties of neutrals.
3. Immunity of private property at sea during war.
4. Bombardment of towns, ports, villages.
5. Limitation of armaments.
6. Forcible collection of unadjudged claims against a nation.
7. The execution of arbitration treaties.
8. The termination of the Russo-Japanese war.

An attache of the delegation yesterday pointed out that the war now waging in the East had revealed how ill-defined were the rights and duties of neutrals, and how important it was to the peace of the world that a uniform rule be established as to what was contraband of war.

He said that the congress probably would suggest an amendment to the law of nations, so as to require the adjudication of a claim against a nation before resort to force for its collection.

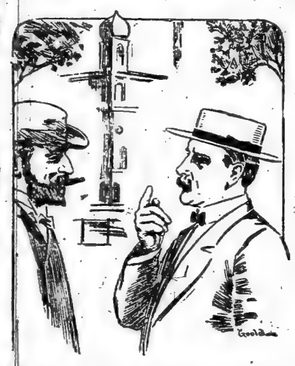
THE MAN IN THE STREET

COPYRIGHT 1904 THE NEW YORK TIMES COMPANY



SOME years ago William T. Smedley boarded in the same house with a young man who prided himself on his likeness to the artist—though, truth to tell, he was very plain, while Mr. Smedley was quite handsome. One morning at breakfast he turned to Mr. Smedley and said:

"Do you know, I am thought very like you?"

"Indeed," was the answer, "I cannot see any resemblance."

"Well, give me a good look now and tell me who I am like."

The artist looked at him steadily for a few moments, and then replied:

"You look only like the boarding-house martyr at the steak."

TO illustrate our system of taxation of personal property, about which there is an annual flurry, when the final assessments show about one-tenth of what the assessments were when the books of the Tax Department are opened, ex-Commissioner Theodore Sutro tells the following story:

One day a man timidly entered his office with a notice in his hand of an assessment of $25,000 against him. Mr. Sutro beckoned him to sit down, but the man hesitated and said:

"An' shure, Sor, I can't pay $25,000; I havn't a cint."

Mr. Sutro explained to him that the figure $25,000 was only the amount of the assessment on which the tax would be figured, and at last succeeded in getting the man to take a seat for the purpose of questioning him. The first question was the usual one:

"What is your business?"

"My business is it what your Honor wants to know—I am the man, Sor, what washes the towels for youse Commissioners."

It is needless to say that the complaining taxpayer was dismissed without any further examination.

IT IS not often that the stage aspirant manages to reach the office of Wells Hawks, who is the right-hand man of that Napoleon of theatrical managers, Charles Frohman. Of course it was a woman who did the trick the other day. She apparently created a fair impression, for the generally busy Mr. Hawkes asked her:

"Are you married or unmarried?" as he prepared to book her application.

"Unmarried; four times!" was the reply that so startled the placid manager that he found no time to ask other questions.

MORGAN ROBERTSON, the writer of sea stories, was bemoaning his illluck the other day. "I missed a good dinner," he said, "just because a foolish girl could not keep track of the day of the week."

"How was that?" asked a friend.

"Well, I was invited to a friend's home for dinner," replied Mr. Robertson, "and at the last moment he telephoned and canceled the engagement. Said his cook had left suddenly. It seems she mixed her dates and had a policeman and a burglar call on her the same evening."

COL. LOVELL H. JEROME of the Collector's office, who boards all the incoming steamers, told the other day of an unpublished incident attending the recent arrival of the Archbishop of Canterbury. A very young reporter on a very yellow newspaper was among those assigned to meet the Primate, and he sat up all night to do it. Somehow, however, he missed the Archbishop at the dock.

Nothing daunted, he rushed to a telephone and called up Archbishop Farley, whom he had once interviewed, and asked him what time he could meet his distinguished colleague from England at the Archiepiscopal palace. It is said that Archbishop Farley's secretary, who is a very diplomatic ecclesiastic, explained to him as gently as possible that all Archbishops did not belong to the same church.

DANIEL O'DAY, the Standard Oil man and gentleman farmer of Deal, N. J., has a story of a little incident that occurred on one of the back roads near his place.

A lady and her husband were driving their auto down the road when a big cart loaded with beer barrels put in an appearance. There was no room to pass, and the woman spoke sharply to the driver of the brewery wagon:

"You must go back, Sir, for I shall not. It was your place to see us before you drove into this narrow lane!"

"But, my dear," remonstrated he of the auto, "the driver could not possibly have seen us coming around that corner."

"I don't care, John; I'll sit here till morning rather than give way to that man, who ought to have known we were coming up this street," snapped the woman.

The auto driver started to apologize for his wife's temper.

"Now, don't say a word," said the jolly beer man, "I'll back out of here. "I've got another one just like her up to my house. There's only one thing to do, and I'll do it. Back up there, ponies!"

JUSTICE LEONARD A. GIEGERICH of the Supreme Court tells a story of two lawyers who appeared before him some time ago in the argument of a motion. One was an excitable fellow, who blustered and spluttered a great deal, and the other was of the calm, judicial order, with the usual attendant of biting sarcasm.

"I object to the statements of my learned friend," said the excitable one. "They should not go on the record. They are entirely frivial."

"I beg the Court's pardon," replied the other, calmly, "but I believe that my learned opponent meant to say that my remarks were trivolous."

WHILE stumping the State during the last gubernatorial campaign, Gov. Frazier of Tennessee entered the office of a village hotel, where he discovered a corpulent German seated at a table, writing. Suddenly the Teuton paused in his task, frowned, scratched his head, chewed the end of his pen, and looked so obviously worried that Mr. Frazier good-naturedly asked:

"My friend, can I be of any service to you?"

"Yah," was the prompt and relieved reply; "blease tell me vedder you puts an 'e' behindt 'before'?"

It was several seconds before the affable candidate grasped the man's meaning and gave the desired information.

I HAVE just been beaten at my own game," laughingly acknowledged Chairman Thomas Taggart as he and William F. Sheehan joined a mutual acquaintance after lunching together at a well-known Broadway café the other day.

Replying to a query from the other, Chairman Taggart continued:

"Sheehan and myself were not very hungry to-day, and the colored waiter only brought us a check for $2. I handed the waiter a five-dollar bill and he brought me back two ones and two half dollars in change.

What do you suppose he said when I asked him why he didn't bring me some smaller change? He just shuffled his feet a moment and sputtered:

"'De Lawd loveth a cheerful givah.'"

THEY were viewing the fac simile of Judge Parker's famous telegram to the St. Louis Convention, declaring for the gold standard, while seated in the corridor of the Hoffman House. They were criticising its verbiage and endeavoring to decipher the phrase which Judge Parker struck out by four coarse strokes of the pen. Said August Belmont: "It is the most weighty, concise, sententious epistle that ever used up electricity."

"That part of the telegram which is crossed out reminds me very much," said Controller Grout, "of Bryan's famous speech in the convention of '96."

"In what way?" asked Mr. Belmont.

"Why, it's the cross of gold," said Grout.

An adjournment was taken.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN, the Versatile, was sitting on the steps of his Victoria Theatre a few nights ago. He was sad and dejected, having just returned from a one day's vacation. He had been ordered by his doctor to take at least two to three months. Litigations of all sorts which had haunted him for years preyed on his mind as he sat there silently on Seventh Avenue, looking longingly at the great building now known as the New York Theatre, which he planned and built.

"What seems to be the trouble?" asked a theatrical reporter.

"Go 'way! Go 'way!" exclaimed Mr. Hammerstein, "don't bother me."

"But the paper wants to know," said the reporter.

"Tell them anything you want to, ——. Tell them injunctivities!"

COL. W. H. STORY, a Deputy Collector of the Port, was talking about the Grand Army encampment the other day and told a story about a friend of his who had attained the rank of Colonel in the Union Army during the civil war. This friend had a friend who had fought on the other side, and the two old soldiers used to foregather and fight over the battles of the war. They could never agree, of course, as to the right and wrong of the controversy, and one day after an unusually warm discussion the Union veteran exclaimed:

"Well, you must admit, anyway, that we licked you Johnnies good and plenty."

"Yes, you licked us. That's true," replied the Southerner. "But I have been looking over the pension lists lately, and I find that we must have wounded a devil of a lot of you and that we are helping to pay for it still."

"Oh, St. Louis is not near New York at all," Busch replied. "It is right next to my brewery."

SINCE William A. Stone retired from the Governor's chair in Pennsylvania, eighteen months ago, he seems to have lost all his political ambitions.

Happening into Philadelphia recently, the ex-Governor was approached by a newspaper reporter who couldn't understand why a man who once had an eye on the United States Senatorship and who was regarded as a strong State leader should be so consistently quiet.

"What is your place in politics, Governor?" asked the reporter.

"I'll tell you a story," replied the ex-Governor. "A friend of mine up in my county of Tioga was driving along a lonely road. Arriving in a small town he saw a group of men standing on a street corner talking. He drove to the curb and asked what was the trouble.

"'Oh, nuthin'. Bill Jones is dead.'

WHEN Borough President Littleton of Brooklyn was a lawyer he was one time engaged by a certain railroad company to defend them in a suit trought by a man who claimed that he had lost the use of his arm in an accident.

The man came into court with his arm hanging limply at his side and apparently suffering with pain from it. In the course of events Littleton asked the man how far he was able to raise his injured arm. With much effort and groaning the man managed to lift it a few inches.

"And, now, how far could you lift it before the accident?" was Littleton's next question.

"Why, way up here, boss," answered the man confidently, as he lifted the supposedly injured member high above his head.

THE EDUCATION OF THE FUTURE CZAR

Teaching History of the Nations with Hundreds of Puppets—The Petit Villa and Life of Its Inhabitants.

WHEN, at the age of twenty-four hours, the little Czarowitch Alexis Nikolaeivitch was on Aug. 13 surrounded by his imperial father and a cordon of Russian dignitaries and formally made Honorary Colonel of the Finland Guards at Villa Alexandra, near St. Petersburg, he received the first of twenty-two titles which will be conferred upon him as so many steps to the throne of all the Russias.

Here in America the ceremony was regarded as a sort of imperial comedy, and as such provoked a democratic smile. America was amused. But by the royal baby himself it will eventually be regarded as the first act in a serious enough drama—a drama which thus beginning in seeming comedy, may at any moment and without warning end in tragedy. Hence the many and all but impassable barriers behind which the son of Nicholas II. must toddle and walk to his crown.

Other children may enjoy to the full the privileges of their obscure and happy freedom. They may wander whither they will between the cradle and grave. But their royal Russian contemporary must follow, even from his cradle, the straight and narrow path beyond which no heir to the Muscovite throne may stray.

Of the white light that beats on many daises only a few very meagre rays penetrate to that of the Czar. His life being virtually that of a royal prisoner, is insured only at the price of seclusion and unremitting vigilance—and so the general public even in Russia may only imagine the miles—or versts—of red tape with which the infant heir apparent is already beginning to be swathed in his cradle. Before he is a year old he will have received enough orders and decorations literally to clothe his tiny self. He will have been decorated with the Grand Order of St. Michael, will have received the Crimean Badge of Honor with a Cossack Colonelcy, and a dozen other investitures of Church and State. By the time he is seven he will have been breveted an Admiral in the Russian Navy, and before he is old enough to vote, were he American born, he will be entitled to wear the uniform of General and Admiral in any European army and navy.

Meanwhile this embryo autocrat is the flesh-and-blood answer to the prayers not only of the Czar and Czarina, but of nearly 200,000,000 people in the Russias. All the Russias listened as the guns of St. Peter and St. Paul Fortress announced that a fifth child had been born to the Czar and Czarina. Was it a boy, or was it another girl? A huge and barbaric nation, a vast and ingenious people, was waiting for inspiration, waiting for impulse, waiting for an emotion. Russia with emotion would be capable of unbounded patriotism. Russia in despair would go to any extreme of unbridled revolt and anarchy. So wrote the scribes in St. Petersburg while awaiting the message of the guns.

Probably a no more dramatic moment was ever experienced in the empire than when the thirty-first gun was fired. St. Petersburg held its breath. If silence followed it meant that the new arrival was a girl. Then with the thirty-second gun and until one hundred and one were fired the Russian capital was a scene of pandemonium. Russia had seen a sign in the heavens—a reminder of the past and prophecy of the future. With the coming of a Czarowitch the Russia of simple faith and fanatic patriotism was resurrected.

Amid this fanfaronade of joy it seemed trivial that the Czar was restricted in choosing a name for his son by the fact that the imperial initials, which everywhere appear in public edifices, on the epaulets of the soldiery and the uniforms of the navy, were A. and N. But the choice of a name not beginning with one of these letters would entail enormous expense should the heir come to the throne. Hence the name Alexis.

This is a name of ill omen in Russia as Alexis Petrovitch, son of Peter the Great, and the only other Czarowitch of the same name, was ordered to be executed by his father for treason, but died in a Moscow dungeon.

Until the baby Czarowitch reaches the walking age he wil be confined closely to the imperial nursery of Villa Alexandra at Peterhof, suburb of St. Petersburg. This at least has been the custom of the Czar and Czarina with their four daughters—the Grand Duchesses Olga, aged nine; Tatiana, seven; Marie, five, and Anastasia, aged three years.

Few persons outside of the royal family and the nurses and instructors have ever seen what is called the petit villa in a corner of the great park at Peterhof. This villa, adjoining the Dutch and Swiss dairies, is a combined schoolhouse and nursery for the royal children, and, excepting such excursions as may be permitted in visiting Tsarskoe-Selo, the Winter palace at St. Petersburg, and other royal domiciles, it is there that the Czarowitch will receive his primary education.

A Royal Nursery.

A Russian writer, who was recently admitted within the sacred inclosure, and who also was permitted to describe what he saw, is authority for the following description of the petit villa and its occupants, of whom Alexis will be one if he lives long enough:

They are taught religion, languages, geography, art, history, both of great personages and nations, including their own, by ocular demonstration with dolls gathered from all parts of the globe. They learn army and navy tactics, riding, economics, cooking, needlework, and the management of servants by having a ménage of their own with a chancellery and treasury—everything on a most elaborate scale.

Stricter than in any public school are the rules governing the premises, and no hotel is managed on a more businesslike scale than this boarding house where their imperial Highnesses play at landlady or landlord, as the case may be. Surrounding the main villa are a number of pavilions, each being a separate and distinct playroom, to which they go for their lessons six days in the week.

Just now the unique establishment has seven pupils—the four Grand Duchesses, their cousin Irene, who is the same age as Olga, and a daughter of the Grand Duchess Xenia; the twelve-year-old Princess of Montenegro and another Tatiana, daughter of the Grand Duke Constantine.

Each child is accompanied by a nurse and governess, who is responsible for her charge. One of the imperial Chamberlains on duty at the Palace of Peterhof acts as head of the household. All the rest of the officials and attendants are dwarfs. The imp doorkeeper, in a cockade, a scarlet great coat reaching to his heels and formidable whiskers, is only thirty-seven inches tall, while the largest of the twenty-four footmen stands four feet in his stockings.

According to tradition these miniature people are descended from ancestors employed as spit turners in the imperial kitchen during the reign of Peter the Great.

On top of the house there is a large natatorium with a sloping bottom, permitting children of all sizes to use the tank, and giving each plenty of playing room. There the children begin each day with a royal frolic, the bright sun shining in on them through the plate glass roof, and tropical flowers and foliage embowering the apartment.

The house is run on a co-operative scale—the parents paying from 1,000 to 5,000 rubles per month for each offspring. This graduated scale—which makes the Czar the chief sufferer, although he will be a willing one in providing for the Czarowitch—appears a bit unseemly on first glance, but really is in strict conformance with actual conditions.

If, in the course of time, the Czarowitch did not pay five times as much as Irene, tradition would be upset. For the nearer one is to the blood royal the more display is expected. Age cuts no figure in this custom. While perfect equality prevails among these purple-born children in their daily association, the relative position of each is indicated by the rank and number of personal attendants. Thus the imperial daughters can afford Princesses to watch over them, and the Czarowitch the greatest nobles in the land, while a Countess is good enough to do as much for the daughter of a Grand Duke fifteen generations removed from the throne.

A Queer Custom.

By a queer Russian custom these personages consider it in no way demeaning to render such service to the royal children and to receive compensation therefor, in accordance with their prefix of nobility. Then there are the number of courses at meals to which each individual is entitled. A Russian ladyship is satisfied perforce with six courses, while a Grand Duchess may demand eighteen, just as a General gets rations for a dozen horses, though he cannot ride more than one at a time. The wages of these noble governesses are paid in money according to the established scale.

By the same ratio and proportion the Czarowitch will have a stable five times larger than his cousins, and will have at his disposal twenty ponies and as many horses for his titled servants.

As for their allowances, the royal children administer their own finances, and each is bound not only to make both ends meet but to place so much on deposit with the Chamberlain every month. Appanages are paid monthly in advance in new bills and coin fresh from the mint, and the children store their treasures in safes of their own, to which each carries a key.

As to the table, the children are provided with a daily menu with a view of keeping them in good health. They may choose between expensive and less costly dishes, provided the latter are as nourishing as the former. Then, too, if a little Prince or Princess is particularly thrifty, he or she may dispense with part of his or her entourage by sending them on furlough and economizing on their table money—a considerable item in such a household.

Repairing at certain hours to one of the several pavilions that serve as school or playrooms, the royal pupils are met by a supposed native of the land of which the history, geography, or customs are to be orally expounded. While the preceptor tells his story the pupils sit with their governesses in informal groups, asking questions whenever a passage is not entirely clear.

Teaching with Dolls.

Wishing to describe the northernmost nationalities the preceptor produces three dolls. One represents a Laplander in Summer costume of blue cloth, with a red belt and red and yellow trimmings, on his head a sugar-loaf cap, and his legs swathed in strips of leather. The second doll may show the same individual in Winter costume—his hair longer, his cap of fur and fur garments replacing the cloth. Doll No. 3 may be a Laplander on snowshoes.

Czars from the time of Ivan the Terrible are exhibited in effigy as graphic illustrations of Russian history—one doll perhaps showing Peter the Great in the Summer dress of the period, while another exhibits him in the dress he wore on his visit to Paris in 1717. There are about a hundred dolls in the Russian pavilion representing types of the various peoples under the sway of the White Czar. Nearly 1,100 puppets are at the disposal of the preceptors in the French, Oriental, English, Spanish, German, American, Italian, Russian, Dutch, Indian, and Chinese-Japanese pavilions.

Since the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese war nearly a hundred puppets, ranging from the Mikado to a jinricksha carrier, and some of them being marvelous miniature Japanese cities, have been added to the last-named pavilion.

Regarding a recent rumor denying the sex of the Russian royal baby, which the Nihilists declare is a daughter—the fifth one—instead of a son, Consul Nicholas Lodygensky, who represents the Czar in New York, scouts the report as a canard of yellow parentage. Nevertheless, the rumor is serving to direct many eyes toward the Grand Duke Michael, who, as his brother, would succeede to the throne of the Czar in default of another and nearer heir.

A Secret Romance.

One now approaches a chapter no less strange than secret in the romance of Russian royalty—a chapter which deals with a woman living a hopeless, broken life with her two sons, who also are the sons of the Czar by a morganatic marriage. Every one in Russia knows the story, and yet it has never been published there. This side the Russian frontier the story is hardly known at all.

It is a simple romance in itself—like all of the really tragic ones—just the story of two people who loved each other with a hopeless love. Nicholas was the Czarowitch and nineteen years of age when he met Maitza Tichinska, a marvelously beautiful singer and ballet dancer on the Russian stage. She was the daughter of the ballet-master at the Imperial Theatre, where the meeting occurred, and was only seventeen years old. His Highness immediately demanded to be presented, and of course was taken behind the scenes at once.

His mother, the Czarina, learned of the affair and sanctioned it after a fashion. If the Czar knew of the affair he made no sign during some seven years that the couple lived in their Arcadia—a fairyland hidden away in the imperial forests near Peterhof. Then, according to the best authorities, at the age of twenty-five the Czarowitch was ordered on his trip around the world in search of a royal bride. He threw himself on his knees before his father and pleaded for Tichinska. He begged to be allowed to relinquish his right to the throne, begged to become a plain citizen and to pass the rest of his days in obscurity with the danseuse and his sons.

But all his petitions were in vain, and as a sequel to his tour he married the Princess Alix of Hesse, a granddaughter of Queen Victoria.

Nicholas succeeded to the throne in 1895, and Maitza Tichinska returned to the stage, whereon she is a general favorite. His Majesty has never spoken to her since his marriage, it is said, but he goes often to the theatre when she dances. He sits in the royal box, far back in the shadows, and watches her. If she knows when he is there she gives no sign. She dances and smiles and bows just as in the days before she met the Czarowitch. She hides the tragedy in her eyes. For they say there was and is genuine affection between the couple. So when the Czar of all the Russias sits in his box and the danseuse is on the stage, what thoughts must rise within them—these two who are so close together and yet so far apart!

WILLIAM GRIFFITH.

WHEN FAIR FINGERS DEAL.

DON'T make a mistake and play a loose hand at whist against a college girl because she looks innocent, and leads you to think you are doing her a favor in teaching her the game," said a New York society woman who has a reputation for the interesting little card parties she arranges for friends. "I have learned from bitter experience that what these college girls do not know about whist, or any other game with cards, for that matter, is not worth a dowager like myself trying to learn.

"But I ran against a stone wall the other afternoon, when it was suggested that we drop whist and try draw poker. The butler had been instructed to say not at home to anybody who called. The hubby of the house was in St. Louis, and we were safe from interruption. A Wellesley College girl was in the party, the guest of a young matron who is a pioneer in our select card parties.

"'If you have any shopping to do, Jessie dear,' said the matron, 'take the brougham and go on downtown. You can pick me up here on your way home.'

"But the Wellesley girl wasn't thinking of shopping. She had shown a fair hand at whist, and she thought she would 'like to try' (her own expression,) draw poker. Her roll of bills seemed adequate, so we let her in. Our girly-girly friend bushwhacked for a short time, until she had us all sized up. Then she let go. Nerve and bluff? Well, I never saw the like. Inside of an hour that child had us all skinned to a settee. She not only carried off all our cash, including that of her hostess, but she had our I. O. U's for a handy amount.

"'I've had a splendid time,' she said when it was all over. 'I do not return to college until next Wednesday. If you have a little game between now and then I shall be glad to sit in, and give you a chance to get even.'"

BERLIN'S WONDERFUL HORSE

He Can Do Almost Everything but Talk—How He Was Taught.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 23.—In an out-of-the-way part of the German capital a horse is now shown which has stirred up the scientific, military, and sporting world of the Fatherland. It should be said at the very outset that the facts in this article are not drawn from the imagination, but are based upon true observations and can be verified by Dr. Studt, Prussian Minister of Education; by the famous zoologist, Prof. Moebius, director of the Prussian Natural History Museum, and by other eminent scientific and military authorities. I had occasion to-day to see a performance of the animal which was given in the presence of the young Duke of Sachse-Coburg-Gotha.

Hans, the wonderful stallion, is nine years old and is the property of a Herr von Osten, a retired school teacher. The horse has never been used for riding or driving. For over four years Herr von Osten has given the animal systematic instruction such as he would give to a child. The industrious pedagogue is the owner of a tenement house in the northern part of Berlin, and there he lives. The animal is quartered in a small shed adjoining a court where he is shown.

Some years ago the neighborhood was astonished by observing the training which Herr von Osten gave his animal. They beheld him and Hans at a certain hour of the day standing in the court before a blackboard and counting machine. Herr von Osten, undismayed by ridicule, (for by his method he had gained the reputation of being an old crank,) instructed the stallion by showing him the balls on the machine, and influencing him to indicate a number by stamping down his right hoof. At the same time, while the horse was doing this, his instructor spoke the name of the number. Then every time Hans put down his foot correctly he would be rewarded by a carrot or a piece of sugar. All other things the intelligent animal learned by seeing certain objects and at the same time hearing their names. In this way words to him became signs for visible objects, and he used footsteps as signs for his perceptions, according to the same psychic laws as we use a language to make others understand.

After Herr von Osten had taught Hans this simple sign language, the foundation for further education was established. He put before him gold, silver, and copper coins, and taught him to indicate gold pieces by one movement of the foot, silver with two, and copper with three steps. When, for example, three coins were placed in a row, Hans stamped down his foot three times when asked the number. He is also able to distinguish coins according to signs. When asked to give the value of a one-mark piece touched by his teacher, he moves his foot once, for a two-mark piece twice, &c.

Hans is an expert in numbers, even being able to figure fractions. He answers correctly the number of 4's in 8, in 16, in 30, &c. When asked how many 3's there are in 7 he stamps down his foot twice and for the fraction once. Then, when 5 and 9 are written under each other on the blackboard and he is asked to add the sum, he answers correctly.

Hans is also capable of distinguishing persons. He told the number of girls and officers standing in a line.

A remarkable thing happened yesterday. An officer was pointed out, and Hans was told, "That is Count Dohna." Half an hour later the same man was pointed out to him, and when asked for his name the horse picked out the letters D-o from the blackboard. Herr von Osten, however, having the name Doenhof in mind, wanted to help the animal by uttering "Do." Uninfluenced, however, Hans spelt out correctly "Dohna." In the same manner today Hans was introduced to the Prince of Sachse-Coburg-Gotha, and also gave his name correctly.

HANS AND HIS OWNER, HERR VON OSTEN.

The versatility of Hans in other directions is astonishing. He can distinguish between straw and felt hats, between canes and umbrellas. He knows the different colors. One beholds several colored rags fastened on a string. A cavalry officer places himself before the horse and Hans is asked to state the color of his cap. The horse answers by stamping his foot down three times, the color of the third rag, which, like the cap, is red.

Hans has also been taught to distinguish tones. The various tones of the musical scale are numbered, and he recognizes their position by his usual method.

Hans can tell the time on a watch and can indicate the exact hour. At the test yesterday he recognized persons from photographs. Herr von Osten placed persons in a row who had given him their photographs; then put the picture before the horse and asked him to indicate the position of the person in the line. Again Hans recognized the gentleman in civilian clothes who the day before had been introduced to him in uniform. He knows the names of the months and indicates the day of the week by putting down his foot, Sunday once, Monday twice, &c.

Prof. Moebius, the eminent zoologist, has this to say about Hans:

"He possesses the ability to see sharply, to distinguish mental impressions from each other, to retain them in his memory, and to utter them by his hoof language. Of course, not by himself has he learned all this, but by methodical instruction of a human intelligence, who has developed the highly intelligent senses of the species horse. For wild horses, not trained, in the same manner utilize their physical and physchic faculties as does Hans, to satisfy their desire for food.

"Herr von Osten has succeeded in training Hans by cultivating in him a desire for delicacies. This desire is aroused by questions and finger signs, according to which the stallion acts, in order to satisfy his aroused desire, for as soon as he puts his foot down he snaps for the delicacy in the hand of his master. I doubt whether the horse really takes pleasure in his studies. He follows entirely mental impressions which he receives from the surroundings and which satisfy his wants."

Hans is the second horse Herr von Osten has trained. He claims that any horse of fair intelligence can be so taught. Herr von Osten's training is done purely from a scientific standpoint, and he told me that he greatly regretted the premature publicity given to his work. By the time this article is in print the Kaiser, who has heard with interest of this horse prodigy, will have seen the animal. EDWARD T. HEYM.

FROM a comparatively unknown woman leading the quiet life of a recently bereaved widow, Mrs. J. R. C. Walker of Philadelphia has suddenly found focused upon herself the fierce light of public interest and curiosity. By the recent death of her father, William Weightman, head of the firm of Powers & Weightman, manufacturing chemists, Mrs. Walker has come into a fortune roughly estimated at from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000, her possessions rivaling those of Hetty Green, hitherto enjoying the distinction of being the richest of her sex in the United States.

Mrs. Walker has become a unique personage, about whom people want to know everything, and the inconveniences to which she has already been subjected on account of the notoriety of her princely inheritance go to show that even the greatest wealth cannot always purchase some of the comforts its possessors would like to enjoy.

The quantity of her daily mail, both at her residence and office, has become so enormous that she employs several assistants to aid her in wading through it. Hundreds of strangers have addressed epistles to her, begging for money. To undertake to read these through, much less answer them, would be a physical impossibility, considering her multitudinous business cares. Many of them are obviously unworthy of a reply, as a glance at the first few lines discloses. One of these, which reached her yesterday was from a young man who began by describing his own personal attractions. His eyes were "a deep blue," he wrote, his hair was "golden," and he had "a voice which all the girls of his acquaintance admired." That was enough. Whether he ended by making a proposal of marriage, or only wanted Mrs. Walker to send him abroad to have his voice cultivated, will never be known, save by the writer. The person who opened the letter for its recipient destroyed and consigned it to the waste basket unread.

So insatiate has been the curiosity aroused concerning her that once or twice Mrs. Walker has been literally mobbed in her handsome town house on Walnut Street, east of Broad. Scores of "camera fiends" have surrounded her residence, waiting for a "snap shot" when she emerged, and only the good offices of brawny-shouldered reserve policemen, summoned from the City Hall, two blocks away, have enabled her at times to quit her home in peace.

This sudden outbreak of unrestrained curiosity has astonished but not dismayed the slight, level-headed little woman against whom it has been directed. Mrs. Walker seems to have been endowed by nature and attained by training under her father's guidance qualities which specially fit her to be the possessor of great wealth. Like her famous compeer, Hetty Green, she has "a talent for business." Along with the vast holding of real estate there has fallen upon her shoulders the management of two manufacturing establishments, where she is the employer of seven hundred men and women. Her devotion to business would put many men to shame. She spares herself in no wise, and has at her fingers' ends, so to speak, a thorough knowledge of the entire economy of the big plants at Ninth and Parrish Streets and the Falls of Schuylkill, respectively.

Mrs. Walker is about sixty years old, but looks twenty years younger. Her quiet, philosophical temperament, in which reason seems always to have held sway, has preserved her youthful appearance. She is of medium height, or a little under, with a good figure and graceful carriage. Her head is crowned with a mass of beautiful auburn hair. Her eyes—she uses glasses—are brown, neither large nor small, but very bright. She seems to listen with her eyes. She fixes them most attentively upon any one addressing her, as though using them as an adjunct in seeking to fathom as quickly as possible the full meaning of what is being said. She is a good listener and not much of a talker, where business is concerned. When she speaks she speaks to the point, deliberately, decisively.

Yet she is an accomplished linguist. She speaks French and German as well as English, and has some knowledge of Italian. She has traveled much abroad, and has seen much of society, although her tastes do not incline specially that way. She seems fully to appreciate the value of time, as though wanting to make good use of every moment.

There is not a shadow of affectation about her. She impresses one as a woman who is eminently endowed with that somewhat prosaic but most useful quality—common sense. Her dress, voice, and manner confirm this impression. Even before she put on mourning apparel she generally wore dark, plain gowns. Black is her favorite color. Her only jewelry is a plain gold wedding ring, an eyeglass chain, and a chain attached to her watch, which she wears in her belt. She has a long, thin nose and thin lips, which, when parted, reveal even teeth.

A Womanly Woman.

Despite her decidedly matter-of-fact manner, no good reader of character could fail to discern in her countenance the kindliness and sympathy of a womanly woman. Blessed all her days with an abundance of this world's goods, her life has not been without sorrow. Sickness and death are no respecters of person, and come alike to the rich and poor to remind them that all mankind is of common clay and must pay the price of mortality. First, a lingering illness afflicted her only and greatly beloved son in his young manhood. All that wealth could procure was employed to restore him to health. Day by day his mother watched him with the tender love that only a mother knows. She traveled abroad with him; the most expert medical skill was summoned to his aid, but in vain. His condition improved betimes, but his delicate constitution caused him at length to succumb to typhoid.

Other griefs were the deaths of her two brothers and the prolonged illness and death of her husband. For five years he was an invalid, till death came to his relief last December. Bereft of husband and son, she has lived since then a most retired life, devoting herself almost exclusively to her aged father and his vast business interests.

To those who know the close relation which existed between the nonagenarian manufacturing chemist and his only daughter there was no surprise in the fact that he made her the sole heiress of his millions. She was the staff and comfort of his old age—the one best qualified to continue the work of the firm to which he had given a life service. She helped him bear his burdens; she lifted a load of business from his shoulders. Her husband had been her father's partner. William Weightman had intended that Mr. Walker should continue the business. His death blighted that hope, and thereafter Mrs. Walker became the natural successor.

Mr. Weightman was of English birth. He married Louisa Stilwagon of Philadelphia, March 17, 1841, the ceremony taking place in historic old Christ Church. They had two sons, John Farr Weightman and William Weightman, Jr., both of whom are dead, and one daughter—Annie Maria.

Annie Maria Weightman was born in Philadelphia at 709 Franklin Street. It was not a fashionable section of the city, but the residential quarter of many of the Quaker City's substantial and most highly respected citizens. Some of the families now living on Walnut and Spruce Streets, or their relatives, lived in that quarter, which, before the consolidation of the City of Philadelphia, was known as the district of Spring Garden. It was largely the abode of Quakers. The houses were plain and dignified, and present nowadays a certain quaintness because of their staid, somewhat severe, old-fashioned plainness that was typical of the people who dwelt in them. They had uniformly red brick fronts, with white shutters and doors on the first story and green blinds above. It was just such a neighborhood as would have appealed to William Weightman, with his simple, unpretentious tastes. Here the woman who is now the possessor of Ravenhill—her father's Summer home in Germantown—of two magnificent residences in Philadelphia, and sumptuous apartments in New York City, besides other real estate to the value of many millions, spent her childhood. She attended Sunday school in St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church of the Northern Liberties, Third and Brown Streets, of which the Rev. Dr. Boyd was the rector. Her father had previously been a member and sung in the choir of St. Paul's, Third Street, below Walnut, during the rectorship of the famous Dr. Stephen H. Tyng. John Farr, William Weightman's uncle and founder of the firm of Powers & Weightman, was buried in St. Paul's Churchyard, where the body of Edwin Forrest, the tragedian, also rests beneath a marble tomb.

Miss Weightman was educated in a private school in New England. On April 8, 1862, she was married in Philadelphia to Robert Javis Cochran Walker, a young Philadelphia lawyer. Mr. Walker was a native of Chester County, Penn., and was descended from the Cochrans of Cochranville, where they had settled in Colonial days. He was educated at East Hampton and Cambridge, Mass., and received the degree of LL. B. from Harvard in 1838. Mr. Walker confined himself chiefly to office practice and the settlement of estates. He took an interest in civil affairs, and served two terms each as a School Director and a member of Councils. While a member of the latter body he was made Chairman of its Committee on Finance and a member of the Public Buildings Commission. He resigned these positions on account of the illness of his son, William Weightman Walker, who was taken by his parents to Europe, where they spent two years in travel. Returning to this country in 1874, Mr. Walker became the publisher of The Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Weightman had many lumber and other interests in Williamsport, Penn., and the condition of his affairs there became such that in 1878 he got his son-in-law, Mr. Walker, to go there and assume direction of them. Mr. Walker was exceedingly popular—every one liked him. It is said he always had a kind word for every one he met. Mrs. Walker went to reside with him in Williamsport, where she soon made many friends. They had lived there but two years when the Republicans of the Lycoming district elected Mr. Walker Representative to the Forty-seventh Congress.

Life in Washington as the wife of a Congressman opened up new scenes and duties for Mrs. Walker. She gave large and brilliant receptions at the capital, but she was not enamored of society. At the expiration of her husband's term of office they returned to Williamsport, where they lived until 1890. Their only son, William Weightman Walker, died in 1889, in Colorado, where he had gone as a mining engineer to take charge of properties controlled by his father. "Willie," as his friends called him, although delicate, had studied medicine in the Medico-Chirurgical College, Philadelphia, from which he was graduated as a physician. He received his technical training at the Troy Polytechnic Institute. The young man gave promise of a brilliant future, and his death was a great blow to his parents. They returned to Philadelphia in 1890 to reside there permanently. Three years later Mr. Walker became a member of the firm of Powers & Weightman. He died Dec. 19, 1903, having been in ill-health about five years, leaving his father-in-law, then in his ninety-first year, the last surviving member of the firm.

Although reared in the Protestant Episcopal faith, Mrs. Walker is now a member of the Catholic Church. Her son, some time before his death, was the first to change his religion. He was of studious habits and became interested in the study of creeds. Mrs. Walker was received into the Catholic Church about twelve years ago in New York City. Her husband, before his death, followed her example.

As in everything else, Mrs. Walker's religion is devoid of all ostentation, but she is a devout Catholic, and has given generously to the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Thirteenth Street, above Chestnut, Philadelphia, where she has a pew. When the basement, formerly used by the parish school, was transformed into a chapel last Fall, she donated the fine new organ which has since been installed there.

Maintains Charity Bureau.

One of Mrs. Walker's first acts, upon assuming charge of her father's business after his death, was to order the continuance of the charity bureau which William Weightman had many years maintained. Through this bureau, which has been in existence twenty years, a sum which would be regarded by many as a fortune in itself has annually been distributed to the worthy poor. No one receives aid, however, until the case has been carefully investigated. This is done by a person specially employed for the purpose. When found deserving the applicants are furnished with food, clothing, money, &c., according to the exigencies of the case.

This bureau was only one of the numerous channels through which Mr. Weightman distributed a portion of his wealth.

Conducting the Business.

Since the first of this year, when her father made her a member of the firm, Mrs. Walker has been going to the office of Powers & Weightman every morning when in the city. She generally arrives there in an electric carriage shortly after 8 o'clock, and goes immediately to the office formerly occupied by her father. There she receives reports from the heads of departments and issues orders. In this, of course, she is guided by the suggestions of those in charge, of the various trusted employes holding the most responsible positions. But she does nothing without understanding the reason—and she is quick to perceive.

Just outside her sanctum a small army of clerks, seated on high stools before high, old-fashioned office desks, occupy the L-shaped room. There is a mechanical air in the atmosphere. No desultory conversation is heard, no unnecessary talk. Each clerk attends strictly to business. The spirit of William Weightman, who trained his employes by the force of his example, broods over the place. Mr. Weightman worked as hard as any of his assistants. His daughter follows his example. Till 1 o'clock—sometimes later—she remains at her desk.

Her home life is simple. She rises and breakfasts early. Her afternoons are largely spent in the house, where sometimes it is necessary to give a portion of the time to business. Being in mourning, she has now no social obligations commonly so called. She receives few callers besides members of her family, intimate friends, and those with whom she has engagements.

Her residence, 1336 Walnut Street, is a handsome double edifice with a gray granite base, a brownstone front to the top of the first story, and Pompeiian brick above. It was formerly a plain, somewhat old-fashioned building of red brick, once occupied by John Wanamaker, from whom Mr. Walker purchased it. Along with the adjoining house, No. 1,338, it was bequeathed to Mrs. Walker by her husband. The two properties are assessed at $343,000.

A Luxurious Home.

Mrs. Walker's home is luxuriously furnished throughout. Oriental rugs are spread on the floors, valuable paintings, engravings, and etchings hang on the walls. Rare and costly objects—bric-a-brac which the mistress of the mansion has picked up during her travels in various foreign countries—adorn the cabinets. There is a soothing air of subdued richness within that bespeaks the refinement and good taste of the occupants. A dozen servants minister to Mrs. Walker's wants.

Besides this pleasant, roomy, and most comfortable abode, Mrs. Walker maintains apartments in a fashionable up-town section of New York City. In her husband's lifetime they had a handsome residence on Forty-third Street, but this was recently given up for the present apartments, where Mrs. Walker has continuously in her employ another set of servants. She visits New York almost weekly.

Mrs. Walker's elder brother, John Farr Weightman, married Martha Thomas Rogers, and left two sons, Malcolm Rogers Weightman and Aubrey H. Weightman. Malcolm died in 1902, leaving a son, William Weightman, 3d, a lad of about ten years. Aubrey H. Weightman is still living.

Her other brother, William Weightman, Jr., married Sabino d'Invilliers, and left six children, all daughters. Of these, Marie Louise, the eldest, married Dr. Randolph Faries, who died in 1898, leaving three children, all of whom are still living. The second daughter of William Weightman, Jr., Anne Walker Weightman, was married to Richard Wain Meirs, and has three children. The third daughter, Bertha C. Weightman, was married to Dr. Nathaniel R. Norton, and the fourth, Louisa S., to John Strawbridge, a son of Dr. George Strawbridge.

The two youngest daughters, Ethel d'Invilliers Weightman and Martha R. Weightman, are still unmarried.

A NEW ERA IN AMERICAN PLAYGROUNDS

Opening of Athletic Field and Military Parade Ground in Pelham Bay Park.

THE opening of the athletic field and military parade ground at Pelham Bay Park on next Saturday afternoon will mark a new era in American municipal playgrounds. At least this is the idea of the new Park Commissioner of the Bronx Borough, William P. Schmitt. He believes that restricting a park simply to its function as the "lungs of a city" is to misuse it; that it has a greater destiny, and that it has not fulfilled it until it ministers to a wide and generous physical culture.

The present effort to carry out this idea on the part of Commissioner Schmitt is the result of his life of athletics, for there is hardly a phase of outdoor amusement he has not dipped into, in some becoming an adept, as in rowing, his prowess with the oars still being a part of the athletic traditions of the East River, on which he has risen 63 of the Army and Navy Veterans, and several hundred Turn Verein members. The procession will move over to the grand stand at the running track, where Mayor McClellan will make an address, followed with a speech by Park Commissioner Schmitt. Then will come the planting of the linden tree, which has been kept in the Botanical Gardens in the Bronx. This tree is a gift of the German Emperor to the Free Smiths of America, and was taken from the famous linden tree at Dortmund, Germany, under which, in the Middle Ages, malefactors were tried for all kinds of offenses, at the time the Free Smiths were powerful in Germany.

The athletic programme comprises nineteen events, open to all amateur athletes, except four events, which will be for pupils of the public schools only, and will be under the rules of the Public Schools Athletic League. Gold, silver, and bronze medals will be given in all events. The open contests will be under the rules of the Amateur Athletic Union.

The list of events is as follows: 100-yard run, handicap; 220-yard run, handicap; 440-yard run, handicap; 880-yard run, handicap; one-mile run, handicap; 440-yard hurdle race, handicap; throwing 16-pound hammer, handicap; putting 16-pound shot, handicap; throwing 56-pound weight, handicap; throwing discus, handicap; running high jump, handicap; running broad jump, handicap; pole vault, handicap; 50-yard run, elementary school boys; 100-yard run, high school boys; two open relay races, at one and four miles; a one-half-mile relay for elementary schools and a one-mile relay for high schools.

Across the road, to the southwest from the lacrosse field, will be a track for hurdle racing by horses, which is expected to be fully built by next Spring.

This section is one of the prettiest in the park. The land rises from the water's edge in a sort of terrace, while several hundred feet from the water are fine groves of trees. The country is so fine that splendid estates border this part of the park. Next to the Huntington place is Spencer House, James M. Waterbury's country seat, while near the Waterbury grounds is the Westchester Golf Club.

The area of Pelham Bay Park is 1,756 acres. It is twice as large as Van Cortlandt Park, the second in size among the city's parks. Central Park is less than one-half as large, and, beautiful as it is, lacks the element of contiguous water, which is a striking characteristic of Pelham Bay Park, whose shores are washed by waters of the Sound to such an extent that it can boast a water front of eight miles. This water feature would particularly distinguish the park, but in addition the great playground has a diversity of meadows, hills, and valleys that make it one of the most picturesque parks in the world. Other parks may possess a more striking feature here and there, like Palisade Park in New Jersey, with its bluffs, but there are none to surpass Pelham Bay in variety of natural charms.

The park is divided naturally into two sections by an arm of East Chester Bay. The upper or northeastern part is much the larger. The only athletic provision in this part is for the golfers, who enjoy a fine nine-hole course, a mile south of the Pelham Manor Station of the Harlem River branch of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

It is the lower part, south of the bay inlet, that has been set apart as an athletic park. One reason it was selected is that it is most easily reached by residents of Harlem and the Bronx. One hundred acres of this section have been turned over to the athletes of Greater New York. It would not be surprising if the customary interference of the military to parade ground facilities should result in the manoeuvring field being added to the athletic grounds. A trolley car station is proposed for the Eastern Boulevard, where it first touches the athletic grounds.

A fine regard for historical values influenced Commissioner Schmitt's choice of the site for the running track and the grand stand. An imposing-looking rock, whose peculiar formation would attract attention anywhere, stands about 250 yards from the shore on a gentle rise of ground. Under this rock in the centuries past the Indians used to meet for their religious exercises. So it is called the Prayer Rock. The grand stand has been built so close to it one can almost touch it from a seat in the eastern end. The stand will accommodate about 500 people. Within ten feet of the Prayer Rock is the inclosure in which on opening day is to be planted the linden tree.

In the centre of the running track are the arrangements for pole vaulting, the swinging rings, and the horizontal bars, and the marked circle for the discus throwers. Commissioner Schmitt has sought to provide for all athletic tastes. For the strenuous are the baseball diamonds and running track, while those with quieter predilections can use the bow and arrow or toss the peaceful quoit. The archery targets are appropriately placed within the shadow of the Indian rock.

By the opening of the bathing season next Spring the bathhouse facilities will be materially increased, and more boats will be supplied for those who wish to paddle about the placid waters of the Sound.

Just back of the grand stand is a band pavilion in front of the old Hunter House. Those who are out on the bay in boats will be able to enjoy the effect of music on the water, so near is the stand to the shore.

The Pell tree, in a meadow near the golf links, is one of the "sights" of the park. It marks the spot where Lord Pell in 1654 signed the first treaty of peace with the Indians, who had been trying to drive the colonists away. The old Hunter House is the finest piece of old-time architecture in that section. It has long been a favorite resort for drivers, cyclists, and automobilists, and will continue its existence as a tavern under the more euphonious designation of the "Park Inn."

There has been some objection to the city's going in so heavily for games in the parks, but Mr. Schmitt thus explained the motives which led him to plan this outdoor recreation place in a talk with a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Need of a Change.

"The time has come," he said, "when we must look the fact in the face that park conditions must be changed to meet the needs of the people. Once the idea was that the fewer games there were in the parks the better; that the parks were primarily to be looked at. That idea was born of the old close, narrow idea of the Sabbath. That was the day when the poor were expected to visit the parks in the largest numbers, and naturally good folk thought it was their duty to see that the parks offered no temptations to Sabbath breaking. Then along came the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, and he made his fight for concerts in the parks on Sundays, and when that fight was won the old idea of the 'gameless' park went with it, not all at once, but gradually, until now, I think, the time has come when we must recognize that on the one day when the poor can get out of the crowded districts the city should do all it can to lure them into innocent outdoor amusement. Vacant places are more and more becoming difficult to find for playing games on Manhattan Island, and the city can do no better work than enticing people out of the sweltering streets into the cool green of the country. Some will be lured out only by the prospect of games, and these the city ought to provide facilities for."

Commissioner Schmitt's acquaintance with athletics is indicated by his club memberships. Among the many clubs he belongs to are the New York Golf Club, (Van Cortlandt Park,) Nassau Boat Club, New York Athletic Club, Greater New York Irish Athletic Club, and the New York Central Turn Verein. Though one of the busiest of public men, Mr. Schmitt finds time daily for his physical exercises. In wrestling and boxing in his younger days he won many prizes in Turn Verein contests, and when an antagonist of former days calls on him now they often settle a dispute about other years by taking down the foils and masks hanging over Mr. Schmitt's desk and going at it like d'Artagnan and Aramis. His interest in rifle practice began early in life and took him into many schuetsenfest contests. His interest in shooting is shown by the clay pigeon shooting he has arranged for.

There will be separate apartments in the comfort stations for the baseball players, so they can change their clothes conveniently. The comfort stations are to be open Winter and Summer, which, with the Red Cross emergency stations, will be a necessary part of the new arrangements.

Freedom of Lawns.

All lawns in the Bronx parks are open to the public, as the crowds there thus far have not been so great as to threaten the ruin of the grass. "What I'd like to do," said Mr. Schmitt, "is to get the people out to the outlying parks, like Pelham Bay, thus relieving the pressure on the interior parks, but of course car fare and time are important obstacles."

Closely associated with the broadening of the scope of Pelham Bay Park is the Commissioner's turning over of Twin and Hunter Islands for the use of the children of the lower districts of New York under the auspices of the Jacob A. Riis Society and the Little Mothers' Society. To these societies the Commissioner says he will extend all the aid he can consistently give. For children who cannot have accommodations on the two islands tents will be erected, and on Sunday afternoons a band concert is to be given.

The Turnbull mansion near Hunter Island was turned over by the Commissioner for the use of crippled children on June 1 last, and already the success of the plan has been amply proved.

"Much has been said of the inaccessibility of the Pelham Bay field," said Mr. Schmitt. "Well, it can be reached by the Harlem Road from One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street and Third Avenue in twenty minutes, Baychester being the station."

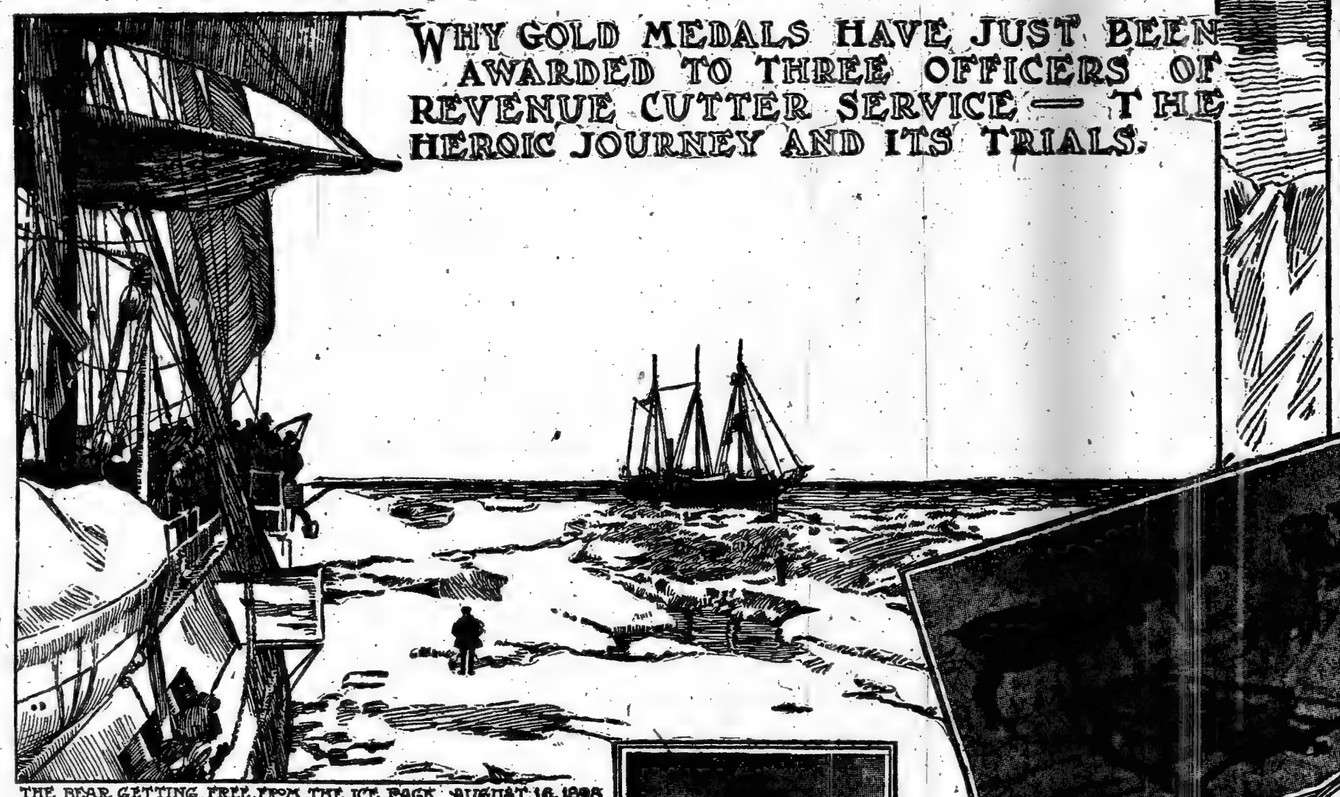
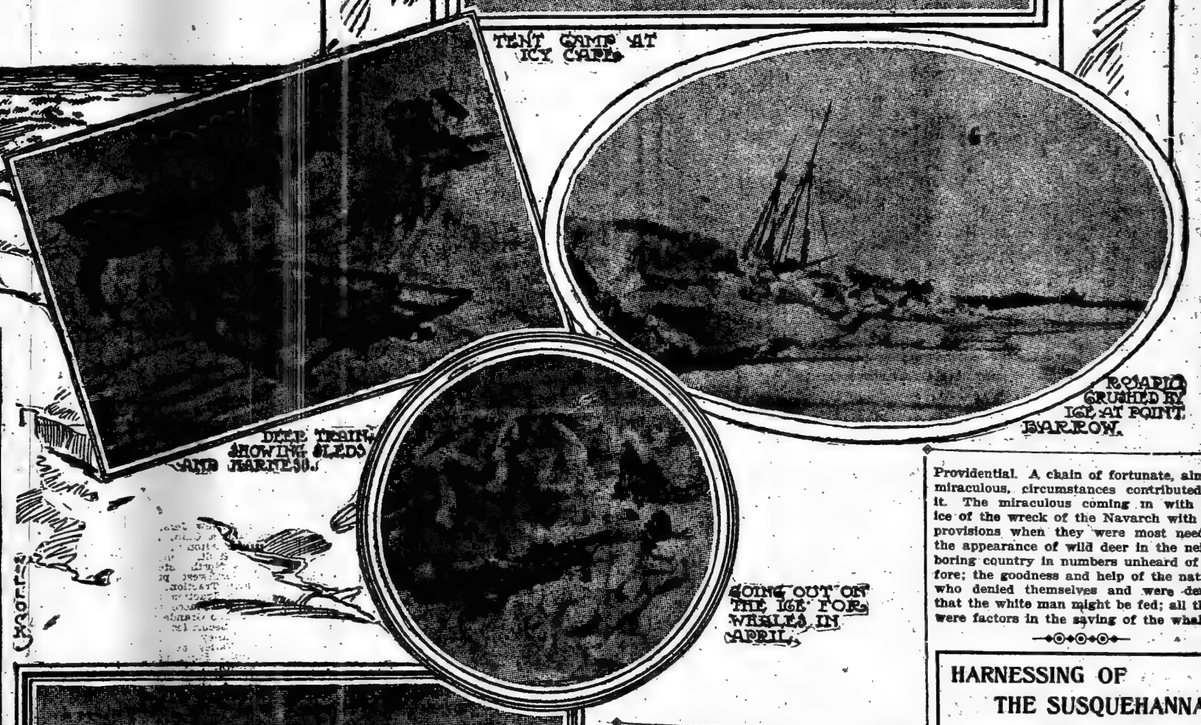
THROUGH ARCTIC SNOW AND ICE CARRYING RELIEF FOR 1,600 MILES

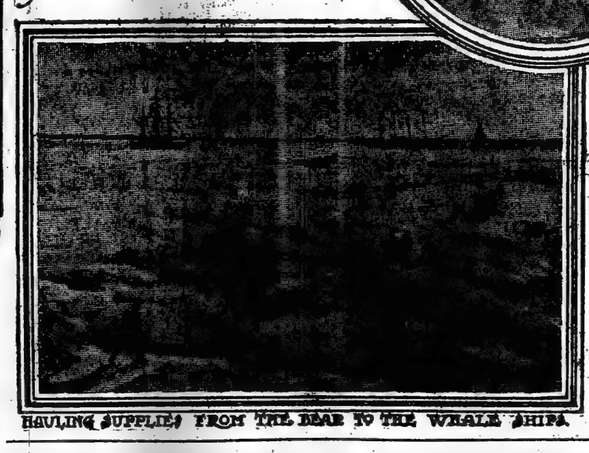
WHY GOLD MEDALS HAVE JUST BEEN AWARDED TO THREE OFFICERS OF REVENUE CUTTER SERVICE — THE HEROIC JOURNEY AND ITS TRIALS.



THE BEAR GETTING FREE FROM THE ICE PACK, AUGUST 16, 1898

NATIVE MAN AND WOMAN FROM POINT HOPE VILLAGE





HAULING SUPPLIES FROM THE BEAR TO THE WHALE SHIPS.

THE three officers of the United States Revenue Cutter Service who braved the many dangers of the terrible arctic Winter of 1897-8, and carried relief to 275 starving Americans, the officers and crews of whaling vessels imprisoned and crushed in the ice off Point Barrow, have just received the rewards voted them by Congress. The fine gold medals were completed at the Philadelphia Mint two weeks ago, and have now been forwarded to them by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The officers are Lieut. David H. Jarvis, now on special service as a Collector of Customs in Alaska; Lieut. Ellsworth P. Bertholf, now Assistant Inspector of Life-Saving Stations, with headquarters at Red Bank, N. J., and Surgeon Samuel J. Call. They made an overland journey of 1,600 miles by dog team, and for more than half the distance they drove a large reindeer herd, the flesh of which saved a large number of whalers from starvation. On reaching Point Barrow, which is within nineteen degrees of the North Pole, they took charge of the scurvy-stricken whale hunters when starvation threatened, and restored order to a mutinous camp.

There is no page in the history of the Revenue Cutter Service to which its officers and men point with so much pride as this overland trip of the officers of the cutter Bear, and the subsequent rescue of the entire expedition when the cutter forced her way through the half-frozen ocean the next Summer. It was a record of peace which future seekers of the scores of heroic Americans must give attention. Because it was a record of peace it has not received the notice and attention it well deserves, as it came at a time when the United States was interested in records of war, the achievements of the army and navy against the forces of Spain.

The Bear slipped back to Seattle with the rescued whalers and their daring rescuers. They had a story worth telling, but they were forced to make it brief; war news had the "call." It was written in full only in the records of the service, which few Americans, except those directly interested, have ever read. President McKinley was one of the few, and was moved to say:

President McKinley's Tribute.

"The hardships and perils encountered by the members of the overland expedition in their great journey through an almost uninhabited region, a barren waste of ice and snow, facing death itself every day for nearly four months, over a route never before traveled by white men with no refuge, but at the end of the journey carrying relief and cheer to 275 distressed citizens of our country, all make another glorious page in the history of American seamen. They reflect by their heroic and gallant struggles the highest credit upon themselves and the Government which they faithfully served. It is a victory of peace the results of which cannot well be magnified, and the dauntless courage of the men engaged stamps them as true heroes whose services cannot pass unrecognized."

It was in November, 1897, that the owners of whaling vessels of the Pacific fleet received information from the North that aroused grave fears for the safety of the crews of eight vessels. There was no doubt that the whalers were caught by the early closing in of the ice pack about Point Barrow, and there was imminent danger that many, if not all, would starve to death unless food were sent to them. The President immediately ordered that a relief expedition be fitted out, and the cutter Bear, though she had just returned from a six months' cruise in Alaskan waters was designated. Capt. Francis Tuttle was told to select his own crew, a full complement of officers having volunteered, to outfit his vessel with everything necessary, and to return to the northern waters.

Just three weeks from the date of the Bear's arrival from Alaska she was outfitted and sailed. Much ice was met with in Bering Sea, but a landing was finally effected near Cape Vancouver. There the overland expedition was put ashore and the Bear returned to Unalaska to go into Winter quarters.

St. Michael's was the first objective point of the expedition, and the start was made two days after leaving the cutter. There was a train of 4 sleds, carrying 1,294 pounds of supplies and camp equipment, and drawn by 41 dogs. The outfit included two small tents, a stove, cooking gear, and grub box, two axes, two rifles, a shotgun, 500 rounds of ammunition, four clothes bags, and four sleeping bags. The menu on the trail was limited to ham, beans, pork, bacon, hard bread, tea, condensed coffee, and compressed barley soup. There were, besides two bags of mail for St. Michael's and Point Barrow, a bale of trade tobacco, and 150 pounds of dried fish for the dogs.

The sleds were those built by the natives—the frame of hickory or oak and all parts bound together with thongs of sealskin or walrus hide, few if any nails being used. The dogs, in harness of sealskin, were hitched in teams of an odd number, the odd one being harnessed to the central line ahead of the others and acting as leader.

At the start the snow was deep, and four Eskimos went ahead to break the trail. All of the party traveled on snowshoes, and in places it was all they could do to get the sleds up the steep slope of the mountain. In crossing a second range they found themselves in the midst of a furious storm of wind and snow, through which they could see nothing. The penalty of taking a wrong course was falling over a precipice into the sea. The descent, after the storm was easy enough; they freed the dogs and coasted at express train speed. The dogs followed the trail as rapidly as they could, and when they finally caught up went into harness again without a murmur.

At an Eskimo village on Dec. 20, the officers separated for the first time. One of the dog teams was entirely worked out, and it was necessary to wait until the native teams came into the village. Lieut. Jarvis decided to push ahead with Dr. Call, that they might reach the reindeer herd at Cape Prince of Wales as soon as possible, leaving Lieut. Bertholf to follow a shorter route with a train of supplies and effect a junction at Cape Blossom on the further shore of Kotzebue Sound.

Jarvis and his companions "mushed" over a trackless, barren country cut up with many frozen rivers until they reached the Yukon the day before Christmas. It was a temptation to spend the day in a warm, comfortable trading post, but their mission would not admit of delay. The party spent half of the holiday fighting in the teeth of an icy gale, which finally grew so severe that the dogs could not face it, and it was necessary to camp. The dogs had a hard time making St. Michael, which marked the end of the first stage of the journey. The thin crust of snow coming across the delta country, and the hard ice on the river lacerated the cushions of their feet, and they left a trail of blood with every step.

St. Michael was reached on the 30th, an average of from twenty to twenty-five miles having been made each day. This was not accomplished as usually pictured, sitting back on a sled and cracking a whip. In Alaska it is not that way; the men of an outfit not only walk, but push, haul, and sometimes harness themselves to the sleds to get along. At first the officers found the work almost killing, but they got used to it.

New dog teams were secured and a supply of deer skin clothing purchased. New Year's Day saw them again on the trail, proceeding at a snail pace over the bare tundra. On the third day they observed a native woman on snow shoes going south. Jarvis recognized her as a native he had known at Point Hope in the Arctic, and found she and her husband were trying to make civilization with Third Mate Tilton of the steam whaler Belvedere. It was a mere chance that caused their trails to cross, and it was a great relief both to the whaler, who had come out the long and dangerous way from Point Barrow seeking help, and to the officers, who were already on their way to the rescue. Mate Tilton's news of the fleet hardly altered the situation as it was understood when the Bear sailed, except that the loss of the provisions of the Orca and the Freeman, two of the whalers, made it worse.

Starting a Deer Train.

At Golovin Bay the officers had their first experience in driving reindeer, as they ran across some at that point and arranged to make the trip to Port Clarence in "poulkas," as the Lapland sleds are called. Lieut. Jarvis thus describes the experience:

"All hands must be ready at the same time when starting a deer train, for just as soon as the animals see the head team start they are all off with a jump, and for a short time keep up a very high rate of speed. If one is not quick in jumping and holding on to his sled, he is likely either to lose his team or be dragged along in the snow. They soon come down to a moderate gait, however, and finally drop into a walk when tired. They are generally guided with a single line made fast to a halter; but this line must be kept slack and only pulled on when the deer is to be guided or stopped. By pulling hard on the line the weight of the sled comes on the head, and the animal is soon brought to a standstill, though often this is only accomplished after he has gone around in a circle several times, and you and the sled are in a general mix-up."

It was near Cape York, where the bluffs come down abruptly to the sea and the trail leads over the ice crushes that lined the shore, that Jarvis had a trying experience. Though the party were utterly tired out by nightfall, it was too cold to camp without wood for a fire, and there was a danger that the ice on which they were traveling might break off from the shore at any minute. They were going along slowly when the Lieutenant stepped through a crack in the ice, and his left leg to the knee immediately turned into an icicle. He was compelled to go on until they reached a place where his footgear could be dried; any other course meant freezing. They finally made a native hut, about 12 by 15 feet, in which fifteen dirty natives were already asleep. It was the worst hut they saw in all their Alaskan experience, but no palace could have been more welcome. They slept the night there, though in the morning they had to go outside before they could eat anything, so filthy was the place and so stifling the reek of it.

At Cape Prince of Wales they found Agent Lopp of the American Missionary Society, and secured a herd of 300 deer. Although disinclined to leave his wife and children, the only whites in a village of over 500 natives, Lopp finally consented to take charge of the herding. His wife urged him to go, believing it to be his duty, and declared that she could manage the natives through the Winter, as indeed she did. She refused to leave her post, to go to Port Clarence, where there were other white women.

On Feb. 3, Dr. Call having come up with a smaller herd purchased from the natives, they started on a rush to Point Barrow. There were 439 deer and a train of eighteen sleds. Lopp and three Eskimo boys drove the herd, riding on light sleds drawn by well-broken deer. They drove from one side to the other, keeping it on the jump. A small Lapp dog circled around the outer edges of the herd, and kept the deer from straying. If one started from the herd the dog was after him, barking at his heels until he returned.

After a few days' traveling with the slow-moving herd Lieut. Jarvis again set out in the lead to effect a junction with Bertholf at Kotzebue Sound and prepare the way for the coming of the deer. His trials with natives and their dog teams were many and exasperating. He would buy or hire dogs only to have them run away and return to their owners after going but a short distance. Nothing but chains would have held them, and they had no chains. Finally, by bribing, threatening, and offering shiploads of provisions, they managed to reach Cape Espenberg. There all the natives but one deserted, thinking the party would starve, as they had no faith in the Lieutenant's story that there would be provisions at Cape Blossom. He finally secured a dog team and made the forty-mile sprint across the ice to the other shore, where Bertholf, with considerable supplies, was waiting according to programme.

Pursued by Wolves.

The trip from Point Hope up the coast was a most trying one, and several times serious disaster threatened the expedition. The weather was miserable, blizzard following blizzard. Packs of wolves troubled the herd of deer and made a constant guard necessary. Heavy snow made it almost impossible to locate the beacons and landmarks which were to guide them. Part of their trail was out on the frozen Arctic, and never was it far back from the coast.

The middle of March found Jarvis stalled in a blizzard which came howling down on him from the north, filling the air with particles of fine, hard snow that cut like a knife and hid everything from sight even a few feet ahead. He had been warned of the blizzards on this coast and had heard many stories of the terrible sufferings of parties caught in these storms. One party he knew of had been storm-bound for forty-two days at a point not far away and were compelled to eat their dogs before the storm passed over. Jarvis had nothing to feed his dogs except a little "flour soup," and in consequence they began to eat the lashings of the sleds and everything in sight that was not wood or metal. Even his clothes were not safe from their ravenous appetites. When the storm finally ended he found his dogs buried in the drift, with only their noses sticking out. They were all right, however, and anxious to take the trail.

Lieut. Bertholf, who spent the rest of the Winter at Point Hope with a quantity of surplus supplies, tells of an exciting experience with Alaska dogs. He started out one day with a combination train, a team of deer with a slight sled being given to lead, the dogs following with a heavy load.

"We held the dogs back until the deer could get far in advance up the mountain. As there was another sled coming behind with a heavy load, I told one of my natives to wait for it and help the man who was driving it, for as long as my dogs kept the scent of the deer I knew they would not need much assistance. Owing to my imperfect knowledge of the language, however, the natives misunderstood me, and both of them started back for the rear sled. This released the dogs, and though I dragged back with all my strength they started up the mountain side at a pretty good gait, howling and straining in their eagerness to catch the deer, which they imagined would afford them a meal. Though by this time the wind had increased and the snow was driving so that I could not see ten yards ahead the dogs still had the scent.

"I did not know the proper trail, and there was some danger of getting lost in the blizzard. I put forth every endeavor to overturn the sled and thus stop the dogs until my natives could catch up. I found I was unable to do it, however, and then tried the plan of running ahead and throwing myself down on the head dogs. The rest of them soon dragged the traces from under me, and the whole team would start again. Then I thought if I could get under the sled I could raise up one side sufficiently to overturn it. I waited until I caught my breath, then ran ahead, threw myself between the dogs, caught hold of the middle trace and allowed myself to be dragged along over the snow. This made the dogs slacken their pace, but still did not stop them entirely, so I let myself backward toward the sled, still holding on to the trace, until the whole of my body as far as my shoulders was under the sled between the runners. Suddenly letting go the trace, I dug my hands into the snow and raised my back at the same time. This threw the sled over on one runner, which capsised it, and brought the team to a full stop. By the time the natives came up the snow had covered the track of the deer and the dogs had lost the scent. I soon felt almost sorry I had not let them keep on, for the rest of the trip up the mountainside was a case of "push the sled."

Strike for Double Pay.

Bertholf also experienced a strike for higher wages at a deserted village, at the mouth of the Buckland River. He was ninety miles out from Cape Blossom, where his provisions were badly needed, when his natives suddenly announced that they would go no further. They would give no reason for their refusal, which was quite in keeping with the native custom. When they make up their minds to do or not to do a thing they do not see the need of offering any reason, if, indeed, they have a reason save that of following the bent of their inclinations. Bertholf's interpreter, a half-breed Russian, listened to the conversation of the natives and found that they thought the chance good for getting double compensation. The Lieutenant had nothing to do but yield gracefully.

Lieut. Jarvis thus describes his arrival at Point Barrow:

"March 29 was a beautiful, clear morning, cold and sharp, but with a cloudless sky and little or no wind, and when we drew up at the settlement at Point Barrow it seemed as if nature was trying to make amends at last for the hard trial she had given us from Point Hope up the coast. Passing rapidly by the village, and by the old shanty where the men were quartered, we drew up at the house of the Cape Smythe Whaling Company. All the population came out to see us go by and wondered what strange outfit it was, and when we greeted Mr. Bower and some of the officers of the wrecked vessels, whom we knew, they were stunned and it was some time before they could realize that we were flesh and blood. Some looked off to the south to see if there was not a ship in sight, and others wanted to know if we had come up in a balloon. They had not thought it possible for any one to reach them in the Winter, and had not we and our positions been so well known I think they would have doubted that we really did come in from the outside world.

"All was excitement and relief in camp. Provisions were short, very short, and only by the strictest economy and hard work had they been enabled to get along so far. They had figured as well as possible on the end of the season, but there was anxiety as to how it would end. There was flour enough on hand to last until the month of August, and meat they hoped also to have for the same period, but that was dependent upon the success of the hunters and what could be hauled in. Each vessel had a dog team, and these were constantly going from one to another and coming to Point Barrow to haul supplies."

The week's ration at the Point when the relief expedition arrived was as follows: Four days in a week, one pound of beef and pork, which had been freezing and thawing alternately in an old refuge station for nearly ten years and was practically without nutriment; two days, one-half pound of frozen deer meat, and one day, one-half pound of frozen fish. One-quarter pound of beans was issued on Sunday. Seven pounds of flour a week and a little coffee each morning and tea at night completed the ration.

Owing to the use of spoiled beef and pork and the lack of vegetables the camp was threatened with scurvy. The reindeer herd, which had been driven through with little loss and which was established twenty miles down the coast, was drawn on. The fresh meat ration was increased to 2½ pounds and soon put the men in shape.

In a Deplorable Condition.

Lieut. Jarvis found the living quarters of the crews in a deplorable condition. Eighty men occupied a place about 22 by 55 feet. It was lighted by one window, and there was no ventilation. They did all their cooking on a small stove in the centre. It was only boiling coffee and stewing meat, but the steam gathered in frost overhead, and the drippings from this kept the floors and walls continually wet. Even what little bedclothes the men had were never dry. In the endeavor to keep warm some of the men had boxed in their berths, and in these boxes kept improvised seal oil lamps burning. The soot and smoke from these lamps covered everything, their clothes and bodies, with a black, greasy coating, so that they were hardly recognized as white men. Some hardly left their berths at all, and were in such a condition that only the cold weather prevented an epidemic of sickness.

No time was lost getting the men into new quarters, and forcing them to keep clean. Most of their clothing was too filthy to clean, and contributions were levied on those who had an extra supply. The natives from the village heard what was needed, and contributed odds and ends of woolen clothing which they had been saving for Summer use. The soap allowance was increased to one pound a month and a system of daily inspection ordered.

Jarvis then made a round of the imprisoned whalers, which had not been entirely wrecked. The Newport and Fearless were forty miles east of Point Barrow, and the steamer Jeanie forty miles further away. The others were scattered about in different positions off the Point. Jarvis visited all the vessels, in several instances aiding the Captain in quelling small mutinies. Dr. Call also made a round of the sick, visiting all the vessels and treating those who were suffering. He heard of some remarkable amputations performed by one or two of the Captains of the fleet. He says their fearlessness and the results were remarkable, and would call forth the praise of our most expert operators. He preserved this description of an amputation from the record of Capt. George B. Leavitt of the steam whaler Newport:

"Man belonging to the Mary D. Hume. Half of right foot was taken off, the instruments used being a butcher knife and hack saw, Capt. Tilton bossing the job. It was the first attempt of the kind up here, and putting the patient under chloroform (which was out of our line) was a slow process. We placed the bottle under the man's nose, and after he had taken a whiff we would ask him if he were sleepy. This was kept up for half an hour without any effect. We then made a paper cone, put in some waste saturated with chloroform, and the man went right off. It was a cut square across the foot. After the cutting the edges were drawn together as far as they would come and gauze, well greased, placed over the cut. After four days the bandages were removed and fresh ones put on in the same manner. It turned out well, but the big toe, or the bone the big toe grows on, was a long time healing. Two large toes and three fingers were amputated the same month; Tilton, 'head surgeon,' and Bodfish and myself assistants."

Life at the Point during the long months they had to wait until the Bear could force her way into them was not entirely without incident. In the middle of April the natives of the village went whaling over the ice. The boats are hauled out on sleds, and the people camp at the edge of the ice, remaining there until a general break-up comes. The season's catch was most successful, forty-two whales being taken, and the problem of feeding the natives solved itself.

Celebrating the Fourth.

As soon as the snow cleared off and the weather began to moderate, baseball and other games were instituted. The men had to play so many hours a day or as a penalty carry ducks from the shooting lodge five miles from camp. Most of them played baseball. Just before the Fourth of July the schooner Rosario was wrecked in an ice crush, but the crew escaped and went into camp on shore. The Fourth was celebrated with a "grand" dinner—pickles, extra meat allowance, and dried apple pie being the particular luxuries.

The Bear sighted the relief station at Point Barrow on July 28 and Jarvis and a party of men from the camp visited her. The shore ice was still heavy and she could not get in. On Aug. 2 the cutter narrowly escaped destruction in an ice nip, and until the 14th of the month her fate was in suspense. A large quantity of provisions were placed on deck, whence they could be passed to the ground ice in case of another nip, and the ship's papers were packed for removal. With the help of one of the steam whalers she was finally pulled out of the ice and started on the return trip, taking back the crews of the vessels which had been wrecked and the whalers whose time had expired.

Revenue service officers characterize the final outcome of the situation as almost Providential. A chain of fortunate, almost miraculous, circumstances contributed to it. The miraculous coming in with the ice of the wreck of the Navarch with her provisions when they were most needed; the appearance of wild deer in the neighboring country in numbers unheard of before; the goodness and help of the natives who denied themselves and were denied that the white man might be fed; all these were factors in the saving of the whalers.

HARNESSING OF THE SUSQUEHANNA.

York Haven's Great Electrical Plant Set in Motion.

AUSPICIOUSLY and in the presence of capitalists from New York and Philadelphia and other business men from different cities, the great electrical power plant of the York Haven Water and Power Company, located on the banks of the Susquehanna River, at York Haven, has just been set in motion for practical commercial purposes.

About twenty years ago Henry L. Carter, President of the Conowingo paper mill, at Conowingo, Md., and other capitalists bought an old mill at York Haven. Mr. Carter had for his original plan the harnessing of the Susquehanna River to supply power for the towns and cities in this valley. His was one of the earliest electrical power dreams, and was last Tuesday realized beyond his most sanguine expectations. The old paper mill which was bought by Mr. Carter and his associates was rebuilt and developed into a flourishing and prosperous plant. York Haven was transformed from a lifeless village inhabited by a few lazy fishermen and poor farmers, to a large town, where the hum of industry never ceases.

These things achieved, the energetic, enterprising Marylander turned his attention to the development of his more gigantic scheme. The work of building the plant was begun in 1902. Last March, when the buildings were completed and most of the machinery installed there came a set-back. The mighty ice freshet which swept down the Susquehanna River, carrying all before it, wrecked the power house and damaged the machinery so that the plant could not be placed in operation last Spring, as it had been planned by the engineers. The power house was rebuilt, and better fortified against future onslaughts of ice. The machinery was quickly repaired, and everything was ready for Tuesday's supreme test.

Most of the large industries in York will be connected with the current and operated by the power generated at York Haven. All the electric street car lines in the city and country will receive their supply of current from the same source. If the project is carried to the limit of Mr. Carter's plan, habitations, factories, business houses, churches, halls, and theatres within a radius of twenty-five miles of the roaring falls of the Susquehanna will receive their light from the current generated by the mighty waters which through the ages have rushed on to the sea without benefit to man.

The officers of the York Haven water and power plant are: Henry L. Carter, President and Manager; Judge W. F. Bay Stewart, Vice President; Henry W. Stokes, Treasurer; T. A. W. Shock, Chief Electrical Engineer, and Thomas Green, Superintendent of Construction.

The generating station at York Haven is built for twenty 1,000-horse-power, two 400-volt, 60-cycle, three-phase alternating generators. Each generator is operated by two 78-inch turbine wheels. There are also 200-kilowatt exciters. Each exciter is operated by 62½-inch turbine wheels. Each exciter has sufficient capacity to excite the fields of the twenty generators. All this apparatus is placed on the main floor of the building. At the south end of the building is a second story which extends seventy feet north, on which are situated switchboards for the individual generators, and upon which are situated all the electrical instruments for measuring the output of each machine, and of the station.

The power is conducted from the main station through a wire alley to the transformer house by means of twenty-four 1,000,000 circular-mill cables. In the transformer house, or step-up station, have been placed twelve 1,400-kilowatt transformers, with all the necessary lightning arresters, switches, and indicating devices for controlling the apparatus therein installed. These transformers raise the electromotive force from 2,400 volts to 24,000 volts.

From the transformer house at York Haven the current is conducted to York, Penn., at 24,000 volts, through distributing switches, situated near the entrance of the building, by means of two distinct three-phase circuits. The length of transmission is about twelve miles.

The New York Times.

FINANCIAL SUPPLEMENT

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1904.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

On Friday the average prices were at the year's highest, marking the culmination of the year's advance. It is a curious circumstance that each of the last three Mondays has enjoyed advancing markets, succeeding another triplet of Mondays each of which had brought poor markets. At writing the prospect is Tuesday will be the fourth successive good week's opening.

A coincidence which probably few have noticed cannot have affected prices strongly, and yet during the last month sentiment has been forming itself steadily in the direction indicated over a longer period by the advance averaging a point for each month for industrials since the last high point in April, and two points for each month for railways in the same interval. The advance seems larger, of course, if selected stocks are chosen, or if the moment's buoyancy be not checked by the figures, or if comparison is made with the previous low point. But in an effort to discover the year's characteristic curve the aim should not be to exaggerate the market's vagaries, but to eliminate them. Drawing for this purpose a line through the successive high points, or through the successive low points, and disregarding intermediate fluctuations, no room for doubt is left that this year's curve is upward, as decidedly as last year's curve was downward. The bulls have definitely turned the tables upon the bears. For long weary and anxious months the bears were merry with their gibes regarding the stale bulls who had been landed with stocks ten, twenty, or more points above the current range, and to whom stocks looked strong whenever they rose an eighth. The bulls are now chaffing the stale bears, who sold stocks when they were much lower than now, and to whom the market looks weak whenever it yields an eighth. There are still lions in the path, of course. The wheat scare of August is likely to be followed by a corn scare in September. Last year's cotton scare came in October, and it is likely enough to be reinforced this year by a political scare in that month, although Wall Street is not nearly so nervous over politics this year as many would like it to be, or as possibly it ought to be. There can scarcely be a war scare, as matters look now, a peace boom seeming more probable. Undeniably, there never was and never will be an absolutely clear course for any market movement in either direction, but it is impossible to move about Wall Street and not be impressed with the sentiment on the sidewalk and in the parlors that the market has been held in check by adverse factors, which one after another have lessened or vanished, leaving fewer and fewer obstacles in the path of those good times which all but a diminishing minority expect in the interval between this year's harvest and next year's crop scares. The argument is against it, but the fact is so, and when fact and argument collide the right of way is likely to be found with the fact, as Stephenson said when he was asked what would be the result of a cow and a locomotive meeting on the same track.

The argument is that all the usual signs indicate a low and declining state of commercial activity. The monotonous and too familiar tale of reduced bank clearings and railway traffics is reinforced by similar evidence, such as the August failures. For July they were about half of 1903's, but for August there is a sudden increase to last year's level, which, bad as it was, has been exceeded in the majority of this year's monthly statements. The production of iron decreased in July by over a half million tons, and the consumption decreased 635,400 tons. In the year's earlier months the consumption ran far below 1903, but showed growth for each month compared with its predecessor until May, since when there has been a progressive decline to such an extent that producers are quarreling over what trade there is. During the week meetings have been held to patch up price agreements, which are needless when there is trade enough to go around, and which are useless when there is not enough trade to divide. The conditions in the labor world leave pretty nearly everything to be desired. The dividend disbursements for September are $41,063,000, against $48,279,000 last year, chiefly owing to stoppage of industrial distributions. Naturally there is no disposition toward new enterprises. Not to put too fine a point upon it, enterprise is so dead that capitalizations during August are the smallest in a series of years. It may be wholesome reaction from overcapitalization, but it will not be urged as proof of anything like a present boom, or the sign of a future boom. Uncle Sam's name and insolvency, of course, are not to be mentioned together, but the old gentleman is living beyond his income to a handsome total, say, $24,000,000 for July and August, or $144,000,000 a year. Army, navy, and civil establishments all show increased outgo, and income shows a reduction, especially customs, which are running at the rate of $40,000,000 below last year. This, too, may be wholesome, or at least seem wholesome to protectionists, but it is no sign of a boom, and it is an excellent sign that the Treasury, instead of helping the banks, will be asking help from the banks in the troublesome crop-moving period. Some think that this year's wheat crop will be 140,000,000 bushels below last year's, and the experts who supply this cheerful intelligence promise soon to tell us about how much less corn there is than we think. Cotton has shown decided deterioration during August, but it showed more in September last year, and an equal loss this September would destroy present hopes of a bumper crop. Sherlock Holmes would never deduce a boom from these facts, if deprived of the ticker's proof that nevertheless a boom is under way.

It is not a pretty budget. It is as undeniable in its way as the more agreeable facts told by the ticker, and the argument based upon it is deserving a place in the back of the head of each too ardent bull who is gayly marking up the country's assets, and incidentally his own. "Discounting the future" is the phrase resoundingly applied to this form of counting chickens before they are hatched. THE TIMES's London namesake calls it "disregarding the laws of economics," and looks to see that contraction of legitimate business which "some optimists contend is not yet very great," extend further. Doubtless The London Times's warning is friendly, and possibly it is a little envious, but it does not agree with the opinions of the most competent cisatlantic observers. It was shortly before the collapse of consols that the last lecture upon our "economic debauch" was telegraphed under the ocean. Consols are still very much where they were, but our recovery is proceeding at such a rate that we are warned against its solidity. The contrast suggests the query whether the beam is not in the critic's eye. Speculative abuses and excesses there have been on this side the ocean. They are neither denied nor belittled. But of economic waste there has been here nothing comparable to the destruction of life and property and the disorganization of labor and society and the channels of production and consumption which resulted from the Boer war.

It was waged over the gold fields, and yet what a pitiful figure they cut compared with the inexhaustible wealth of our farms. Our last cotton crop alone is worth double the aggregate yield not of the Rand but of the world's gold mines. Our exports of cotton brought to our shore foreign gold, or its equivalent, equal to all the gold mined last year. And this year's cotton crop, according to last week's report of the Agricultural Department, promises to exceed last year's, the crop scare started by speculators to the contrary notwithstanding. As remarked, the crop may yet be blighted, but the market attests disbelief in that event. Not stolidity under damage, but disbelief in crop damage, is the note of the week's markets. And justly so. It is hard to convince any one who has ridden some thousands of miles through the crop regions that any shortage impends. Over thousands of miles corn is now standing and displaying two ears to each stalk in a goodly proportion. Against the barns may be seen the plant nailed to the planks and extending from the ground to the eaves. In Kansas they are holding corn festivals. These facts are not characteristic of years of scanty yield. It is true of corn as of cotton that late damage may yet be done. But much of the corn crop is never in danger of frost, and every day enlarges this proportion. Wheat, of course, is entirely beyond danger, by the token that the ground is already being prepared for the growth of 1905. The lopping of 140,000,000 bushels off last year's yield is not to be minimized when verified, which cannot be until the bushels are counted. Meanwhile it is consolatory to remark that what has been marked off the crop has been added to the price. In the aggregate there never was such a crop yield in dollars as this year's present promise. Five billions of new wealth will go far to remedy speculative excesses, and if the promise is realized the market cannot be kept down. The taunt that this is counting unhatched chickens is not entirely fair, inasmuch as the market has kept a little behind the crops rather than outstripped their growth. The rise we have had is not so much discounting the future as reflection of the position in which we stand in this respect. Caution regarding the future does not prevent a look backward upon the perils we have passed. Floods, and heats, and droughts have no more terrors. There is no speculator nor any investor who would not last Spring have thought his property worth even more than its present price if he could have foreseen how excellently we have arrived at the last weeks, almost at the last days, of the harvest. The market of the moment is justified by the facts of the moment, and the market of the future shall surpass it if hope is realized, while there is margin enough for some disappointment without serious harm. The experience of 1901 proved that this is no longer a one-crop country, and if the worst yet told about wheat should become true no vital interest will be wounded.

It is even possible to see a bright side to the iron trade price dispute. Long ago it was said here that it was a pity that the trust did not meet the trade depression in the Carnegie manner. It is now good to see that something is being done in this direction. The trust has gone to the verge of prudence in buying competitors to check competition. It is in every way more commendable to meet competitors by producing a cheaper article, and to address the trade as a master rather than as a suppliant. If artificial prices are necessary to the trust's existence its finish can be seen, but it is the price cutters, not the maintainers of trade agreements, who admit their necessities. It is those who took business from the trust by charging premiums which the trust declined who are now taking away other business by underbidding and reducing prices below those at which labor can earn present scale wages. Behind the trade dispute looms a labor dispute. Such troubles grow upon those who avoid them. It would be the poorest of policies to lose control of the trade by tenderness about the payment of a dividend or two. The issue is here, and there are signs that the trust's managers are meeting it with that boldness and thoroughness which are the best promise of retaining that dominating position which hitherto has been wisely used.

THREE MONTHS' PROGRESS

Period Shows Gains in Earnings as Well as in Prices.

MARKED CONTRAST WITH 1903

Net Earnings Increase Since April in Some Cases Despite Decreases in Gross—More Reason Than Currently Admitted for Market Improvement.

Much has been said of late in regard to the movement of the market, which in so many respects has been looked upon as unwarranted by the actual conditions, in trade, in railroad earnings, and in various other fields directly connected with the development of values as distinguished from the development of mere stock market prices. In many quarters railroad earnings have been pointed to as evidence of limited trade in general. By contrast attention has been directed to the stock market and the question asked how prices could be going up while railroad earnings in so many instances were showing decreases. During the past three months the prices of nearly all stocks have advanced, the gains in many issues being really large, and in view of the oft-repeated assertions that such advances have not been warranted it is interesting to see to what extent railroad earnings have changed for the better or worse during an equal period of time. Taking a dozen railroad stocks representing railroads in many party of the country, it is found that they all show advances of from 4 to 17 points. What have been the changes in the earnings of these roads while the stocks representing them have been advancing so rapidly? In the table below are given the gross and net earnings of these lines for the month of April and for the month of July, as well as the changes that have occurred during this three months' period, the decreases noted being the falling off of the July earnings as compared with the April earnings, and, similarly, the increases being the improvement in July earnings over April earnings:

It will be seen that only in two out of the thirteen roads mentioned did the July net earnings fail to show a substantial increase over the April net earnings, and this in some cases despite a falling off in gross earnings. The showing is better than might be expected in view of the claim that railroad stocks, as wel as other stock, have been going up without reason. True, many of these roads show decreases for the month of July compared with the corresponding month of last year, but decreases from what in many cases were record earnings cannot be said to be really bad. Moreover, the question under immediate consideration is not whether this year's earnings are better or worse than those of last year, but rather what has been the improvement or impairment of earnings during the three months from April to July contrasted with the improvement or impairment of the stock market from the beginning of June when the earnings for the earlier month were reported until the beginning of September when the July earnings were made public.

Much importance attaches to the tendency indicated in the case of some of the roads under consideration to report increased net earnings in the face of decreased gross receipts. At least so far as the railroads themselves are concerned the ability to make good net returns will very largely offset if not entirely neutralize the smaller gross receipts resulting from diminished business activity.

For the sake of comparison of last year's results with those of this year a table similar to the one above is given for the corresponding periods of 1903:

While the showing so far as the earnings themselves are concerned, is somewhat more irregular than that of this year, the most striking difference is in the course of prices during the period, there being but two advances out of the thirteen stocks named. The showing is possibly less significant than that for the present year, owing to the admitted fact that the market, was to such a large extent last year governed by more or less necessitous liquidation that had no reference to general conditions.

Comparing prices at the beginning of September with those prevailing at the same date last year, it is found that the various changes noted above—principally declines for the three months' period in 1903 and without exception advances for the equal period in 1904—brought prices at the beginning of the present month to a substantially higher level than that quoted in September, 1903. There are but two declines, the larger amounting to 2 points, while the advances are considerably larger amounting in one instance to 17 points.

PRESENT AND RECORD PRICES.

Interesting Comparison Between Last Week's Prices and Best of Recent Years—Improvement Over This Year's Low Figures.

The continued advance in the stock market during the past week has brought a great many stocks to the high prices of the year. The stocks included in the list a number no less than sixty-five, being a large proportion of the active stocks. In many cases the advances have been sufficiently striking as to lead those watching the tape to compare present prices with those that prevailed when "they were last in the market," and during the past week there have been frequent references to the records of the last few years for the purpose of more accurately gauging the present position of the stocks that have been prominent in the present upward movement. Below is given a list of the stocks that reached the high of the year within the past few days, with comparisons with the low price of the year, the improvement that has taken place, and, for the sake of reference, the highest prices recorded in these stocks during the past four years. The showing is an interesting one, for while in most cases the margin between present and record prices is still very large, there are a number of issues that are not as much below the best of recent years as might be supposed were an opinion expressed without reference to the actual figures:

METROPOLITAN'S REPORT.

Some Things That It Does Not Explain.

The report of the New York City Street Railway, which operates the metropolitan surface lines, was made public last week, after it had been delayed and held back beyond the time prescribed for the filing of it with the State Railroad Commission. No reason has been vouchsafed for this delay, and it would therefore be mere rumormongering to say that the delay in issuing the report might have had something to do with the desire of some people to get out of their stocks. On the face of it, such an allegation would, however, be absurd, for the report was not any worse than had been expected, and therefore could not well have had an adverse influence on the stock market. And, indeed, it did not, for, on the publication of the figures, which show that a road which is considered to own one of the most valuable franchises in the world is unable to earn its dividends, Metropolitan shares actually advanced.

According to President Vreeland, the bad showing is due merely to the protracted and severe Winter of last year. What, then, if next Winter should resemble its predecessor? It would seem that here is another case of oversanguine capitalization on the basis of what the property might earn if everything went along as smoothly as possible, reminding the reader of those delightful time tables which are published by some railroads, and which show very fast time based on the assumption that ideal conditions will prevail, an assumption which is wrong nine times out of ten. The financiers who undertook to furnish funds to the road with which to pay its dividends on the supposition that its traffic must of necessity expand must have been sadly misled when it was possible with the constant growth of the city for the road to actually show a decrease in the number of passengers carried.

The number of passengers and others maimed and killed by the cars of the road did, however, show a substantial increase, at least so far as the amounts of damages recovered and the expense of fighting the lawsuits are concerned. There is nothing in the report to show to what this increase is due. It could hardly have been the bad weather, which made the cars move more slowly, but it may have been due to the abandonment of the fenders on several of the lines.

While some attempt has been made in the report to give a detailed showing of its finances, yet the accounts that are printed are arranged in a form which makes it very difficult to analyze them. For instance, no clear light is thrown on the relations between the finances of the Metropolitan Street Railway and those of the Metropolitan Securities Company. Among the assets in the general balance sheet appears the item "Metropolitan Securities Company's subscription to the New York City Railway Company's securities, $9,052,000," and among the liabilities the item "Securities due the Metropolitan Securities Company under subscription, $9,556,800." This is the only reference to the relations between the two companies, but how the difference between the two items is accounted for does not appear.

If the liabilities of the company under the franchise tax were included in the balance sheet, the deficit shown would be increased by several millions of dollars, and it is difficult to see what the company could show among its assets to balance this amount when materials and supplies are already put in at $1,231,157.

Told 'Round the Ticker.

J. P. MORGAN is not often credited with giving his opinion about any matter whatever, unless it is altogether agreeable for him to do so, but the other day he was forced into expressing himself somewhat against his will. It was a small matter, to be sure, but even in small matters Mr. Morgan's opinion is worth a good deal, and to secure it against his wish is something of a feat. Mr. Morgan a few days ago was leaving his office to attend a meeting at an office further down Wall Street, when, just as he turned in that direction, some one stepped in front of him and held before him a sunflower of large dimensions, and at the same time Mr. Morgan was asked what he thought of it. At first he didn't think anything of it, and he expressed himself to that effect by making a sign that he desired to be allowed to pass on. Not content with this rebuff, the owner of the sunflower pressed it still closer toward Mr. Morgan's face and repeated the question. This time he nodded a sign of approval, apparently just to get rid of his importuner, but even that did not satisfy. It was only after Mr. Morgan consented to say "Yes, it is very fine," that the rather obnoxious flower was withdrawn and he allowed to pass. The owner of the folwer had gotten his way despite Mr. Morgan, and it may be that the approval secured in this fashion will be utilized to designate that particular species of weed "Helianthus Morganus," or Morgan's sunflower.

ARTHUR WHITNEY has devised a way to make sure of keeping a resolution that he has formed of giving up smoking for the balance of the year. He and his cousin have engaged with each other to pay the other $5 every time one of them smokes a cigarette during the proscribed period. They are reasonably fond of smoking, but it is thought that $5 will be an effectual bar to their breaking their resolve. Their friends express the opinion that it is well there is nothing mercenary about the agreement, for in that event one of the two would surely find some way of inducing the other to forfeit a few five-dolar bills.

J. HORACE HARDING of the Stock Exchange firm of Charles D. Barney & Co., who went abroad about six weeks ago for a vacation, returned last week on the Kaiser Wilhelm II.

WILLIAM CALL and EUGENE A. EGAN were admitted last week as general partners in the Exchange firm of E. H. Norton & Co. of 33 Wall Street.

THOMAS MORRISON, who a short time ago was elected a Director of the United States Steel Corporation to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Charles M. Schwab, has returned from a few weeks' sojourn in Europe. Daniel G. Reid, who is also a Director in United States Steel, is expected to be in New York in about a week.

CHARLES H. TWEED of Speyer & Co. will sail for Europe on Tuesday, to be gone two months. He will spend his time at the four capitals, London, Berlin, Paris, and Amsterdam, and may transact some business while he is away.

E. H. HARRIMAN, President of the Union Pacific, evaded visitors who came to call on him Friday by going straight from the steamer Baltic, on which he arrived Thursday, to his country place in Arden. Consequently Wall Street has not yet heard a word of what his ideas are, and Wall Street is about as anxious for Harriman's opinions as it used to be for those of the "man at the corner."

DANIEL J. SULLY made many bets while he was king of the cotton ring as to the size of the crop. The official returns of Superintendent King last Friday won every one of these bets for him, but unfortunately some of the men on the other end refused to pay on the plea that he was a bankrupt. There is a record of one bet for $5,000 made with a Liverpool broker which has been repudiated.

FRANCIS L. HINE, Vice President of the First National Bank, is back from his vacation, while Albert Gallatin, President of the Gallatin National Bank, has gone to St. Louis to take in the World's Fair.

WILLIAM F. WHITEHOUSE has been elected a member of the New York Stock Exchange. Other announcements made yesterday included the transfers of the seats of R. C. Nicholas and Charles B. Stitt to H. J. Nicholas and James A. Rankin respectively.

ROBERT P. McDOUGALL, President of the Cotton Exchange last year, has returned from a long trip abroad. W. P. Reese of Natchez, Miss., and S. B. Chapin of this city have been elected members of the Exchange. There also took effect a number of changes in partnerships on Sept. 1. Among them was the admission of G. M. Paton to the old-established firm of Stephen M. Weld & Co.

EQUALIZING GOULD ISSUES.

Opinion Held in Some Quarters That Denver Preferred Is Below Its Proper Level.

Traders and investors who are fond of picking out the discrepencies in stock market values, and who frequently are guided in their purchases by relative quotations, have of late found many opportunities for the application of theories in regard to market movements based on the relations which ought to exist between the quotations of various securities, but which sometimes are disturbed for some reason or other, or at times by no apparent reason barring mere accident. Sometimes one or two securities long maintained at about the same price will advance sharply, leaving the other behind until something occurs to draw attention to the unusual divergence in the prices of the two securities, and some one, often sucessfully, undertakes to re-establish the former relation between the two stocks.

Among the securities that some investors believe have been neglected in some such way as this is Denver prefered, which until quite recently had been selling at about 75, although many other issues paying the same rate of dividend, and formerly no more considered than Denver preferred, were selling at higher prices. The return of George J. Gould from Europe during the past week was the signal for some increase in activity and strength in the Gould issues and to some extent this extended to Denver and Rio Grande preferred, which sold up to 77½ and closed with a net gain of 2 points. It is asserted by the friends of the stock that if various other securities representing properties under the same management, but which are paying nothing, are worth present quotations, Wabash debentures, for example, Denver preferred paying 5 per cent. may reasonably be "bulled" with a considerable degree of safety. Denver preferred has paid dividends regularly without interruption since 1896, and since 1901 the rate has been maintained at 5 per cent. Recently, of course, the road has suffered by the coal strike in Colorado, and by washouts, but the full rate was paid in July last, and there is no suggestion, at least up to the present, that the next dividend period will see any change in the dividend.

MEXICAN CENTRAL'S DEFENSE.

Management's Assertion That Financing Was Hampered by Unjust Attacks—The Prospects.

In explanation of its management of the property, and apparently as an answer to what are characterised in the statement as "unjust attacks," the Board of Directors of the Mexican Central Railway, through President H. Clay Pierce, has just issued a statement to the stockholders of the road in anticipation of the regular annual report, which has been delayed by the change of the termination of the company's fiscal year from Jan. 1 to July 1. There has for a long time been much discussion of the affairs of the Mexican Central, and events have developed the fact that the various interests in the company are far from being agreed upon the best way of adjusting its finances. They recently were thought to be in somewhat precarious condition, although by the recent issue of $10,000,000 of two-and-a-half-year collateral trust notes provision was made for the floating debt, and any possible serious difficulty put off at least until the maturity of these notes. The statement just issued explains at some length the improvements which the present management has effected in the physical condition of the road, and its finances are reviewed with the purpose of showing that the present tendency toward increased earnings promises fair to place the company in advantageous position to deal with the questions likely to arise in the future in regard to the refunding or provision in other form for the obligations of the road which mature in the next few years.

The importance to the company of the value of the Mexican dollar is clearly set forth in the statement, which shows that each increase of one cent in the value of the Mexican dollar means approximately an increase of $135,000 gold in the annual net earnings. One of the great difficulties with which the Mexican Central has had to contend has been that it has been paid in silver, and has been obliged to disburse very largely in gold, which was a serious matter, in view of the decline in the value of the Mexican dollar from about 51 cents in 1901 to about 36 cents in 1903. The present price is about 46 cents.

The statement makes no reference to the unsuccessful plan of the management for the retirement of the company's income bonds, but does call attention to the change in the term of office of the Directors, which was effected last May, and which insures the continuance of the present management. In regard to the probable future earnings and the manner in which provision was made for the improvements which have brought about the increase in the road's earning capacity, President H. Clay Pierce says:

"Because of these improved conditions the cost of operating has been reduced, and during the month of July, 1904, this reduction amounted to $260,675.45 Mexican silver as compared with the same month in 1903. Your Board of Directors estimates that during the year commencing July 1, 1904, the net earnings will provide a considerable surplus after the payment of all interest charges. The present superior physical condition of the property justifies the belief that the cost of maintenance during the next few years will be small and the present facilities ample to care for a large increase of business; therefore, the net earnings should increase without requiring any considerable expenditure for capital account.

"In paying for these additions and betterments (undertaken since May, 1901,) your company issued Feb. 1, 1902, a ten-million-dollar five-year collateral trust loan, and July 1, 1904, a ten-million-dollar two-and-one-half-year collateral trust, loan. The balance expended upon the property was derived from income account.

"Your board was seriously hampered in placing the last collateral trust loan by unjust attacks upon the property.

"Your company has now provided for its entire floating indebtedness, and in a few days, when the balance of the last loan is received from the bankers, your company will be without any floating debt. The earliest maturity of any indebtedness will be Jan. 1, 1907. The intervening period will give your Board of Directors ample opportunity to provide for the financial requirements of the property as they may arise."

A BANKER'S VIEWS.

Thinks the Country Is Moving Toward a Higher Price Level.

One of the most prominent bankers in the Street, who has recently returned from Europe, last week expressed his ideas about the present rise in the market and the general condition of business in this way:

"I am frank to say I have been a bull ever since my return from Europe. By this I do not mean that I expect a return to the floodtide of two years ago, but I do mean that I believe that the trend of business is improving. In the markets, and not only in the stock markets, but in all commercial markets as well, this improvement is making itself felt. In the stock markets it has made for a higher level of prices. It is quite true that the advance in stocks was primarily started by easy money. But the superfluity of funds alone was not responsible for the change which has come over the business world. From everywhere come reports of better business, there is a more active demand from merchants, the order books of the industrial concerns are better filled, there is going to be a fine cotton and corn crop, which will offset the partial failure of the wheat crop. In short, wherever you turn you meet confidence, and this alone is a big factor. In the stock market this improvement is finding its first and strongest expression. Men who are interested in corporations do not sell the shares of those corporations if the business outlook is good. If, added to this, the money market is easy, what inducement is there to sell at all? The result is, there are no stocks offering, and a little bidding puts prices up. I do not expect to see quotations go to the high figures of 1902 at once, but eventually those prices will be surpassed. The great wealth of the country, the activity and optimism of its people go to make for a constantly higher level of values. Of course, there will be reactions, but the trend is upward, and such a tendency is not easily overcome. We are emerging from a period of gloom, and the prospects are good, The London Times to the contrary, notwithstanding. They have never been right over there. That may not be quite correct, for they were right in 1902, when they predicted a collapse. But their opinion to-day is not worth much, and it will not stop good times from arriving in this country."

BOND SALES FOR AUGUST.

According to the figures which, have passed under the review of the United States Investor," the bond sales for the month of August amounted to $39,515,960.40, not including temporary loans. Of this amount $28,346,008 were issued by cities and towns, (including $3,000,000 Philippine loan, $700,000 State of Minnesota, and $564,000 State of Alabama,) and $2,189,957 by counties. This amount shows a decrease of $2,514,813.42 from the $32,061,773.42 reported for the month of July, and an increase of $23,037,217.94 reported for the month of July, 1903.

Dangerous Play to Follow the Leader.

THE BUREAU'S CROP REPORT

Some Features of the Showing Made—Attitude of the Mills.

Last week's cottom market demonstrated the danger which the speculating public is subject to if it relies too much on the word or attitude toward the market of one man. When cotton neared the ten-cent mark one of the biggest and most influential men so far as the course of the market is concerned began to send out all kinds of bull literature. His agents in the South reported alarming conditions, and it was predicted that the condition of the crop had so deteriorated as to reduce the proportions of the crop to those of an ordinary year. Incidentally prices were pushed up and every effort was made to create a bull market. On Thursday evening, the day before the publication of the Government report, which some people had been led to believe would show a condition of 77 or thereabout, this same particular speculator came out with a statement that as he feared a decline he had sold out his holdings, and having done so, he advised every one else to do the same. Whether or not he intended to buy again on the decline he does not say, but whatever his intentions may be, this would seem a good occasion to warn the public against taking market advice and talk too seriously.

This is especially necessary just at this time, when the entire cotton market is an artifical one, extremely sensitive to manipulation, and devoid of most legitimate business influences. The real cotton has not yet moved in sufficient quantities to minimize the technical dangers which surround every venture in the cotton market. What Mr. Price really did was this. He saw that the expectations of a bumper crop had led many of the Southern planters to sell their cotton for future delivery in order to secure the high prices which have been prevailing, for these planters, knowing the condition and size of the crop, realized that when the cotton world should once have accepted a big crop as a fact, then nine and ten cent cotton would be a thing of the past, at least so far as the nresent crop was concerned. These sales, while made against actually growing cotton, were in effect short sales, much as a sale of stocks in this city for foreign account

Exchange Closed; Call Money Nominal.

The Produce Exchange was open yesterday because business was transacted at Chicago, the principal primary market. Prices were soft and business was of a dull holiday sort. At Liverpool cotton was easier, but our Exchange was closed. The Stock Exchanges were closed in both London and New York, and will remain closed here over Labor Day until Tuesday. The banks were open for nominal and necessary business only.

The bank statement was the only local intelligence bearing upon the situation. It provided several surprises. The reserve decreased $7,426,700, or three times expectation. Part of this unexpected loss was doubtless brought over from last week, and part is unexplained. Loans increased $18,185,400, rising to a new maximum, and carrying deposits as well above the record. For this there is no better explanation than the activity upon the Stock Exchange, for of commercial activity there is plentiful lack, nor are any large financial rather than speculative operations recalled. Obviously if the week's rising prices were made upon a distributive market loans would be liquidated by sellers as well as contracted by buyers. So far as the loan item throws any light upon the market it is indicative that holders are holding and that purchases are made in a market left to itself and not fed with supplies accumulated for that purpose. Bear covering, of course, would provide no demand for loans to take up real stock. If the bears have fought the rise their fresh commitments would provide a fleeting demand for cash, which might or might not be reflected in the loan item. The new record in loans may cause anxiety to timorous souls, who may possibly be reassured by recalling the statement by the trust companies that their loans, according to their last semi-annual statements, had decreased $58,000,000. As the banks are carrying these loans, as well as the trust company deposits, the situation as a whole is less expanded than the bank statement alone would indicate.

NORTHERN SECURITIES REPLY.

Formal Answer Seems to Disregard Appeal to United States Circuit Court.

TRENTON, Sept. 3.—The Northern Securities Company to-day filed in the United States Circuit Court its formal answer in the suit instituted by Edward H. Harriman, Winslow S. Pierce, the Oregon Short Line Company, and the Equitable Trust Company of New York to restrain the Northern Securities Company from carrying out its proposed plan of distribution of its assets. This is the first formal answer filed by the Northern Securities Company either to the original bill of complaint of Harriman and Pierce or to the first and second amendments thereto. The preliminary injunction granted by Judge Bradford restraining the Northern Securities Company from disposing of certain shares of the Northern Pacific Company was granted upon motion and argument in open court and without the filing of any formal answer to the original bill.

The filing of the answer is taken as indicating that the case is to go before Judge Bradford for a final hearing, notwithstanding the fact that an appeal has been taken to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The answer is largely a formal presentation of the points made before Judge Bradford.

MEXICAN CENTRAL'S AFFAIRS.

Chairman of Directors Is Hopeful, Despite "Unjust Attacks."

H. Clay Pierce, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Mexican Central Railway Company, Limited, yesterday sent out to stockholders of the company a statement of the company's affairs, in lieu of an annual report, which, he says, cannot be completed for some time.

After referring to the lengthening of the main line from 2,124 to 3,154 miles, and the side tracks from 227 to 343 miles, and the acquisition of the Mexican-American Steamship Company, Mr. Pierce says that $20,500,000 in gold has been expended in the last three years.

In the last two years the gross earnings have increased from $17,000,000 to $25,000,000, he says, but the net earnings have suffered because of the decline in value of the Mexican dollar from about 51 cents gold in 1901 to as low as 36 cents gold in 1903. The Directors estimate a considerable surplus after the payment of all charges.

"Your board," the statement says, "was seriously hampered in placing the last collateral trust loan by unjust attacks upon the property."

The company is not in default of any of its obligations, and in the opinion of the board the future net earnings will be such as to make default in interest impossible.

COTTON DUCK SUSCRIBERS SUE.

Seek to Recover $300,000 Paid to Underwriting Syndicate.

Two actions were started in the United States Circuit Court yesterday against the Continental Trust Company of Baltimore by the law firm of Smith & Bowman, representing the Central National Bank of New York, in liquidation, and the Merchants' Trust Company of New York, wherein the first-named complainant seeks to recover the sum of $200,000, which it paid as a subscriber to the underwriting syndicate of the United States Cotton Duck Corporation.

The Merchants' Trust Company asks judgment for $100,000, which is likewise paid on a subscription to the same syndicate. The complainants allege that the defendant company in promoting the United States Cotton Duck Corporation used "false, fraudulent, and deceitful" representations to induce them to subscribe to its underwriting syndicate, with an intent to "deceive and defraud" them.

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Another Cheerful Week in the Stock Markets.

Consols and All Other British and Colonial Government Securities Improve—Belief That Kuropatkin's Defeat Will End the War Sends Russians Up.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—This has been another cheerful week on the Stock Exchange, the cheerfulness being due mainly to the comparative ease of the money market and the expectation that this condition will continue for some time. Hitherto during the last six months there have been no long periods of plenitude of money, and there has been nothing quite like the present situation, the feature of which is the general belief that for weeks at least there will be no return to stringency.

This optimism may not be justified by the progress of events, but a certain degree of substantiality is attributed to it on account of the rather heavy buying of gilt-edged securities by large concerns in Lombard Street in anticipation of good advances.

These securities have already advanced moderately. Consols are over half a point above last week's prices, and all other home and Colonial Government stocks have improved. There is not a minus sign in the quotation table of these stocks.

Foreign Government securities make a similar showing, including both Japanese and Russian stocks, the latter as well as the former being higher, not exactly because Gen. Kuropatkin has suffered defeat but because of what it is thought on the Stock Exchange will come out of his defeat, that is, the end of the war. In fact, the interpretation the Stock Exchange has put on the events at Liao-Yang, that they are making for peace, has contributed considerably to the good tone of the market in the last few days.

British railways have been dull on account of poor traffic returns and the rainy weather, which presages another set of unsatisfactory returns next week.

The reaction in American railroad stocks which began on Wednesday is explained here as due to the anticipated holiday both in New York and London. Only a few stocks, however, close below last week's level, the declines in most cases amounting only to a shaving down of gains made earlier in the week.

Mines have been fairly firm, and brokers have talked hopefully. There is no sign, however, of renewed interest in these stocks on the part of the general public.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—To-day was a holiday on the Stock Exchange.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Coming at a time when a deal in gilt-edged down-town property is least expected, the sale of the Kemp property at 82 and 84 Maiden Lane, near William Street, takes on possibly a relatively greater degree of importance than it would in a busier season.

In its local bearing, the transaction is worthy of some attention as indicating that the growth of the new insurance centre is likely to extend along Maiden Lane for some distance east of William Street and to claim eventually all of the property fronting on the open space formed by the junction of Liberty Street and Maiden Lane. With the continual struggle for light and air among buildings on the narrow, crowded down-town thoroughfares, any such spot as this possesses exceptional qualifications for rebuilding with modern structures, and among those who have followed the changes in this neighborhood most closely the opinion prevails that the reclaiming of this adjacent block on Maiden Lane will be fully as rapid as has been the development of William Street itself.

The greater part of last week's dealings lacked any distinguishing features. Many of the operators, who have been busy for a year on the upper east side and in Harlem have flown to the Bronx, because, as several of them frankly admit, there is nothing left in Manhattan. And not the least amusing feature of this situation is that a number of these operators, whose recent field of activity has begun to afford rather poor picking, still have the effrontery to decry the tenement house law, seeming to forget entirely that that piece of legislation has caused hundreds of flats of the older type to yield quick and substantial speculative profits, while the tenanting of these old houses and the curtailment of new construction has led to an advance of from 25 to 50 per cent. in the prices of remaining vacant parcels throughout the upper east side and Harlem sections.

But the complaint of the speculators that there is nothing left in Manhattan is not altogether borne out by current reports. The search in Harlem, it is true, is not so productive as it was a few months ago, but there is still a good deal of buying of old three-story houses, where three or more of them can be found together, making a plot of sufficient size to cut up into new-law tenement sites. One large transaction of this sort was put through on Thursday, involving ten houses at the northeast corner of Park Avenue and One Hundred and Tenth Street, on a plot 155 by 100. The greater part of Harlem speculation, however, has been transferred to the territory east of Second Avenue, and much of the vacant property between that thoroughfare and the Harlem River is being bought up for improvement, as was shown in last week's purchase by operators of eleven lots on One Hundred and Eighth Street, between First and Second Avenues, which have been used for years as a stoneyard.

Upper Madison Avenue, in the neighborhood of One Hundredth Street, is adding rapidly to the number of its new apartment houses, with structures of this type projected for two corners at Ninety-sixth Street and for one at Ninety-seventh Street. A plot of three lots on the south side of One Hundred and Third Street, between Madison and Fifth Avenues, has also been bought for similar improvement.

Another bit of territory that is attracting some attention through its successful building operations is that at Seventh Avenue, from One Hundred and Forty-second to One Hundred and Forty-fourth Street. One company, which only recently disposed of an entire row of new apartment houses to various buyers, has secured a building loan of $233,000 with which to undertake the improvement of the block front on the east side of Seventh Avenue, from One Hundred and Forty-third to One Hundred and Forty-fourth Street. Another builder has found buyers for three new houses on One Hundred and Forty-second Street, and still another firm has sold four out of a row of six on One Hundred and Forty-third Street.

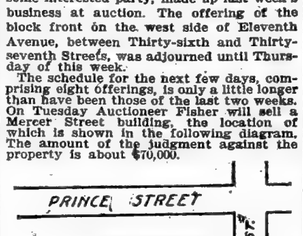
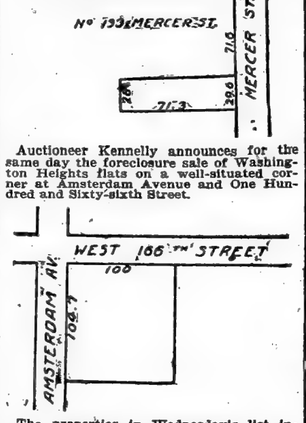
THE AUCTION ROOM.

Four foreclosure sales, the buyer in each instance being either the plaintiff or some interested party, made up last week's business at auction. The offering of the block front on the west side of Eleventh Avenue, between Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Streets, was adjourned until Thursday of this week.

The schedule for the next few days, comprising eight offerings, is only a little longer than have been those of the last two weeks. On Tuesday Auctioneer Fisher will sell a Mercer Street building, the location of which is shown in the following diagram. The amount of the judgment against the property is about $70,000.



Auctioneer Kennelly announces for the same day the foreclosure sale of Washington Heights flats on a well-situated corner at Amsterdam Avenue and One Hundred and Sixty-sixth Street.



The properties in Wednesday's list include a small leasehold parcel at the northwest corner of Elm Street and Manhattan Place, just south of Duane Street, and the Henry Zeltner Brewing Company's plant in the Bronx, bounded by Third and Fulton Avenues, St. Paul's Place, and One Hundred and Seventieth Street. Both sales will be conducted by Auctioneer Day.

PAPER COMPANY IN TROUBLE.

Bankruptcy Petition Against Concern Whose President Was a Suicide.

A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against W. A. Bingham & Co., manufacturers of paper, with offices at 335 Broadway and mills at Penn Yan, N. Y. The President and Treasurer of the concern, Wells A. Bingham, committed suicide on Aug. 15 at Bloomfield, N. J.

The following creditors filed the petitions: Castle, Gottheil & Overton, $885; Albert Nathan, $230, and C. B. Hewitt & Brother, $1,203.

It was alleged that while insolvent on Sept. 1 the corporation allowed several attachments to be taken against it. The corporation was formed under New York State laws on Jan. 15, 1895, and succeeded a New Jersey corporation of the same name, which made an assignment on Oct. 8, 1894, and settled at 65 cents on the dollar. At the office of the company it was said that the death of Mr. Bingham had tied up the business. He was the principal stockholder and manager of the business, and there was no one left who wished to carry on the business. The liabilities and assets could not be ascertained at the office.

ADVANCING SILK VALUES.

Importers Complain of Campaign Being Carried On by Appraiser Whitehead.

Importers of velvets and other silk goods are complaining bitterly of the campaign for higher values on their goods which has been carried on for the last several months by Appraiser Whitehead. For the last nine months there have been constant advances on invoice values, which have been almost uniformly sustained on appeal by the Board of United States General Appraisers. The velvet importers are particularly annoyed, and declare that an effort is being made to shut out some of their goods altogether. There is talk of holding a meeting and drawing up an appeal to Washington. Some of the heavy advances on velvets recently made were as follows: Goods exported by V. Berger & Co., Lyons, invoiced at 8.50, 9, and 12.50 francs a meter and advanced to 10, 12, and 16 francs a meter; goods exported by Henri Gutman of Lyons, invoiced at 3.40 and advanced to 4.50 francs a meter; goods exported by Gerin & Paris of Lyons, advanced from 1.60 and 1.40 francs a meter to 1.90 and 1.75 francs.

LABOR TROUBLES DARKEN THE BUILDING OUTLOOK

Contractors Now Refusing to Figure on New Work.

OWNERS FACE HEAVY LOSSES

Year's Renting of Many Structures May Be Affected—Contract Time Usually Too Short, Says One Contractor.

How the present disturbances in the building industry have affected the outlook for new construction is shown by the fact that the estimated cost of all new structures for which plans were filed at the Building Department in the week from Aug. 21 to 28 was only $894,000. During the corresponding week last year, even with the building strike that was in progress at that time, plans filed called for an outlay of $3,000,000, and last week's figure is far below that for the same period in any of the last five years.

The significance of this is that, while the present difficulties are really of smaller scope and of less-threatening aspect than were those of last year, owners and contractors, through the repetition of these experiences, have come to a much fuller realization of the troubles and delays to which they may be subjected, and have absolutely refused to go into any new undertakings until matters have assumed a more stable form. Said the President of a large building concern yesterday:

"An owner came to me a day or two ago and asked me to get him up figures for a new building on a property which he owns. I refused point blank, and told him to come around perhaps in a month or two, and I might be glad to talk to him, but that until the existing troubles had been straightened out, and, in fact, the entire building situation cleared, so that we could have a reasonable prospect of uninterrupted work, this company would refuse positively to look at any new business."

The present disagreement between the Employers' Association and the Building Trades Alliance is having an effect wholly different from last year's strike, so that the Building Department records give only a slight idea of the damage which is being done. Last year's trouble, involving practically the entire building industry, instead of a few trades, as is the case this year, began brewing before May 1, so that it resulted in a complete hold-up of operations—the actual failure to begin work upon structures for which plans had been filed and contracts let. The lock-out and retaliatory strikes which have been in progress for the last few weeks have for the most part involved only the so-called "finishing trades"—that is, the plumbers, plasterers, tile layers, and so on.

Any attempt to estimate in dollars and cents the loss occasioned by such a partial tie-up as this would be nothing more than a rough approximation, but its indirect effects, leading to delay in finishing structures, are very serious and likewise little appreciated by the casual observer, who is apt to think, because he sees a large gang of men at work on a building, that the strike don't seem to amount to much." This was well illustrated last week, when a group of three men, one of whom happened to be a builder of skyscrapers, stood at Broadway and Pine Street looking over at the new Trinity Building, where the bricklayers and stone masons were at work and the ironworkers seemed to be putting another story on the big skeleton every few minutes.

"Everything seems to be going all right over there," remarked one of the party.

"In a way, yes," added the builder, "but if you'd put up as many of those things as I have you'd know, in addition to all the work that's going on there now, that just at this stage a lot of water pipes and steam pipes ought to be going in, and other parts of the work going ahead—parts that can be done now better than at any other time, and that, if not done now, will delay by so much the completion of that building. And when you consider that that property, ground and building, will represent an investment of nearly $4,000,000, and that when rented it will produce an income of about $1,000 a day, you may realize that days, and almost minutes, count."

It is the delay in the completion of buildings, of which there is usually no mention in compilations showing the cost of building strikes, which in the aggregate is probably almost as large as either of the other two more important items—the loss to contractors and that to employes in wages. The renting seasons in this city are so strictly adhered to—office buildings from May 1, stores and loft buildings from Feb. 1, and apartments and dwellings from Oct. 1—that a structure of whatever class that is not ready for its proper renting period, even though it be delayed only a few weeks, faces the almost certain prospect of being run at a substantial loss for a year.

The owner is confronted with a dilemma either to operate a building for the benefit of a handful of tenants, or to keep it closed altogether for nearly a year, which is liable to create a bad impression and interfere with the building's ultimate success. A good application of this principle has been afforded by the new Barclay Building, at Broadway and Duane Street. The structure was begun in the spring of 1903, and was completely held up for several months by last year's strike. When the strike had been in progress for some time, one of its owners was the subject of sympathetic remarks among a group of tenant men because the work had been delayed so long.

"That kind of talk was all right two or three months ago," he replied, "but we've forgotten it all now. We figure out that it will actually be money in our pockets to have this strike go on for three or four months more. Things have gone so far now that there is no chance of getting that building ready for May, 1904. Even though we went right ahead immediately we could not have it finished before next September or October, and would be obliged to run it at a large loss for the following seven or eight months. All we want now is to have it ready for the May renting in 1905."

Losses to contractors on account of strikes are diminished somewhat by the strike clauses in their contracts, which generally provide that the contractor shall not be liable for delays occasioned by the abandonment of the work without his consent or through agencies over which he has no control. The contractor is, however, subjected to considerable loss owing to expenses of keeping up his plant, and on account of the interdependence of the various trades, the stoppage of work in some branches is likely to be almost as costly to him as a complete shutdown.

"I would like to suggest one important change in the method of handling large building operations," said a prominent contractor. "Perhaps I should have said two changes. In the first place there is to-day too much effort in the direction of finishing buildings in the shortest possible time. Work on structures that ought to take a year is crowded into seven or eight months, and those that ought to have a year and a half or two years for their construction are put up in a year. I do not mean to go to any extreme in the other direction, but allow a reasonable time, and I do not think that the cost would be materially greater than it is under the present system, when every little delay means so much extra pay for overtime if a building is to come through on its express train schedule. My other suggestion is this: After a reasonable time has been set for the completion of the contract, keep the date so far as possible known only to the owners and the general contractor. The idea that a building must be finished by a certain date is to-day one of the most effective clubs in the hands of union agents and labor disturbers generally, and if it could be taken away from them the settlement of difficulties could be undertaken upon a much more favorable basis."

Brown Pens Case Dismissed.

WHITE PLAINS, Sept. 3.—The complaint against John J. Brown, President of the Village of White Plains, for his alleged acceptance of a pass from the New York Central Railroad was dismissed by County Judge Platt here this morning, owing to the non-appearance of counsel for the complainant.

COTTON CROP IN TEXAS.

Buyers' Association Reports Decrease of 2% Per Cent.

Miller & Co. of 100 Broadway made public yesterday the following news regarding cotton in Texas:

"Through the courtesy of Mr. F. C. Olde of Waco, Texas, we have received by wire the weekly report of the Southwestern Cotton Buyers' Association of Texas. This body is composed of nearly all the cotton dealers in that State, and its reports are considered the best index available of the crop. It will be noted that the report treats solely and entirely of Texas.

"'The Southwestern Cotton Buyers' Association's weekly report is as follows:

"'Comparing expected total receipts this season with actual receipts last season, replies from our correspondents this week report an expected decrease of 2% per cent. in quantity of bales for Texas proper for the current season. It is proper to state that no canvass has been made of conditions in Indian Territory, as our crop advices do not extend any further than the growing belt of Texas.

"'An analysis of replies according to sections shows five northwestern, north central, and southeastern districts of the State expect somewhat more cotton than last year, while a deficiency is expected in the middle west, southwest, and eastern districts. The cooler nights have apparently brought some relief to the plant, but continued hot dry weather is generally complained of. Cotton has opened rapidly during the past week, and the weather is favorable for picking. While labor is reported scarce, every endeavor is being used by the farmers to gather their crops.'"

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

Out of Town.

JOHNSON-DUNBAR MILLS.—The Johnson-Dunbar Mills Company of North Adams, Mass., manufacturer of cotton goods, has made an assignment to William H. Prendergast of Bridgeton, R. I. Its difficulties are attributed to an unfavorable cotton market and to lack of capital. The liabilities, it is understood, amount to several hundred thousand dollars. Some of the creditors are New Yorkers. The Williams A. Slater Mill Company of Boston attached the mills yesterday.

MONONGAHELA FOUNDRY AND FORGE COMPANY.—George P. Rhoades was yesterday appointed receiver for the Monongahela Foundry and Forge Company of Pittsburg, capitalized at $75,000. The indebtedness of the concern is $70,000.

Receiver for Lone Pine Mining Company

Judge Lacombe, in the United States Circuit Court yesterday, signed an order appointing Dr. E. R. L. Gould and John J. Townsend of this city receivers for the Lone Pine Mining Company of Prescott, Ariz. The court fixed the receivers' bond at $1,000 each, which may be increased later. The application was made by Francis Freeland Hagaham, one of the stockholders, and declares that the affairs of the Lone Pine Mining Company are badly entangled.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

WILLIAM JACOBUS.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against William Jacobus, wholesale dealer in old metals, junk, &c., at 307 Water Street, by L. Sternheimer, doing business as L. Rose & Co., a creditor for $1,257 for brass and copper wire sold to Mr. Jacobus. It was alleged that he is insolvent, and during July and August removed the major part of his stock, paid certain creditors large sums of money, and delivered to them large quantities of goods without consideration and in payment of debts, which constituted preferential payments. Deputy Sheriff Porges received an attachment against Mr. Jacobus for $858 in favor of Harris Kasder, and when he went to make a levy the place of business was found to have been closed for several days. Mr. Jacobus was formerly in business at Paterson, N. J., and started here in August, 1902, as the William Jacobus Company, which he succeeded in November, 1903. In December last he claimed to have assets of $25,500 and liabilities of $7,689. It is said that most of his creditors are out of town, and inquiries have been made from Hartford, New Haven, Providence, Bridgeport, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Utica, Montreal, and Toronto.

WILLIAM P. LENNON.—William P. Lennon, real estate agent, of 1,800 Lexington Avenue, formerly a builder, has filed a petition in bankruptcy as a poor person unable to raise the money to pay the fees, having been in Ludlow Street Jail for ten days. His liabilities are $50,363, and he has no assets. Among the creditors are Bridget Malloy of Astoria, as administratrix of Patrick Malloy, $20,000, suit for damages pending for the death of Patrick Malloy; Henry Degener, $10,000; Anna J. Lennon, $5,357; John Thornton, $3,500, and the City of New York, $750. Mr. Lennon began building operations in 1879, erected many flats in Yorkville, and made, it was said, $100,000. In February, 1895, a building which he was erecting at 151 and 153 Orchard Street collapsed, and five workmen were killed. After that accident he did business for several years in his wife's name. Many judgments have been obtained against him.

St. Regis Yacht Club Races—Fireworks at Lake Placid—In Other Mountain Resorts.

Special to The New York Times.

PAUL SMITH'S, N. Y., Sept. 3.—The Saturday events of the St. Regis Yacht Club are proving to be the most interesting races ever held in the Adirondacks. Last Saturday eighteen boats entered, including punkies, catboats, and boats of the Idem class. There were nine different starting guns, bue each yacht got away well on its handicap under the starting of Simeon J. Drake, Chairman of the Race Committee.

Harold Stokes won the event for yachts sailing under jib and mainsail; Ogden Mills Reid was second, Mr. Henderson third, and Miss Stokes fourth.

The Heron, owned by Mr. Hotchkiss, won in the class for catboats; Mr. Hotchkiss's Osawa was also second, and the Achi Kochi, sailed by A. W. Durkee, was third.

Seven boats of the Idem class were in the race, which was won by the Peekaboo, sailed by Hayward McAlpin; Lewis S. Thompson's Flying Fretz was second, and Commodore Stokes was third with the Shadow.

The fourth race for boats of the Idem class was won by the Malta, sailed by F. L. Slade; the Kingfisher, Mr. Hotchkiss's boat, was second; the Water Witch, with Ogden Mills Reid at the tiller, third, and the Shadow, sailed by Commodore Anson Phelps Stokes, fourth. Ogden Mills Reid won the first race in the series of the Idem class with the Water Witch. Mr. Slade's Malta was second and Mr. Hotchkiss's Kingfisher third.

Labor Day in the Adirondacks will be one of the happiest times of the year among the camps and campers, for there are to be several large house parties at that time. Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Hollins will have a special car and join Mme. Yznaga at her cottage at Paul Smith's. Mme. Yznaga went to Montreal this week to meet her daughter, the Duchess of Manchester, who returned with her and who will spend some time here.

Edward A. McCullough, accompanied by a number of Yale friends, will make the journey to Paul Smith's in a special car to enjoy Labor Day.

S. J. Drake, Jr., Craig Drake, and Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Drake will be the guests at S. J. Drake's camp on Spitfire Lake during the holiday.

Whitelaw Reid will go to New York tomorrow to attend a dinner in honor of D. O. Mills, who will observe a birthday anniversary.

One of the interesting functions of the week was a sheet and pillow case surprise party at Point Rush, the camp of Mrs. Robert Hoe, Monday evening in honor of Miss Thyrza Benson, granddaughter of Mrs. Hoe. There were fifty young people present from the camps of Pine St. Regis and Spitfire Lakes. Young men and young women alike wore pillow cases over their heads and were gowned in sheets, which served to completely mask them. The functions at Mrs. Hoe's camp are distinct in their features, and the young people enjoy themselves in the odd forms of entertainment.

Prof. Richardson and son and daughter, Mrs. E. T. Carter, Miss Birkwood, the Rev. Mr. Daniels, and the Misses Linn have lately joined the house party at Point Rush.

Mr. and Mrs. Moses Taylor and family, who have been occupying the camp of Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Barney, returned to New York this week and Mr. and Mrs. Barney are in camp for September.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid entertained fifty guests at a musicale at Camp Wildair Thursday, when Miss Mary Pearsall Field and Tom Beynon sang and Clarence Reynolds played the accompaniments. Milbank, and Mrs. E. L. Trudeau were among the patronesses of a musicale that took place at the Casino at Paul Smith's Monday afternoon when Tom Beynon, tenor soloist of Calvary Episcopal Church, sang, with Clarence Reynolds at the piano. The affair was the one occasion of the season that called the visitors to the St. Reges Chain together under like circumstances and was made much of by every one.

Mrs. James Carstairs entertained a number of guests in a novel manner Friday when a journey was made to Eagle Island, where the guides prepared a dinner of fish and flapjacks.

There are many arrivals at the Ampersand for September. There is a lively interest manifest in cottages and cabins, and the month promises to be one of the best in the history of the house.

WHAT LAKE PLACID ENJOYS.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., Sept. 3.—The elaborate manner in which visitors to the Adirondacks entertain was never illustrated to a better degree than on the occasion of the entertainment by J. Wesley Durham, the Democratic leader of Philadelphia, of a number of Philadelphia friends at his camp, Kilkare, Lake Placid, Monday evening. The function at Kilkare was particularly notable in the pyrotechnical display, of which a feature was the exploding of several hundred thousand firecrackers. The firecrackers were fastened to strings about thirty feet in length, and the ends of the string were drawn into a tree top by the aid of pulleys. The firecrackers attached to the lower end of the strings were first lighted, and the fire traveled up to the end in the tree. There were eight strings of 25,000 each and three strings of 150,000 crackers each. On each of the larger strings there was a bunch of 20,000 crackers. Each one of the large strings cost $80. In addition to the strings of firecrackers there were various other bits that go to make up a pyrotechnical display, and the noise and the light created on this occasion were the greatest of its kind that has taken place at Lake Placid. Mr. Durham spends much of his time at Whiteface Inn, where he has taken apartments for the members of his family.

The annual open tournament of the Stevens House, Lake Placid Golf Club, was notable in the victory of T. M. Sherman, son of Congressman Sherman, who defeated C. E. Machold in the finals by 12 up and 11 to play. In the finals for the second sixteen, H. B. Reynolds defeated J. W. Howell. Harold Naylor was the winner of the event for the losing eight, defeating Bigelow in the finals by 1 up after 37 holes. An interesting feature of this match was the fact that upon the beginning of the last eighteen holes Naylor was 5 down. G. W. Butts made the best score of the qualifying round, getting a 35 and a 37. Michael Daly of New York won the handicap Saturday afternoon, having the best score, which was 69, and T. M. Sherman won the cup for the best net score, which was 72 for that day.

A large company of Loon Lake golfers visited Lake Placid Tuesday and played a match with the representatives of the Stevens House, the Stevens House winning by a good margin.

The following golfers from Elizabethtown were also defeated in a match with the Stevens House team: Judge H. A. Gildersleeve, S. D. Bowers, C. E. Baldwin, Gregory Palmer, Howard Brittin, W. S. Kellogg, L. B. Evans, B. F. Stetson, J. L. Harkness, W. Evans, and A. W. Harkness. The team was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Baird, Miss Noble, Mr. and Mrs. William D. Leonard, Mrs. Joel M. Benedict, Miss Burdick, Miss Evans, Miss Kellogg, and Miss Denman.

The championship of the Lake Placid Baseball League has been won by the players of the Hotel Grand View, who were successful in each game of the series.

The annual open regatta at Lake Placid took place Wednesday on the Whiteface Inn course on West Lake and was entirely successful. About 2,000 people witnessed the various races. The results were as follows:

Early Autumn Days At Saratoga Springs

Preparing for a Harvest of Politics — Events of the Week.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, Sept. 3.—Many thousands find the early Autumn the finest of the Saratoga season. The vast majority of the present visitors are regular patrons. Functions of divers kind still round out the daily programme, and the season swings along with pleasing regularity. It will be only a few days more when delegates and others will swarm here and this place will become a political encampment for a fortnight or so. It will be a harvest of politics.

One of the leading attractions this week was the continuation of the annual tournament of the Saratoga Polo Club. The trophies contested for were the Grand Union Hotel Cups, the United States Hotel Cups, and the Hitchcock Challenge Cup. Albany's two teams and the Saratogas were the competitors. The participants embraced Raymond Belmont, R. W. Smith, H. M. Sage, J. G. Averill, Harrison K. Bird, George C. Treadwell, John A. Manning, F. S. von Stade, Victor G. Mather, C. L. A. Whitney, F. K. HOTEL CHAMPLAIN SPORTS.

Special to The New York Times.

HOTEL CHAMPLAIN, N. Y., Sept. 3.—With the advent of cool, clear days, and crisp, snappy air, golfers are beginning to manifest more "go" in their playing. The higher the elevation the more pronounced does it become. This was quite noticeable when the Cobble Hill Golf Club came down from the Keene Valley to play a friendly match with the Hotel Champlain Golf Club, beating the latter 11 to 9. Following are the scores: Cobble Hill—Bowers, S. D., 2; Palmer, Gregory, 0; Brittin, Howard, 1; Evans, L., 0; Kellogg, W. S., 0; Gildersleeve, A. A., 0; Harkness, L., 0; Stetson, B. SADDLE PARTIES AT WESTPORT

Special to The New York Times.

WESTPORT, Sept. 3.—The delightfully cool clear days the past week have filled the roads about Westport with riding and driving parties. The Count and Countess Oriowski, who are visiting Frederick W. Stevens at the Inn, take great pleasure in this form of recreation, and do not miss a day. Mr. and Mrs. Tunis G. Bergen of Brooklyn and Mr. B. G. Talbert's party from New York spend much of their time in this way. J. Porter Crosby of Boston, Frank A. Bulley, and Dr. Beverley Robinson of New York are seen on horseback daily. Dr. Robinson is particularly devoted to the saddle. Gilman S. Low of Boston gave several highly enjoyable "saddle parties" last week. Miss Molly Ripley, the Misses Curtis, and F. A. Bulley were among the guests who rode with him on the moonlight ride to Elizabethtown and back.

The tennis tournaments were pulled off last week, and were the absorbing events for the guests at the Inn. The mixed doubles were won by Miss Helen Tomes and Mr. Howard after a close and spirited contest with Miss Ripley and Mr. Crosby. H. F. Tailer of Brooklyn and John Osborne were easily the victors in the men's doubles, defeating Will Arthur and Wilder Bellamy. The most exciting match of the entire meet was furnished by Mr. Rothermal of Philadelphia and W. R. Buchanan in the final contest in the men's singles.

Samuel K. Probasco of New York spends his entire mornings on the links, perfecting his play for his daily match in the afternoon with Major Kennet of St. Louis. Mr. Probasco and H. R. Mabouisse of New Orleans have been contesting a very close and interesting series of foursomes with J. P. Blair of New Orleans and H. P. Tailer. A charming "golf tea" was given last Wednesday afternoon at the tea house on the links.

AT RICHFIELD SPRINGS.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHFIELD SPRINGS, Sept. 3.—The hotel registers this week chronicle many new arrivals, some of whom are attracted by the genuine country fair and horse show exhibition at the driving park. Others come because Richfield is now donning her loveliest dress. As yet only an occasional tree is in flaming garb, but this is a promise of the real glories which the September and October days hold in store. Wise is he who defers his flight to the city.

Many of the hotels are deferring their closing until the 1st of October, and the Tuller will not write "Finis" on its books until the middle of that month. That is also the date for the closing of the bathing establishment.

Señor Gonzalo de Quesada, the Cuban Minister, who came here for the baths, still lingers on at the Earlington. On last Friday Señor de Quesada, accompanied by Señora de Quesada, their children, and Mrs. and Miss O'Naughten made the trolley trip to Oneonta, where they remained over night.

Trolley journeys have been the thing all the season. On Friday Anthony Comstock conducted a large party from Stamford to this village, three special cars on the Oneonta, Cooperstown and Richfield Springs trolley railroad being put at their service.

A large number of the hotel and cottage guests, by invitation of the Richfield Springs Agricultural Society, visited the annual exhibition.

An attractive feature of Tuesday afternoon's programme was the guests' horse show in which Mrs. William Pitt Earle, Sr., won the cup and blue ribbon for the best equipage with two horses, and Mr. Robert W. Tailer secured the red ribbon.

In the best appointed turnabouts W. P. Earle was awarded a blue ribbon and a handsome cup; the second honor was given to Miss Susan Greene.

Miss Gertrude Wood and Miss Marie Tailer, the young daughters of Mrs. W. Demeses Wood and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Tailer, won the first and second in the pony equipage.

Mrs. J. W. Allen and Mr. Francis Prand carried off the prizes in the saddle-horse contest.

A benefit to defray the expense of the bi-weekly concerts by the Richfield Springs band has been arranged at the Berkeley-Walontha for Friday evening. Mr. Augustus Merrill has charge of the programme and Prof. Robert J. Hughes of the Utica Conservatory of Music and Mrs. Hughes will assist. They are now staying at the Berkeley.

Progressive tennis occupied ladies' day at the Walontha Club last Friday. Mrs. Cattell and Miss Cattell of the Tuller were the hostesses of the afternoon and presented the handsome prizes to Miss Pauline Swift, Miss Hawley, George Sunnicliff, and Mr. Richardson.

Stamford's Prolonged Season.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Sept. 2.—All the boarding houses have a registration far in advance of last year this time. The Rexmore is seventy-five ahead; Churchill Hall over a hundred, Kendal Place twenty-five, and the other houses proportionately. The season will be a much longer one than Stamford has ever yet enjoyed, and now seems certain to extend to October. The weather continues perfect, and already the trees on the mountain sides are tinged with red and gold, making the scenery surpassingly beautiful. Golf continues to be the favorite form of recreation, and twice a week a dozen golf balls have been offered in an impromptu tournament. The lowest score of the season thus far is 34, made by Dr. Beadle, the winner of the championship tournament this season.

Paper Chase at Greenwich.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Sept. 3.—The paper chase from the Edgewood Inn last Saturday resulted in successful sport. It included twenty-one entries, of whom nine were women. The men's prize was won by John Aspegren, who overcame the ten-minute start of the hares and came up with them at the finish. The woman's prize fell to Mrs. H. Durant Cheever, who rode a remarkable race, distancing the field and coming home but one minute behind the hares.

Final arrangements are nearing completion for the annual "Harvest Ball," to be held at Edgewood Inn to-morrow night. This is the banner social event of the season.

LIFE AT FRONTENAC.

Special to The New York Times.

FRONTENAC, Sept. 3.—The closing days of the society season have been the occasion for a number of delightful events of various kinds. The guests at the Hotel Frontenac have been making the past few days lively with the farewell parties and picnics. One of the pleasantest of these was a picnic and shore dinner given on the grounds at Watson's Bay by Mr. and Mrs. George H. Humphreys of New York to their friends at the Hotel Frontenac. Their guests, who made the trip on the yachts Columbia and Charlietta, were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tate, and I. P. Smith of New York; Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Stockwell of Brooklyn, D. E. Garrison of St. Louis, and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Frazer, Mrs. George P. Hier, Miss Helen Everson, and Miss Annie Agan of Syracuse.

An unusual event for a big Summer hotel was the birthday dinner given to Mrs. Margaret Sabine of Syracuse at the Hotel Frontenac Monday evening, when she celebrated her eighty-sixth birthday. Mrs. Sabine is a beautiful old lady, who by reason of her dignified bearing and sparkling good humor has been universally termed the Queen of the Frontenac.

A novel entertainment was the college euchre held at the Hotel Frontenac Tuesday evening. There were fifty-four players at the nine tables, which were trimmed with colors of some of the representative colleges of the country. Tables were in play representing Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Columbia, Syracuse, University Pennsylvania, Cornell, Dartmouth, and University of Michigan. After each game the players returned to their own table, bringing with them the color favors of the college visited if they won and leaving their favors if they lost. The Syracuse University table, captained by Mrs. L. W. Stockwell of Brooklyn, won the prizes, which were solid silver souvenir spoons for each player.

The grand water carnival at Alexandria Bay the last three days of this week is one of the first projects of the sort that has ever been attempted here. On the programme have been aquatic sports of all sorts, including some very interesting motor boat and sculling races. The St. Lawrence is becoming one of the centres of motor boat racing, as was shown in the fact that the three fastest boats in the country—the Vingt-et-Un II., Miss, and Standard—were here on Friday for the great race to decide the championship of these waters.

President W. H. Newman of the New York Central, with Mrs. Newman, has been spending a few days at the Thousand Islands. They were guests at Frontenac.

AT JERSEY SHORE and INLAND RESORTS

ATLANTIC CITY, Sept. 3.—The Summer rush is about at an end, but even at that many of the beach-front hotels are well filled, and there is every indication that a large number of people will be here over to-morrow, and perhaps the greater portion of them will remain over Labor Day. There is no doubt that despite the St. Louis Fair and its being Presidential year, more people have visited Atlantic City this year than in any year past.

The Police Department is making another crusade against palmists and soothsayers. Several of the palmists have been arrested and fined under one of the State's old blue laws which holds that fortune telling is a misdemeanor.

After a separation of more than fifty years, Robert and William Wilkinson, brothers, met at the home of the former, on Georgia Avenue, this city, this week. They separated while both were residents of Liverpool, Robert coming to America and William going to New Zealand. Both prospered, but in all these intervening years never wrote to each other, each believing the other to be dead. A sister of the men received an anonymous letter a couple of months ago, saying that her brother was alive and living in New Zealand. She began hunting for him, and her efforts were rewarded.

At the Marlborough House weekly Sunday night concert Mrs. Elizabeth Barrows, formerly of Boston, commenced an engagement lasting through September. Mrs. Barrows is a sister of Mme. Louise Homer of the Metropolitan opera company of New York.

The coming month will be a busy one at the Hotel Rudolf. There have been engaged, thus far, accommodations for over 700 people during the three days' tour in connection with Labor Day. Charles F. Myers will give a big ball on that night, and one of the largest sailing parties that ever left the Inlet has also been arranged by the Rudolf management.

G. Tulzog, a Turkish engineer, is here. He comes to study the methods of American engineering.

OCEAN GROVE MEETINGS.

Special to The New York Times.

OCEAN GROVE, N. J., Sept. 3.—With the closing of the camp meeting this week there was a general exodus from the Grove. The resort, however, is by no means depopulated, for thousands of visitors will linger until October to enjoy the bathing and fishing. The Auditorium will be open every Sabbath for a month to come, and the Holiness Meeting will be continued daily indefinitely. The "farewell" service in the Young People's Meeting will be held to-morrow morning.

ASBURY'S BIG CARNIVAL.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Sept. 3.—Carnival week, with its manifold features, attracted thousands of visitors to the Asbury Park hotels, as well as an army of transient sightseers from the many resorts in this vicinity. The most novel feature of the four days' celebration, barring, of course, the ever-popular baby parade, was the masquerade fête. This took place on the boardwalk Tuesday evening. There were ten thousand costume maskers in the go-as-you-please procession, and they visited in turn the Casino and Arcade and the Coleman, Plaza, West End, Ocean, Marlborough, Columbia, Brunswick, Lafayette, Bristol, and Monmouth hotels, where mask balls were given.

There were over five hundred babies and children in the parade, which was easily the prettiest one ever witnessed in Asbury Park.

The Beach Commissioners have decided to install a steam heating plant in the Asbury Avenue Casino at once. The building will be kept open all the year round, and the numerous sun parlors and pavilions on the boardwalk. It has also been decided to continue the daily band concerts until Oct. 1.

Several hundred New Jersey Republicans assembled in the Beach Auditorium yesterday and ratified the Chicago nominations.

With but one or two exceptions, all the hotels near the beach will remain open until October and many of them for two months to come.

LONG BRANCH DOINGS.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Sept. 3.—After Labor Day the Summer season, as far as the hotel business is concerned, will be about at an end. The majority of the cottagers, however, will remain another month.

The City Council is trying to purchase the ocean front, in order that a boardwalk can be put down and a pavilion erected. Everything is under way for the erection of some new hotels during the Winter months.

Mr. and Mrs. Hurd of Norwood Park entertained a number of their friends from Norwood Park and Elberon last evening in the Casino at the former place.

The Croquet Committee of the Hollywood Golf Club has arranged for a tournament, consisting of four balls singles, to commence next Tuesday morning.

An effort is being made by New York cottagers who have Summer country seats on Cedar Avenue running through Norwood Park to have a stone road built by the State.

Elaborate preparations are being made by the cottagers on the Rumson Road and at Seabright for an amateur and professional circus, to take place on Labor Day, to benefit the Monmouth Memorial Hospital, at Long Branch.

It was announced this week that Herman Wronkow of New York had signed a contract with the Hildreth estate for the big West End Hotel and cottages, at West End, taking in about twenty acres, and not Mrs. Hanlon, whose name was first mentioned as the purchaser of the property. The hotel will be improved.

Mayor George B. McClellan has returned to his country seat, at the Reservation, Long Branch, after an extended automobile trip through New England.

Special to The New York Times.

CAPE MAY, N. J., Sept. 3.—With the coming of September there has been but the slightest decrease in the number of visitors to this resort, and the crowds which are here to-day are almost as large as were those of last Saturday. After Tuesday, however, there will be a considerable decrease in the number of transient visitors. Most of those who are here will remain over Labor Day, which has come to be the wind up of the Summer seasons. A very large number of persons have taken apartments at the hotels for the present month. The proprietors of the larger houses hope to remain open until the middle of the month.

MANY GUESTS AT SPRING LAKE.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRING LAKE, Sept. 3.—Mr. and Mrs. Martin Malony, prominent Spring Lake Summer residents, are enjoying a trip to the St. Louis Exposition. A pleasant incident of the carnival recently held here was the presentation of a handsome stop watch operated by electricity to Loren R. Johnson, manager of the Essex and Sussex. The inventor, A. L. McMurtry of New York, gave the timepiece and said that it was the first one of the kind in America. It was made especially for him in Switzerland. The watch is used in timing automobiles in races.

The Essex and Sussex are entertaining a remarkably large number of guests, who are delighted with the splendid surroundings afforded by these pretty and comfortable houses.

FEMALE MINSTRELS AT BELMAR

Special to The New York Times.

BELMAR, Sept. 3.—The Neptune Minstrel Company, under the management of David H. Cochran of New York, gave its initial performance at the popular hotel after which the company was named on Saturday evening. The artists were women guests of the hotel. The money realized will be donated to the Monmouth Memorial Hospital, at Long Branch. Dancing followed the minstrelsy.

The attractions at the Belmar Club were of the usual entertaining variety. Phony whist was played on Monday night.

Progressive euchres at the Neptune, the Buena Vista, and the Brunswick on separate evenings this week claimed the attention of the guests at these hostelries. In each instance pretty prizes were awarded to the successful contestants.

LONG ISLAND FOX HUNTS.

Season of Sport Has Begun at Southampton.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTHAMPTON, Sept. 3.—The 1st of September brings something of an exodus of cottagers, although a number of families will remain to enjoy the Fall months. Those who have closed their cottages during the week are Col. Samuel E. Tillman, who left on Monday for West Point; Edward M. Phelps, who has gone to New Rochelle; T. Wyman Porter and Richard Mortimer. William B. Hornblower and family have gone to the mountains to spend a month.

The fox hunts are one of the especial attractions of the Fall. The Essex Hounds are quartered at Watermill, and drag hunts are held on Mondays and Saturdays, with runs for live foxes on Wednesdays. Charles Pfizer, Jr., who is at Southampton, is Master of the Hounds, and Richard Newton, Jr., of East Hampton, is Acting Master of the Hounds. The whip is J. G. Wills of Morristown, N. J. The start for to-day's hunt was made from East Hampton at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. A Labor Day hunt will be held, starting at the Hay Ground schoolhouse at the same hour.

Col. Archibald Gracie and Mrs. Gracie, who are guests at the Irving House, gave a lawn party a few days ago for their daughter Edith.

Another junior tennis tournament has been in progress during the week on the Meadow Club courts. The prize is a silver cup given by Masters Charles and Lyman Butler.

RACES AT EASTHAMPTON.

Special to The New York Times.

EASTHAMPTON, Sept. 3.—Labor Day races will be held on Monday on the grounds of the Easthampton Driving Park Association. There will be both running and trotting races, and, as a large number of entries have been made, an interesting meet is assured. The association has recently made great improvements in the grounds, and the track is in excellent condition.

There will also be a bogey handicap golf match on the Maidstone Club links on Labor Day.

In the tennis tournament of the Maidstone Club, S. A. Beardsley was awarded the Herrick Cup, having won it three times; H. H. Williams, Jr., was the winner in the handicap singles, S. A. Beardsley and Seymour Johnson won the men's doubles, Miss Brown and Dr. Hollister won the mixed doubles, the Misses Wildey were victorious in the ladies' doubles, Miss Mattie Strong was twice winner of the ladies' scratch singles, and George Randall was the winner of the junior singles.

Richard Mansfield's schooner yacht Amorita has been anchored in Fort Pond Bay during the week. Mr. Mansfield has been staying for a few days at the Montauk.

Commander Hews has been elected a Director of the Narragansett Club to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Dr. Rossiter Johnson. Walter T. McCoy and Dr. Duffield have also been elected Director for two years.

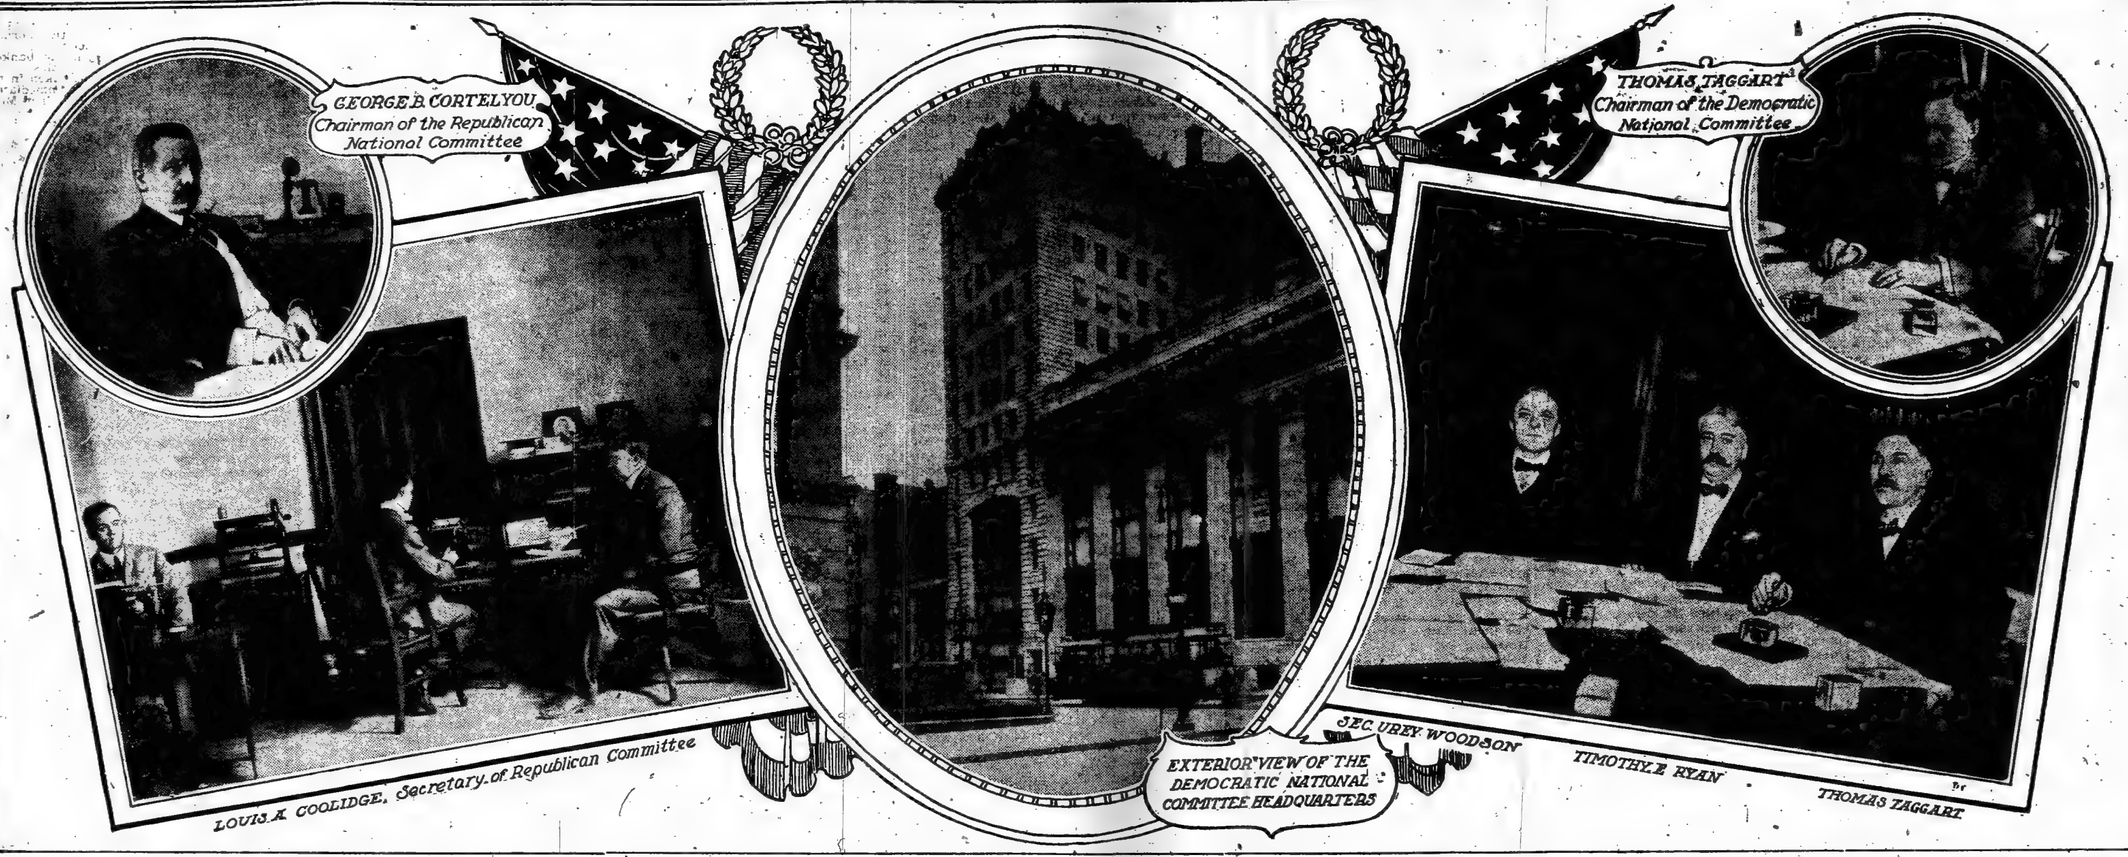
GOLF AT SHELTER ISLAND.

Special to The New York Times.

SHELTER ISLAND, L. I., Sept. 3.—Votaries of golf at this resort are enthusiastically anticipating the programme of golfing events which are to occur during the coming two weeks on the course of the Shelter Island Golf Club and which promise to be of an exceptionally high order. The qualifying round for the President's Cup at eighteen holes, medal play, handicap, began to-day. On Labor Day the best eight scores will start at match

HOW GREAT CAMPAIGNS ARE ADVERTISED

The Cost of Winning Elections—Where the Money Goes—Comedy and Tragedy Behind the Scenes.



HALF way between Esopus and Washington, by political measurement, is the Century Building opposite the Waldorf-Astoria at Thirty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue. It is the home of the Democratic National Committee. Half way between Sagamore Hill and the White House is the Manhattan Life Building at Twenty-third Street and Madison Avenue—the abode of the Republican National Committee. Whether Judge Alton B. Parker or Theodore Roosevelt will respectively reach or remain at the White House for the next four years will depend largely upon the number of voters figuratively buttonholed by their respective campaign managers between now and November 8. He who catches the most eyes and ears between now and then will win; and the winner will have been the best advertiser. This is why the Democratic and Republican National Committees will spend pretty close to $5,000,000 in advertising within the next ten weeks.

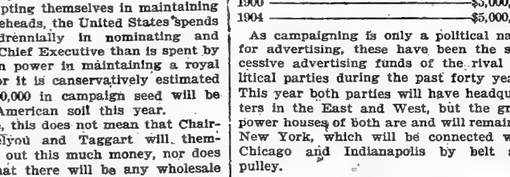
Rivalling even a patent medicine magician and mesmerizing the bargain-counter prestidigitateur in his methods of attracting public attention are Chairmen Thomas Taggart and George B. Cortelyou in practicing the gentle art of sowing dollars and reaping votes. As an advertising venture it is the most interesting and extensive in existence, and probably its interest is enhanced by the fact that, despite a prevailing opinion that certain monarchies are bankrupting themselves in maintaining royal figureheads, the United States spends more quadrennially in nominating and electing a Chief Executive than is spent by any foreign power in maintaining a royal family. For it is canservatively estimated that $20,000,000 in campaign seed will be sown on American soil this year.

Of course, this does not mean that Chairmen Cortelyou and Taggart will themselves dole out this much money, nor does it mean that there will be any wholesale debauchery of voters. For, as before stated, only one-fourth of this stupendous sum will be checked out by Treasurers Bliss of the Republican National Committee and George Foster Peabody of the Democratic Committee. It is explained in the statement made to a writer for THE SUNDAY TIMES by a veteran campaign leader that for every dollar spent by the National Committees four dollars will be spent by the combined State Committees.

According to the same statistician, nearly $25,000,000 was spent four years ago in nominating and electing President McKinley. While both parties are more prosperous now than they were in 1896, it was explained, the Republicans are so confident of victory that they will, through their National Committee, not spend more than $2,000,000 in trying to maintain President Roosevelt in the White House. On the other hand the Democrats, taking their cue from the rival party, will probably keep their expenses within $3,000,000, although it is generally conceded that their campaign fund might be twice as much if they cared to make it so.

Unless one can get behind the scenes and account for this lavish expenditure few probably will believe that so many millions can be used by the great party leaders in so short a time. With each succeeding Presidential election it has become easier and easier for the managers on both sides to use money bounteously. A glance behind the scenes will readily reveal how it is spent.

Before doing this it is of passing interest to note the increasing expenses of National campaigns since Abraham Lincoln was re-elected in 1864. Here is a diagram:



As campaigning is only a political name for advertising, these have been the successive advertising funds of the rival political parties during the past forty years. This year both parties will have headquarters in the East and West, but the great power houses of both are and will remain in New York, which will be connected with Chicago and Indianapolis by belt and pulley.

The Itching Palm.

Chairman Taggart and his understudies, after rehearsing their rôles with a thoroughness that augurs well for the Parker star, began their short season last month, when the curtain rose at the West Thirty-fourth Street Democratic headquarters. Of the endless procession filing by the West Thirty-fourth Street pay window a great majority are persons whose palms itch for some of the three million dollars which are waiting there to be paid out in salaries and advertising.

Chairman Taggart has the large southeast corner room on the third floor of the handsome new building, his office adjoining that of August Belmont, which in turn leads into the office of Treasurer George Foster Peabody. Extending west on the Thirty-fourth Street side are the offices of Chairman Daniel O'Connell of the Speakers' Bureau, Joseph T. Fanning, political secretary to Chairman Taggart; members of the Executive Committee, headed by William F. Sheehan; Assistant Secretary W. C. Terry and Secretary Urey Woodson, in the order named.

Besieged by Fakirs.

Corresponding almost identically with the general plan at the Democratic headquarters is that of Chairman Cortelyou and his adjutants at Republican headquarters. Only one marked difference characterizes the rival headquarters in that Chairman Cortelyou is only separated from Secretary Louis A. Coolidge by a small reception room, while Chairman Taggart and Secretary Woodson are about as far apart as possible in the allotted space. This is explained by the different methods in force at the respective headquarters in dickering with the army of fakirs and inventors of campaign novelties which is now besieging both camps.

Chairman Cortelyou is making a strenuous effort to meet personally every hawker of campaign novelties who may offer to serve the G. O. P. for a consideration. If the plan seems feasible to the Chairman he sends the visitor to Secretary Coolidge to arrange the details or report on them. Chairman Taggart, on the other side, has chosen to have all such visitors referred first to Secretary Woodson, who must pass on them before they reach the throne room. An hour spent with Secretary Woodson or with Chairman Cortelyou will furnish not only ample entertainment to the onlooker, but will reveal vistas of tragedy and comedy unimagined in the workaday world.

That tragedy is only comedy inverted was evidenced to Secretary Woodson a few days ago by a campaign novelty vendor who had haunted Democratic headquarters from the moment the curtain went up. He at first insisted upon a secret conference with Chairman Taggart, but as two days passed and he was unable to get by Sergeant-at-Arms Donalson, the Cerberus at Democratic headquarters, he finally consented to divulge his mission to Secretary Woodson. Being ushered into the secretarial den the inventor extracted a formidable bomb from a small grip. It was shaped like the head of a sphinx, bearing a strong resemblance to the Democratic nominee. Despite his misgivings Secretary Woodson was prevailed upon to accompany his caller downstairs and into a deserted areaway behind the building where a practical demonstration was given of the qualifications of the infernal machine as a campaign novelty. Thrown against the wall of the building the bomb exploded with a deafening report. Then before the startled secretary mastered his agitation a miniature model of Judge Parker floated upward in a combination of smoke wreaths. This novelty, argued the inventor, symbolized the soundness of Democratic doctrine and the indestructible qualities of the nominee. He urged that a single torpedo would be sufficient to gather a crowd in any community when exploded and that the orator could point and adorn the moral thus dramatically conveyed. He wanted the committee to invest $100,000 in these bombs and his proposition is now under advisement. A tragic feature of the episode is that the man threatened to commit suicide in case his invention was rejected.

While campaign managers, as in this instance, are willing to face death and destruction in advertising their rival causes, it is women rather than men who are most feared at both headquarters. Chairman Cortelyou was waited upon one day last week by a woman with several campaign songs of her own composition.

She Would Sing.

In vain the suave Chairman endeavored to postpone her rehearsal. She sang two of the songs before she was persuaded to leave the building with a tentative promise that she would be notified in case the Executive Committee could grant her a special audience.

Secretary Woodson had much the same experience with a nondescript caller who had written a 400-page volume setting forth the reasons why the country would run amuck in case Judge Parker were not elected. He vehemently declared that in case his book was accepted and 15,000,000 copies distributed no further campaigning would be necessary; that headquarters could be closed up, and that all parties concerned could go off on a vacation with the assurance of a sweeping victory.

As this advertising feature alone would have called for an expenditure far exceeding the campaign fund, it was shelved. Another novelty, requiring an outlay of $500,000, was proposed to the Democratic committee by a leading job printer of the United States. His scheme was to put a concise Democratic argument on millions of trolley car transfer slips, which would be given gratis to the leading street railway systems throughout the United States. The agent submitted statistics showing that the average street car patron rode several blocks before surrendering his transfer, and would be sure to read and mentally digest the tabloid literature printed on its surface. Despite his threat to offer the novelty to the rival committee, Secretary Woodson courteously turned the transfer scheme down, with the remark that it was too much of a give-away.

Perhaps the potency of cartoons will have never had such a trial as during this campaign. Up at Republican headquarters several cartoonists have been engaged to caricature the enemy, and each cartoon will appear simultaneously in all the leading Republican organs of the country. As some 350 of these cartoons will be launched at the enemy, this item alone will approximate $30,000 or $35,000.

Big Printing Bills.

One of the most expensive items in the campaign, next to the cost of spellbinder oratory, is the printing and stationery bills. For this each campaign committee will this year spend $500,000. The number and size of the documents sent out have increased with each campaign until it is expected that the Parker and Roosevelt managers will mail no less than 100,000,000 documents of various sorts combined to further the respective candidates. A great many of these are matters of Congressional record and are franked, but Uncle Sam will be many thousand dollars richer in his Post Office Department when the returns are received in November.

But more than half of the money spent by both National and State Committees will reach the pockets of the campaign orators. During the next ten weeks Democratic doctrines will be preached by 5,000 political evangelists, who will get their cues from National campaign headquarters. As many, if not more, will march forth under the Roosevelt banner. In addition to these ten full regiments of spellbinders the various State Committees of both sides will muster 50,000 more, making a grand army of 60,000 speakers saving the Nation on the stump. Among the captains of Democratic oratory who have enlisted to champion the Parker cause are John G. Carlisle, William J. Bryan, Judson Harmon, Hoke Smith, Melville E. Ingalls, Gen. Patrick A. Collins, Charles S. Hamlin, Senator Joseph W. Bailey, Senator John W. Daniel, W. Bourke Cockran, Charles A. Towne, David B. Hill, Senator E. W. Carmack, John Sharp Williams, James H. Eckels, Senator William J. Stone, Champ Clark, Edward M. Shepard, and Carter Harrison.

Some of the more important and best-known orators are paid as much as $250 a week and expenses for their services. Still others donate their time to the cause, while the average cost per head in this means of advertisement is between $50 and $100 a week and expenses. Speakers in the employ of the State Committees will average less, but some $8,000,000 will be spent by the national and local committees for oratorical fireworks.

Another major item of expense will be the ubiquitous campaign button, of which millions will be distributed by both committees in addition to millions of lithographic portraits, banners, and flags, ranging from the abbreviated buttonhole variety to huge affairs, which are big enough to blanket the greatest elephant that ever trumpted in fact and fable.

House to House Canvass.

Early this month the first house to house canvass will be made by the respective party leaders throughout the country, and six weeks thereafter a second and more careful canvass will be made. By that time the majority of voters will have made up their minds one way or the other, and the rival managers will be able to approximate pretty accurately the result of the election. They also will be able to decide upon the points where a grand final rally must be made, and adopt desperate measures to insure success. These canvasses are enormously expensive, being of the most vital importance, as was shown a few days before the 1888 election, when West Virginia received $44,000 from the Democratic National Committee, and the Republicans sent $50,000 to the same State. About the same time the Democrats sent $100,000 into Indiana, and three nights before the election Chairman Quay of the Republican National Committee sent $300,000 from New York to trusted lieutenants in the same section.

A fortnight before the election, in 1900, the Republicans became doubtful about Iowa. Chairman Hanna resolved upon a personal canvass of every doubtful voter in the State. This cost the Republican National Committee nearly $200,000.

How Union Label Figures.

That Chairman Cortelyou and his lieutenants are more widely awake to the importance of the labor vote in the present campaign than was ever noticed of Republican campaign managers before is shown by the care exercised at Republican headquarters in having the union label on every document that is sent out from there. Chairman Cortelyou philosophized on beginning the campaign that the average employer would not notice the presence of the union label, even were he opposed to labor unions, while union men the country over would be sure to notice either the presence of omission of the insignia.

How is the money raised for all these expenses? The work has developed shrewd and successful beggars of money. By the death of William C. Whitney the Democratic Party lost one of the most successful political mendicants on party record, as he ranked with the late Marshall Jewell in being a prize developer of campaign sinews. Senator Stephen B. Elkins, son-in-law of Vice Presidential candidate Davis, also has won his spurs as a money-getter. It was to reimburse himself for the $100,000 he contributed to his own campaign fund, and which was never repaid to him by the Republican National Committee, that James G. Blaine wrote the story of his Congressional career.

Campaign managers say that under most conditions it is easier to raise money for the party which is out of power than for the party in office. Perhaps this is true of the present campaign in view of the compulsory economy being practiced by Chairman Cortelyou and his henchmen. But upward of fifteen million votes are estimated by Chairmen Cortelyou and Taggart to be cast for Parker and Roosevelt, and it is generally conceded that the party which proves to be the best advertiser will go to the post with an excellent chance of winning.

WORLD-FAMOUS CHEMISTS TO CONVENE IN NEW YORK

Work and Play Outlined for Annual Meeting Society of Chemical Industry—New President from New York.

FOR the first time in its history The Society of Chemical Industry—an organization of English origin, but with members in every quarter of the globe—will hold its annual meeting in America. For five days from Sept. 7 they will be in convention at Columbia University, and then in a private train they will tour the Eastern and Middle Western States, making visits of greater or less length at all of the larger manufacturing centres. They will be in St. Louis during the sessions of the several chemistry congresses scheduled for the middle of the month.

Men engaged in chemistry, unless their careers are particularly brilliant, are mentioned less in the public prints than those in any of the other professions. Yet on the list of those who will attend the coming convention are found the names of experts whose genius has given the world many of the patent processes which prepare the food one eats, the beverages one drinks, the medicines which cure one's ills, and the clothing one wears. Some of the chemists have made discoveries which have electrified the scientific world, but which from their nature attracted little public attention. Among them, too, are the heads of some of the largest corporations.

Decorated by King Edward.

The theoretical or academic chemists are probably most widely known. Sir William Ramsay, K. C. B., D. Sc., LL. D., F. R. S., the retiring President of the society, has been decorated by King Edward, and is known to scientists as the discoverer of Argon, Neon, Krypton, Xenon, Helium, and Metargon. In dollars and cents the new elements will probably never be worth a fortune to their finder, but as scientific curiosities they are the prize freaks of the chemists' show. These discoveries were due to the demonstrations by Sir William of the difference in the specific gravity of the nitrogen in the air we breathe and nitrogen chemically made.

Sir William was born on Oct. 2, 1852, in Glasgow, Scotland. He studied there and at Tubingen. His first professorship was at the University of Glasgow, from which he went to University College, Bristol. Since 1881 he has been full professor of chemistry at the University College of London.

Incoming President a New Yorker.

The incoming President of the Society, William H. Nichols, is a New Yorker, and represents the most successful type of the practical chemist. He founded and is the President of the Nichols Chemical Company, which operates the largest copper refinery in the world. He founded also the General Chemical Company, which is the largest producer of acids and heavy chemicals in America. He was born in Brooklyn in 1852 and is a graduate of the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute and the New York University. Sir William Ramsay is being entertained prior to the convention at Mr. Nichols's Summer home in the Thousand Islands. It was there, on July 22 last, that his steam yacht Nokomis took off 150 excusionists from the burning steamer Castanet as she was running toward Clayton, N. Y.

The first American President of the society was Prof. Charles F. Chandler, who now holds the chair of Organic Chemistry at Columbia. In October of this year the New York section of the Society of Chemical Industry and Dr. Chandler's many friends will celebrate the fortieth anniversary of his association with the university. Scientifically, Dr. Chandler's greatest work is considered to be the safeguards which he threw around petroleum at the time oil was first discovered. He is more likely to go down in history, however, as the man who gave to scientists the "assay ton weight," an equivalent for an assay ton in metallurgy. It is used by chemists all over the world as a convenience in calculating analytical results, and saves them much time and labor.

Discoverer of Saccharine.

Another member who will be conspicuous at the coming convention is Ira Remsen, President of the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. He was decorated with the medal of the society only this Spring. To chemists he is best known as the discoverer of saccharine—a compound which is 550 times sweeter than cane sugar. Its importance in the arts and sciences may be realized when it is known that the German Government monopolizes its manufacture.

A picturesque figure among the members will be H. W. Wiley, the chief chemist of the United States Government, who is familiarly known among his fellows as "Old Borax." He watches all legislation in the interests of pure food and drugs. Just at present he is attracting considerable attention by his experiments with adulterated food upon a squad of Government clerks who volunteered to be fed scientifically in his laboratory boarding house.

Dr. Ernest J. Lederle, who, as Chairman of the Invitation Committee, has devoted a great deal of time to the coming convention and Western tour, is the ex-Commissioner of Health. He will go to St. Louis this Fall to address the Congress of Health on present problems, especially as they relate to the public health in the larger municipalities.

Other members are Dr. J. Tackamine, a Japanese, who discovered the active principle called adrenaline which is now used extensively in surgery for bloodless operations; Leo Bakland, who invented a photographic paper which can be printed in artificial light; Dr. Kunz, the diamond expert; R. C. Schuepphaus of smokeless powder fame; Dr. Herman Frasch, who made the ill-smelling oil from the Ohio fields equal the Pennsylvania product, and many others.

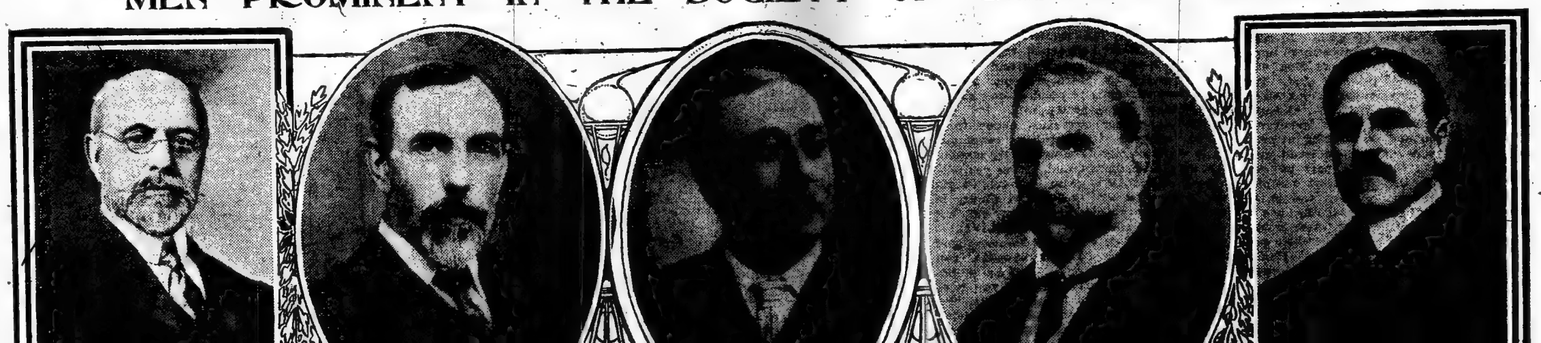
The foreign delegates to the convention will be the guests of the New York section of the society, of which H. Schweitzer of 40 Stone Street is Chairman.

There will be an annual dinner at the Waldorf, a smoker at Liederkranz Hall, a roof garden reception at the Majestic, and an excursion on a special steamer up the Hudson River. Twelve of the large manufacturing plants in the neighborhood of New York will be visited.

In Philadelphia there will be a luncheon at the University of Pennsylvania, and the members will visit the mint and the Baldwin Locomotive Works.

From Washington the party will visit Mount Vernon, and on their return to the capital will be entertained with a cakewalk. At Pittsburg the vast steel works will be the principal attraction; at Chicago, the stock yards and drainage canal; at Detroit, drug making; at Buffalo, the Niagara power houses. Boston will provide a luncheon at Harvard, a clambake at Squantum, and a tally-ho drive through the suburbs, with a day spent inspecting neighboring factories.

MEN PROMINENT IN THE SOCIETY OF CHEMICAL INDUSTRY.



LUCK OF THE O'BRIEN.

IF superstition amounts to anything it will probably recruit a following of believers who have read of the trial trips of the torpedo boat O'Brien. She started for a speed trial, on the Hudson River, but owing to the poor quality of coal and a derangement of some of her steam valves she failed to get the maximum speed of her engines.

Another attempt was made a week later, the little boat going up Long Island Sound. As soon as she passed Fort Schuyler a full head of steam was put on, and off she went at a speed close to twenty-six knots an hour, above her contract speed of twenty-five knots. Everything seemed to promise a successful run until she had gone a couple of miles beyond City Island, when suddenly one of the blower engines, which furnishes the air pressure for the fireroom, broke down, and the trial had to be given up, the vessel returning to the navy yard for repairs.

SOCIETY
AT HOME AND ABROAD

WITH to-morrow passes the last of the Summer holidays. Tuesday will bring an influx of New Yorkers to town. Although there will be few of the large town houses opened until November, the suburban country, places will again welcome their owners, and the hotels will be crowded with transient visitors and those who are "passing through" and taking in the theatres and shops en route. The Horse Show at Newport and the golf tournament at Baltusrol are the events for this first week in September. Lenox is coming to the front this year with an elaborate programme of varied entertainments. Many of those who have cottages and villas by the seaside believe that September is the best of all months of the year, and consequently there will still be a number at Newport, at Bar Harbor, on the Jersey coast, and other like resorts. But the Adirondacks also offer many tempting diversions for those who are fond of sport by field and forest and stream. And, then, again, one must not forget the Hot Springs of Virginia, where many of the Newporters flock as soon as the season at their Summer city is over. Mr. and Mrs. Seth Barton French, who have a pretty villa there among the mountains, have remained all Summer, and have house parties on for September and October. Mrs. Gouverneur Kortwright, who arrived from Europe with Mrs. George Law the other day, always spends a short time at the Springs, and during her visit bridge is revived, and is the one amusement of the evenings.

+ + +

It is rumored that William Corcoran Eustis will be M. F. H. at Meadow Brook in place of Foxhall Keene, who has resigned. Mr. Keene intends to live abroad. He and the club have had some divergent views concerning the conduct of the hunt. The old story, told last year, still gains grounds, and it is said that before long there will either be two hunt clubs on Long Island or that the present location of the Meadow Brook may be changed. William C. Eustis would make an excellent M. F. H. He has lived for some years in the Meadow Brook country, and is the brother of Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr. He is the grandson of Williiam Wilson Corcoran of Washington, who left the Art Gallery to the Capital. He married Miss Edith Morton, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Levi P. Morton, and the sister of Mrs. Winthrop Rutherford. The Mortons are expected this week from Europe. They are to go to Ellerslie for the Autumn.

+ + +

An engagement of the week was that of Miss Catherine Dix, the daughter of the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Morgan Dix, to William H. Wheelock, the son of Dr. and Mrs. George G. Wheelock. Miss Dix is the granddaughter of the late Gov. John A. Dix. The Dix Summer place is at Lawrence, and it was there Miss Alice Roosevelt visited them last Summer. The Wheelock family have been conspicuous in various charitable movements. The young man, who is a Harvard graduate, will be wealthy.

+ + +

As soon as the Horse Show is over at Newport Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt are to go to the Adirondacks with a party. Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, who have been entertaining a great deal at their camp in the Upper St. Regis region, will not return to their Westchester country seat near White Plains until the middle of September.

Anson Phelps Stokes is still as enthusiastic about the yachting on the lake and the Yacht Club and the races. The William Rockefellers are also entertaining this week, and, in fact, campfires, so to speak, are lit all along the great stretch of mountain and lake and through the forests. The shooting in the Adirondacks is the nearest approach the American has in his own country to the English Autumn. From the other side comes the news of large house parties being given by Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin at Balmacaen; by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Phipps, Jr., at Beaufort Castle; by James Henry Smith at his leased shooting box and moor; by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, and others. The shooting and the house parties have evidently kept on the other side many of those who had promised visits to Newport this season. The King returns this week from Marienbad and resumes a royal progress through Scotland. Anthony Drexel, who entertained him at the Spa, is to go, shortly, to Africa for a few months' shooting. Mrs. Drexel will remain in England, and Miss Drexel will be presented at the Drawing Room next Spring.

+ + +

So far very little has been predicted for the Winter season, which is now only two months off. The Horse Show takes place the second week in November, and will be followed by the opening of the Metropolitan Opera House. There are not many débutantes, and of the few who will make their bow there is hardly any one to be repressented in the Newport set.

+ + +

Mr. and Mrs. Prescott Lawrence may come over with their daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Francklyn have a girl to bring out. Mr and Mrs. Pembroke Jones will not bring out their daughter, and it is more than doubtful if Miss Gladys Vanderbilt will make her début. Miss Dorothy Whitney will be in mourning for another year. In the collateral branches there are no Vanderbilt débutantes. Miss Twombly made her bow last year. The entertaining will therefore fall upon the young matrons of society. Should Mrs. William Kent of Tuxedo bring out her daughter, who is a granddaughter of the late Pierre Lorillard, there will be some entertaining. The Kents, however, have lived very little in town for some years, remaining at Tuxedo.

+ + +

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt is looked to for a show of hospitality, and the visit of Prince Adelbert will be the event which will put this to the test. Mrs. Ogden Goelet is very uncertain as to what she will do this Winter, but the young Robert Goelets will be here and will occupy the Fifth Avenue mansion. Nearly all the new houses being built are much behind in construction owing to the labor troubles. William K. Vanderbilt and Harry Payne Whitney are both adding to their houses, and the George Vanderbilt mansion, now denuded of its unsightly porte cochère, is in the hands of workmen, or rather under contract to be finished within a certain time. The Clark mansion is as incomplete as ever, and it is not probable that the Montana Senator will bring his young bride there this year. For the present James B. Haggin does not intend to build. The Townsend Burden house may be finished by Christmas. James Henry Smith is in a way a lucky man, as his mansion is all ready to be occupied. He has, however, bought a number of tapestries, hangings, and some rare furniture in Vienna and on the Continent which will add to that veritable museum, now one of the most complete town residences in the world.

+ + +

Slowly are the different Pierpont Morgan addenda to Madison Avenue and the neighboring streets going up. On Riverside Drive the Schwab residence seems to be in statu quo. Last Winter many people of fashion, like Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt, and Col. and Mrs. De Lancey Kane had aparements at hotels, and this Winter, no doubt, the same mode will prevail.

+ + +

Bar Harbor has been rubbing up its French to attend the conferences of L. Decaen d'Audiffret, the eminent professor of New York, who has been lecturing this week at Mrs. H. L. Eno's and Mrs. Miles Carpenter's on "The Influence of the French on the American Stage." He will address Miss Anna M. Archbold's friends on the same subject on Tuesday.

+ + +

The John Innes Kane house will require some time for completion, and society is interested in knowing if Mrs. Schermerhorn, the mother of Mrs. Kane, will give up her old-fashioned residence on Twenty-third Street for the new mansion.

+ + +

Mrs. Neilson is determined to stick to the neighborhood of Fifteenth Street, and the Wolfes and Clapps and Bradish Johnsons and Van Rensselaer Kennedys will not move from their lower Fifth Avenue houses.

+ + +

This year it is proposed in that vicinity and near Washington Square to organize another and more active neighborhood Club. Mrs. William B. O. Field, the daughter of Mrs. William D. Sloane, has also a club project in view, and one must not forget the ladies' new club, which should be ready by Christmas.

With the wane of the season at the different watering places, charitable entertainments, readings, and concerts have been the vogue. These will continue as long as audiences can be gathered together. Miss Leary is just beginning her series at her new house at Newport, and she will continue at her other new domicile in town later.

Among the more recent movements may be chronicled the sailing of Mr. and Mrs. George Gould from England and the arrival during the course of the week of Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly and Miss Twombly from Europe. Mr. and Mrs. William A. M. Burden are already at the Twombly country seat at Madison. The season at Morristown, by the way, will begin next week, and there will be a series of hunt meets at the Whiphanny Club. Mrs. George Law, who arrived from Europe recently, has gone to Stockbridge, Mass.; the Earl of Suffolk, who is in town, is en route for the West. Lord and Lady Decies, the Earl and Countess of Dartmouth, and the Earl and Countess of Lichfield will be among the titled arrivals next week. Mr. and Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse start for a Western tour, and Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs is going to San Francisco. Miss Louise McAllister has arrived at Baltusrol. She will be one of the patronesses at the reception to be given there on Friday afternoon.

TOLD WHILE THE SMOKE CURLS

SIR JOHN PEPYS LISTER-KAYE, who accompanies his wife, who was Miss Natica Yznaga, to this country, is a quiet, dignified man, who does not care the least for society. He is fond of travel and has been all over the world. He met his wife in New York, and they were married in this city in 1881. The wedding was almost unnoticed, and the young couple went immediately to Ravenswood, the plantation of Mrs. Yznaga. Sir John Pepys Lister-Kaye is the third baronet. He is a little over fifty years old. He was educated at Eton and at Cambridge. He is a member of the Marlborough, the Carlton, and the Turf Clubs. Sir John and Lady Lister-Kaye have no children. As his second name signifies, he is a relative of the Earl of Cottenham and comes of the same family. Sir John Kaye was created a baronet by Charles I. In 1809 the baronetcy became extinct, but it was renewed in Sir John Lister-Kaye, who married in 1800 Lady Amelia Gray, daughter of George, the fifth Earl of Stamford and Warrington. The heir to Sir John Lister-Kaye's baronetcy is Cecil Edmund Lister-Kaye, who married Lady Beatrice Adeline Pelham-Clinton, a sister of the Duke of Newcastle, now visiting this country, and also a sister of Lord Francis Hope.

Among other visitors to this country this week are the Earl of Lichfield and his Countess and the Earl of Dartmouth and his Countess. The Countess of Dartmouth and the Countess of Lichfield are sisters. Both are well-known matrons in London society. They are daughters of the Earl of Leicester. The present Earl of Leicester is Thomas William Coke. His eldest son, Viscount Coke, has been in this country. He distinguished himself in the Suakim expedition and in South Africa. The Earl of Leicester is an old man, and the Countess of Dartmouth and Countess of Lichfield are his daughters by his first marriage. They are also related to the Keppels and to many well-known English families. The Dartmouth family name is Legge and that of the Lichfields is Anson. The eldest son of the Earl and Countess of Dartmouth is the Viscount Lewisham, and the eldest son of the Earl and Countess of Lichfield is Viscount Anson. Both are young and unmarried and heirs to earldoms. A brother of the Earl of Lichfield married an American—a Miss Cleveland of Coleman, Texas. A cousin of the Earl of Dartmouth, Nathaniel Walter Barnardiston, married Miss Sarah Floyd Jones of Fort Neck House, Long Island. Mr. and Mrs. Barnardiston have traveled a great deal abroad. Mr. Barnardiston was at one time Military Attaché at La Hague. There was some rumor of his being at one time transferred to Washington. His wife has many relatives and friends in New York society.

Alphonso de Navarro, who has been very much in the public eye recently, first from nearly being drowned at Newport and being saved by J. M. Waterbury, Jr., and Marion Wright, and, secondly, for having been in two automobile accidents, one of which has created a considerable rumpus in Newport society, is the unmarried son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. de Navarro. His brother married Miss Mary Anderson, the actress, and lives at Broadway, a quaint English village. Alphonso de Navarro is the type of a Spaniard or South American. He is very dark and rather tall, and, although dressing in the height of fashion, has somewhat the Latin taste for picturesqueness. He is known as "Chappie" Navarro. He is about forty-five years of age and a member of the Union, Metropolitan, and Meadow Brook Clubs. He is devoted to society. His mother was an American, a Miss Dykers, and the family came originally from Brooklyn, where they hold much real estate. J. F. de Navarro, the father of Alphonso de Navarro, has represented a South American principality in New York. Alphonso is a lawyer by profession, and he has also an interest in cement industries.

Henry James, the author, is a member of the Athenaeum, which is the literary club of London. He is over sixty years of age. His father, as is well known, was a clergyman, and a relative of the famous G. P. R. James. The latter at one time was a private tutor, and in Norfolk, Va., prepared young men for the different universities. The Athenaeum was the first London literary club, as Timbs, who is an authority on these matters, says: "Prior to 1824 there was only one institution in the metropolis particularly devoted to the association of authors, literary men, members of Parliament, and promoters generally of the fine arts. All other establishments were more or less exclusive, comprising gentlemen who screened themselves in the windows of White's, or members for counties who darkened the doors of Brooke's, or they were dedicated to the Guards or men of wit and pleasure about town." Among the promoters of the Athenaeum Club, which was organized in February, 1824, were Sir Humphrey Davy, the Right Hon. John Wilson Croker, Sir Francis Chantrey, Richard Heber, Sir Thomas Lawrence, Dr. Thomas Young, Lord Dover, David Gilbert, the Earl of Aberdeen, Sir Henry Halford, Sir Walter Scott, Joseph Jekyll, Thomas Moore, and Charles Hatchett. The present mansion was built in 1830, and is situated on Pall Mall. There are 1,200 members, who pay a subscription of eight guineas. Among the famous members of the Athenaeum during the last century were Rogers, the poet and banker; Theodore Hook, the wit, and Thackeray, as well as the principal political, literary, and ecclesiastical personages of the day. It has the best club library in London. It is said that at one time many joined who were really not eligible, and The New Quarterly Review had a famous article on the little crawlers, parasites, and gentility hunters who crept in from all corners of London. A number of Americans of note have been members and guests, and among others Mgr. Doane of Newark, the brother of Bishop Doane of Albany.

The Earl of Suffolk, recently at Newport, comes from the Protestant Howards, a branch of the Norfolk family. The first Earl of Suffolk was Lord Thomas Howard, son of Thomas, the fourth Duke of Norfolk. A very odd legend connected with the entire Howard family is told with much gusto in England. It is said that the original progenitor was named Bugge. The term "bugge" is given only to animals of the species which haunt couches not over clean and old houses, and which since before the days of the Pharaohs have made sleeping man uncomfortable. All Saxon names with the ending "ward" signify the tending of some part of the domain. Woodward meant the keeper of a forest, &c. For brave services the ancient Bugge asked that his name be changed to anything better, and he was made keeper of the swine under the name of Hogward, which was afterward changed into Howard. To-day the expression, a "Norfolk Howard" in England means the insect and nocturnal tormentor, and not on account of its prevalence either in the castles and homes of the family or in the county.

The death of Morris Phillips last week at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Harby, has removed from the literary world a man with a wonderful memory and one of the best informed on family history and general social matters in this country. The old Home Journal was the first to give any space to society and personal news and to have any items about the doings of clubs and clubmen. Everything was done in a kindly spirit, and no objection was ever made to the innovation in journalism which to-day is one of its most salient features. The Mirror preceded The Home Journal, and in the files of both there may be found much interesting matter of early social life in New York in the beginning and progress of the last century. The late N. P. Willis wrote in the Flaneur style, and some of his best work is in The Mirror in the thirties and forties. A visit abroad with a description of the people he met, including the celebrities at Lady Blessington's, the Bulwer Lyttons, Disraeli, Lady Byron, and the parties at Holland House make delightful reading to-day. The old New York Club then had its rooms on Chambers Street—that is, in the forties—and Willis was one of the original members. His widow died only a short time ago. She was a Miss Grinnell, and Mr. and Mrs. Grinnell Willis live at Morristown. Idlewild, the old Willis country place, is now a sanitarium. Of the writers on social topics of the day—and their books are wonderfully fresh and interesting after a half century—the only survivor is Donald Grant Mitchell, (Ik Marvel,) who lives at Edgewood, New Haven, Conn. Curtis, the author of the immortal "Mrs. Potiphar's Papers," died at his home on Staten Island a few years ago. Astor Bristed is survived by his son, Charles Astor Bristed. Washington Irving died a bachelor. One brother, John Treat Irving, is still living, and there are numerous nephews and nieces.

In referring to fashionable people who live on islands, an English authority mentions Lord and Lady Barrymore, (Mrs. Post,) who spend some time at Fola Island, off the Irish coast, near Queenstown. Lord Newrough, who married Miss Car of Louisville, Ky., has a Summer home at Bardsey Island, off the coast of North Wales. Much has been written of the improvements made by Cecil Baring—who married Mrs. Lorillard Tailer of Tuxedo—to the tumble down castle and round tower on Lombay Island, off the coast of Dublin. The castle is of great antiquity and contains some extraordinary rooms, has a moat, and all the properties of a medieval domain. It is being fitted with electric lights from a private plant, modern plumbing, and some delightful furnishings from London and America. Mrs. Lucy Carnegie has her island off the coast of Florida in this country. The Averys and McIlhennys of Louisiana, live on a historic island beyond the mouth of the Teche in the Gulf of Mexico. Augustus Schermerhorn owns a tight little island in Long Island Sound, and of course there are numerous homes in the St. Lawrence, in the Thousand Islands, in the Adirondack lakes, and in Lakes George and Champlain. The Isle of Arran in Scotland, still claims a Queen, and the greatest heiress in Great Britain, Lady Mary Hamilton, daughter of the Duchess of Hamilton, is the sovereign.

The Berkshire Hunt Club began last week under brilliant auspices, its first run at Lenox. The club was organized this Summer. Among the older men who have belonged to other hunts and who rode to hounds were Giraud Foster, Samuel Frothingham, Clinton Gilmore, Master of Fox Hounds, and Guy Ward. The meet was at the residence of Richard C. Dixey, whose country seat, Tanglewood, is one of the famous Lenox places. Giraud Foster has a magnificent château at Lenox. He married Miss Van Nest, the sister of Mrs. Charles Carroll Jackson and Mrs. Richard Gambrill. Mrs. Richard Dixey was Miss Tappan. Mrs. Samuel Frothingham was Miss Elinor Meyer, a relative of the Ambassador to Italy. The Frothinghams and Dixeys have town houses in Boston. Guy Ward is a representative of the famous Ward family. The Wards have made Lenox their home for years.

THE CANALBOAT AS A PLEASURE CRAFT

Picturesque and Restful Life to be Had at a Nominal Cost—Some Vacation Voyages.

THOSE in quest of a vacation that offers something "different" would do well to try a trip on a canalboat. Such a vacation calls for neither fussy frocks nor frills. Its inexpensiveness commends it to the economical. It is a boon to the nerve-worn, and brimful of possibilities for the most delightful of times.

At this season of the year the slips around New York are filled with the incoming and outgoing of this homely little craft. Indeed, one of the picturesque sights along the water front is the little colonies of canalboats. Some are unloading their cargoes at stores and warehouses and others taking on loads from the wharves and docks.

Every evening a fleet of these boats, called the "up-tow," bound for the north and west, leaves New York for Albany. They are drawn by tugs all the way, and usually two nights and a day and a half are consumed in making that part of the voyage, which is in truth but the beginning.

Talk about the beauties of the Hudson! From no other point of view can they be seen to such excellent advantage as from the deck of a canalboat. Just lazily floating over the bosom of the majestic river, one seems scarcely to move. Yet in the days that follow on the canal the beginning of the journey, by comparison, was made by rapid stages indeed.

At Albany the tow breaks and the boats go on their various ways. Here some enter the canal. Some are bound for Canadian ports, some for the Erie Canal. The latter are generally towed on to Troy, at which place they pass into the canal. If it is night when this place is reached the voyager makes up his mind that Troy is the noisiest place in the world. Confusion seems to reign supreme. The water rushes and roars. Drivers shout and curse at their horses, and boatmen call orders right and left. This is where the first lock is entered, and it is the noisiest place of all. There are sixteen locks, in boating parlance known as "the sixteens," to be passed before Troy is left behind, and by the time the last is passed canaling has begun in earnest.

Going through the locks is a novel sensation to the novice. To be lifted high and higher on the rising water, then to slide through an opened gate to a higher level. These locks are frequent along the way. Some at intervals of three or four miles—many only a mile apart. It is a novelty also to see the horses taken on and off the boats. A bridge from the stable cabin is thrown from the boat to the shore and another from the top of the deck down into the stable quarters.

One leads a horse up the inclined bridge, while to keep him steady another holds the animal by the tail until he accomplishes the short journey from boat to shore, or vice versa. Thus, one at a time, are they managed.

As a rule a three-horse—or mule—team is driven, and the Captain aims to keep two teams on hand. Each team works six hours at a stretch, and while one works the other rests. This is kept up day and night without deviation, be the weather fair or foul. Notwithstanding, the progress, at the rate of one and one-half miles an hour, is scarcely noticeable to a passenger, and he has ample opportunity to study the passing panorama very minutely.

A Pleasing Panorama.

And the picture is well worth the study, for it is a fair land through which the Erie Canal lies, that of the Mohawk Valley—busy, beautiful, picturesque, historic. There are the rich farms with orchards of fruit, fields of grain, and herds of sleek cattle. The "muck" lands planted in celery and onions that bring in rich returns to their owners. Men are busy at work in the field, and women and children in gay little parties are often seen gathering the wild berries that grow in profusion along the towpath. It is worth rising very early of a morning to see the mist as it rolls from the hills, to hear the wild birds carol, to breathe the fragrance of flower and tree and shrub with which nature in this portion of the world is so lavishly adorned.

Then there are the busy towns and factories passed through where the air vibrates with active life. There is the picturesque scenery around Little Falls, where far in advance loom up in the distance great walls of rock, in which at close range may be traced with the aid of a very active imagination the outlines of a human face. Some call it "the old man's face," some "the old woman's," and the pictured face is one of the landmarks along the way.

Most boats stop at some of the wayside cities to unload freight. Sometimes for a few hours, once in a while a half day, and occasionally over night. This gives opportunity to go ashore and see the sights and to take in whatever in the line of amusement is going on in the place—be it a farmer's picnic, common throughout that section, of the State, circus, outdoor opera, a tour of the stores, or only a trolley ride. Or, when the boat's quarters seem too narrow and one longs to stretch his legs, it is a very easy matter to get off at a lock, walk along the towpath and catch up with the boat at the next lock, or, to test one's dexterity, swing down to the cabin's top from one of the many overhead bridges as the boat passes under, without an instant's pause or delay.

Had you thought to while away the hours by reading, you cannot enter into the spirit of your book to save you, and it lies unheeded on your lap. These are truly "do nothing days." Idleness reigns supreme, and you are perfectly content to be perfectly lazy. You are as much out of the world as though you were voyaging to Europe. There are no letters to read, no papers, no business to bother with. Sometimes for a whole day on the canal no boats pass you. Then again a string of them come in a bunch, and you enjoy the homely greetings and the tidings that are passed along from one boat to another.

Housekeeping on a Canal Boat.

Housekeeping on a canalboat very ably illustrates the economy of space. In such a tiny place as the boat's cabin there must of necessity be a place for everything, and it must be kept in its place at that. The "cook room" is large enough for a stove with room beside it for the cook. Around the stove, and above, the wall is covered with zinc or tin, and all cooking utensils hang in this space. The cook room may be shut off from the other part by two sliding doors. A drop leaf table occupies one corner of the cabin, large enough to accommodate six persons. There are a sewing machine, a few chairs, some stools, which may be pushed under the table out of the way, and a "bureau closet." Bunks are built in on either side, with deep drawers beneath. Drawers of capacious size, that slide back under the cabin's side, give ample closet room.

A captain usually operates two boats, one coupled behind the other. On the first he lives with his family, and the cabin of the second one is the one that visitors or boarders may occupy. The floor is covered with oilcloth, with a few bright rugs laid around. Some pictures adorn the walls, and white muslin curtains hang at the eight little windows. Sometimes a little oil stove stands in the room for use on cool days. A neat housekeeper can make of her boat home a model of home-like comfort and convenience.

Suppose you embarked for Syracuse. It will be about eight or ten days from the evening you left Coenties Slip, East River, until your destination is reached. If the boat is to carry salt back to New York, as most of them do from that place, you will have three or four days to spend there before she is loaded and ready to start back. That gives ample time to visit the saltyards, the pottery, the university, or whatever places fancy suggests. There are many charming places within easy distance by trolley that are well worth seeing. Then, the boats loaded, the "down trip" to New York is begun.

Days of Sightseeing.

Many find more enjoyment coming back. The boats are heavily loaded and set down low in the water so that awnings may be fastened over the deck the whole of the way. Going up the lighter boats set up so high above the water that it is necessary to be on a constant lookout for the bridges. No stops are made if all goes well until Albany is reached, and it often happens the boats get there around noon. When such is the case the balance of the day may be spent to very good advantage in the Capitol. The boats do not leave Albany for New York until night. Then the "down-tow" is made up and the delightful end of the journey begun. By the time the metropolis is reached one knows the Hudson River pretty well.

Such an outing consumes about three weeks. Have you a month at command, go to Buffalo from Syracuse, or try a vacation on the Northern Canal. Have you only a week or ten days, go to Philadelphia via the Raritan Canal. Canaling is similar in experience, in a way, to camping out, but the vista is constantly changing. It is really an out-of-door life that induces sound sleep and gives one a healthy appetite. You will come back with an added lease of life and vote your vacation the best you have ever spent. You will be out nothing for clothes. The oldest you have, providing they'll stand rough usage, will be the best outfit; and few at that, for remember the quarters are somewhat more cramped than you are accustomed to. The woman who fails to take along a sunbonnet makes a mistake. It will prove the finest kind of headgear.

Some people have an idea the boatmen, or "canalers," as they are often called, are a class to be avoided. Such an idea is absurd. The life is a rough one, with its hard sides, and calls for few of the fine conventionalities, but it serves to bring out the best there is in many of the men and women who have made the canal their home. They themselves will tell you they're "just like shore folks. Some on 'ems all right; and then, again, some's no better'n they ought to be," which is likely true enough.

One fine old lady, who has spent forty years of her life in "boatin'," has reared twelve sons and daughters and sent them out into the world. In the Winter, when the boats tie up, the children can go to school, and some of this family have gone through college. It keeps a woman pretty busy looking after a flock of growing children in such close quarters. When it rains, they must play down amidship, or in the cabin, but in fair weather they like to be on deck, where they require constant watching to keep them from going overboard.

WHEN NEPTUNE RESPONDED.

HOT afternoon on the white sands at Coney Island. Beach crowded with bathers and spectators. Well in the foreground sit two elderly ladies, engrossed in gossip and ham sandwiches. Both utterly oblivious of steadily encroaching tide, the last wave of which has come within five feet of where they are sitting.

Middle-aged man in bathing suit, benevolently disposed, close observer of tides, remarks briefly to ladies:

"The next wave will be higher."

Both ladies show their gratitude by simultaneously giving him a freezing stare, then gaze fixedly at each other in mutual congratulation at the effectual manner in which they have squelched this individual who is surely trying to scrape acquaintance with them. Again they resume gossip and the sandwiches. Middle-aged man, benevolence now all gone, places both hands in attitude of prayer and silently invokes Father Neptune to do the proper thing.

The merry old sea god, ever ready for a prank, responds by pushing in a wave that transforms each old lady into a temporary island. Up and around their waists sweeps the flood of salt water, saturating their clothing and putting the estables out of commission.

Middle-aged man, keen satisfaction illuminating his features, alertly watches different moves of disgusted old ladies as they vainly endeavor to remove salt water and wet sand. He is apparently anxious to enjoy every bit of their discomfiture.

Finally, unable to restrain the human nature which persists in bubbling forth, he again remarks to old ladies in calm, measured tones:

"You don't know how glad I am!"

A TIME FOR CAUTION.

A CERTAIN man in C—— is noted for a pair of the worst crossed crosseyes in the country. Not long ago he decided to kill a calf belonging to him, for the purpose of putting it on the market. He called a negro boy to hold the calf while he knocked it in the head with an axe. The boy seized the calf, and the man got his axe.

Suddenly Sambo dropped his hold on the bovine and exclaimed:

"Hol' on, dar, Massa Tom; I wants ter ax you a question."

"Well, Sambo, what is it?"

"Is you gwine ter hit whar you's lookin'?"

"Yes, right where I'm looking."

"Den, Massa Tom, fer de Lawd's sake git somebody else to hol' dis calf."

SOME SEASONABLE GOWNS

All sensible women will rejoice in the well-settled fact that short skirts are here to stay, even the Parisian, who has been anything but practical in respect to the length of her skirts, having capitulated. The instep-length skirts are not only to be worn for walking but for reception gowns, and those who look best in skirts of that length will wear them, and in many instances evening gowns of round length for dancing will be seen.

In the longer skirts, those that barely touch in the front and at the sides and lie on the floor in the back will be fashionable for dinner gowns and general evening wear.

The skirts that lie on the ground several inches all the way around and that were as ungraceful as slovenly are taking their germ-laden folds out of sight.

For women, especially those of middle age, or of too evident stoutness or thinness—either being fatal to grace—and also the short woman, look better in skirts that just clear the pavement than in the shorter or instep length, but such skirts are more or less a nuisance, for they are just long enough to dip into every puddle or other filth on the street and yet too short to hold up, a peculiarly ungraceful effect being given by the lifting of skirts that manifestly clear the ground. Perhaps the compromise between this and an instep length is best found in the skirt that clears the pavement an inch all the way around.

It is to be hoped that all women adopting round skirts will see to it that they are not only as long or a shade longer in the front than the back when first worn but also after being worn a while. If a skirt is not cut properly there is a tendency for it to ride up in the front, and this tendency should be discovered and remedied, for nothing is more fatal to one's appearance than to have a skirt tilting up at the front. Even a properly cut skirt, if it is tight, may have its "hang" ruined if its wearer is not careful how she sits and stands in it.

The new skirts that clear the pavement from present indications are to be fuller, and all sorts of plaits used, but it is hardly likely that in the heavy Winter cloths this fullness will obtain in walking gowns, as it would make them too cumbersome to be otherwise than tiring, and American women, especially the younger ones, are, despite their following of fashion, not slaves to extreme modes, and they prefer comfort to discomfort in walking gowns.

Coats fitted at the back and over the hips, but swinging a bit loose in front to show vests of contrasting colors, are a feature of the new walking costumes, but the devotée of the Eton coat need not be discouraged. The Eton is a case of the survival of the fittest, and while many attempts have been made to dethrone it, it is too comfortable and too well suited to the requirements of numberless women to be otherwise than fashionable so long as coats are worn.

Mauve has been a color largely in evidence at recent English society functions, and many of these gowns worn at garden parties have been topped by hats of the same hue. This color for those who can wear it is one of the most beautiful and refined possible. It is especially suited to dark hair and eyes if the complexion be clear, whether pale or rose tinted or brownish, but yellow-tinged skins should not have mauve placed in juxtaposition. The darker the hair and eyes the better, as mauve does not look anything like as well with eyes and hair of pure or medium brown, no matter what the complexion is.

Blue-eyed people should eschew mauves and heliotropes. There is something about the combination that makes blue eyes appear more or less fishy. Blondes often wear these shades, but though it suits golden hair and fair skins if the eyes are blue, any other color is better. Gray eyes with no suggestion of blue stand the heliotrope shades.

Green is another color to be looked at askance by the blue-eyed. Neither greens nor mauves should be placed near the face. Of course the extremely dark shades of green and heliotrope differ decidedly in their effects on eyes and complexions from the lighter and brighter shades.

The greens of the coming chilly season are chiefly varieties of lizard and myrtle shades and in the subdued tones will be made up in cloths and velvets.

Blues, pre-eminently the colors for the blue-eyed, are always worn, perhaps because the majority, and the great majority at that, of women have blue eyes. The right shade of blue emphasizes and apparently deepens the blue of the eyes. The violet-blue eye with black lashes should be framed in blues showing violet tones, as the violet tints brighten and darken the same tints in the eyes.

Gray, always a favorite color with those having quiet tastes in gowning, will be fashionable in the nickel and mole tints, but not to any great extent, and is shown in the finest and best of materials only, whether cloth or velvet or silk. Grays, as a rule, do not appeal to the masses and is therefore well adapted to appeal to the taste of lovers of the exclusive. There is perhaps no color that shows the quality of the material more than gray, and nothing cheaper looking than a cheap gray material can be evolved, short of black.

Plum shades, also mulberry, will be found in high-class cloths, and are especially suitable for middle-aged women.

Browns of all shades and in all materials are the dernier cri in Paris, the chestnut and golden tones leading at present, but shades of wood brown in both light and dark, as well as those shading all the way between, are the coming shades. Never before within recollection has there been such a call for browns. As browns are to lead in fashion's fancy this Autumn and Winter, the repetition of caution in choosing shades may well be repeated. In selecting browns they should be placed near the hair, and any shade that deadens its color and lustre should be rejected.

Reddish browns are for people whose hair is that color, but the shade chosen should be a little less bright than the hair. Golden browns for the golden-brown locks, but more subdued than the hair, are the thing, while for those with deep, pure brown coiffures, that peculiar shade of ashen brown, as rare as it is beautiful—and ashen only in that when certain lights strike it threads of silver seem to appear—the clear, pure brown showing neither red nor golden tones, is the best. A tint of olive or castor is allowable for people having pure brown hair.

In costumes several shades of the same color rather than contrasting colors in trimmings are now being made up by the modistes of the fashinable in Paris. The trimmings are usually of the lighter shades.

Many of the lined skirts, as well as those having drop skirts, have a bit of featherbone inserted almost anywhere between the knees and the ankles to make them stand out slightly and thus keep the skirts from brushing the ankles. If the featherbone is properly covered it will not wear through its casing until the skirt is so worn as to be no longer presentable.

Drop skirts and petticoats are no wider at the bottom than heretofore, but the flouncings are put on fuller and the boning or insertion of canvas gives the necessary expansion at the bottom. There is not the slightest danger of crinoline or hoopskirts.

A new velvet is mirrored, but the pressing is done at irregular intervals and at some distance apart. Broadtail velvets for wraps and costumes have been imported.

+ + +

Loop effects will prevail in trimmings, and it is said that the drooping effect will be in vogue in millinery, and that the loops of bows will no longer be perky and smart, and even the wire sections will be bent to a gentle downward inclination. However, the strictly fashionable will, even if they adopt these drooping effects in millinery, select another style as soon as the masses take them up.

+ + +

Novelties in velvets include clever imitation of furs, and almost every fur is reproduced as nearly as may be in these. These are for millinery use and the browns and grays are especially desirable for draped chapeaus.

+ + +

Silks and satins for lining the coats of costumes and the skirts, preferably match the color of the gown material.

In Paris, where the 1830 craze started, it is the first to fall into oblivion, and the garments of the period of the "three Louis" will reign the coming Autumn and Winter. The Directoire coats can be so varied in treatment and are so picturesque as to appeal to all women, and all save the extremely fat can adapt one of the many variations of the Louis or Directoire coats and look as well as in other garments.

+ + +

Velvet coats will be worn with cloth skirts of similar color. These coats will have shaped skirts and will be elaborately trimmed.

+ + +

Those requiring new hackabout suits for early Autumn wear cannot do better than to have mohair made up, for it will be even more used next Spring than now. In England it has been lately adopted by the men for negligée suits.

+ + +

Net materials in organ plait designs in black and colors and sprinkled with spangles have been imported for trimming the skirts of evening gowns.

+ + +

As several different kinds of lace are used together by Parisian modistes, the fashion has found, and will continue to find, favor here.

Mrs. William A. M. Burden, who was Miss Florence Vanderbilt Twombly, dined at Sherry's on her return from her prolonged extended wedding tour. Mrs. Burden looked extremely well and wore a most unusual frock cut on princess lines and very narrow and clinging all the way around from the neck to the end of the trailing skirt. It was a figured heavy silk gauze of pastel tint, with wide band designs formed of large circles, some seven inches across, of pale but soft blue on a background of bluish gray, and the lower section of each circle shaded to paler blue, its lower edge being formed of a half wreath of shaded pink roses in graduated sizes, the larger roses being in the centre. Five of these panels extended from a little below the waist to the gown's hem and another band formed the main part of the bodice. A single band made the tops of the sleeves, which ended at the elbows in flounces formed of another band of flowered circles. There was a little stock and guimpe of white lace. Her pale grayish blue hat came well over the forehead, but rolled very much at each side, the crown being very low, and its trimming was one long and full dull blue ostrich plume.

Mrs. John McCullough, who was Miss Anna Dodge, was in town the other day with her mother, Mrs. Stephen H. Olin. Mrs. McCullough is a niece of Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Sr., and a granddaughter of the late philanthropist William E. Dodge. She is a tall, handsome girl, with a full figure and chestnut brown hair and eyes. Her costume was white linen, an ankle-length skirt with a deep hem and very few side plaits, and an almost three-quarter length coat, three-quarter fitting in back, but much looser in front and with coat sleeves, and was severely plain in cut and finish. She also wore white canvas shoes and a large round black straw hat having a wide, slightly saucer-shaped brim, short at the back, with two wide black ostrich plumes extending straight out from the crown on a line with the left ear for a distance of some six inches beyond the brim, at which point they drooped. Her coiffure was done high and showed the Marcel wave, and topaz-colored combs with the present fashionable tablike turnovers formed a curve around her hair an inch or two below the hat. Mrs. McCullough's mother, a sister of the Harriman brothers and formerly Mrs. William E. Dodge, Jr., wife of the second W. E. Dodge, and who some eighteen months ago became Mrs. Olin, was in a simple black and white frock and a large black hat.

+ + +

Mrs. Edna Wallace Hopper was at Sherry's at the luncheon hour garbed in a short-skirted costume of heavy white stuff. The skirt was very short, and the skirts of the coat came twelve or fourteen inches below the waist line. The coat, semi-fitting, with plenty of seams like a man's coat, had a wide turned-back collar and cuffs to match, heavily embroidered in white. Her rather large white straw hat was shaped a bit like an inverted saucer and shaded her eyes. A wide black bow with double loops crossed the front and the two ends were carried across the top—there was no crown—and over the narrow downward turned-back brim and in under the latter.

+ + +

Mrs. James A. Stillman, (Miss Anne Urquhart Potter,) a niece of Bishop Potter, has a gown quite unlike any hitherto noted in that the only portion of the bodice matching the skirt is the lower part of the sleeves; yet it is a pretty gown and suits its owner. The instep length skirt is of pongee colored silk laid in the quarter-inch plaitings, flat overlapping at the waist, but flaring in accordion fashion from a few inches below the waist to the feet. A girdle of the silk outlines the waist. The bodice is of white lace and white silk gauze, the gauze being arranged in plaits from the girdle up and having a white lace stock. From shoulder seams to elbows the sleeves are of the white material, but end at the elbows in white lace ruffles that fall over full sagging puffs of the silk matching the skirt. This frock is topped with a tricorner-shaped white straw bound with brown velvet and having a cluster of golden roses fastened at one side.

+ + +

Miss Claire Bryce has among her numerous white frocks a simple white linen trimmed with lengthwise insertions used in groups of two. The bodice is cut a bit low, in the so-called St. Cecilia fashion, and the opening is squared a trifle. The blouse has perpendicular insertions of white lace, and is only slightly loose. The sleeves with bands of lace going around the arm fit smoothly and almost tightly from shoulder seams to elbows, where they are finished with ruffles of linen and lace that fall half way from elbows to wrists and are cut to be slightly pointed in the back. The low-cut, squared neck is bordered by a narrow edge of plain linen, and then a band of lace an inch and a half wide outlines the opening. The skirt touches and falls in the back in folds, but is smooth at the front and sides, and lace insertions an inch and a half or two inches wide run from waist line to hem. These insertions are so arranged that two of them—each their own width apart—are used at intervals of twelve or fourteen inches to stripe the skirt. A small white hat tops it.

Fresh from Paris comes this frock of buff-colored linen with its very short round skirt and smart belted-in jacket. The skirt is laid in inch-wide tucks from the waist to below the widest portion of the hips and fits smoothly over them, and from that point hangs in released folds. Six inches from the bottom, and just at the top of the hem, pale yellow chrysanthemums and loose petals are embroidered in darker shades of yellow, and also in paler shades shading into white. They make a band ten inches wide. The little coat has its back cut in one piece and so shaped as to be almost smooth. The fronts are plaits at the sides and are fastened under a tucked belt of the gown material. A five-inch band of the linen embroidered in smaller designs of the flowers goes around the neck and down the sides, one end passing over the other and being slipped under the belt, where it is hooked in place. The sleeves are gathered full at the tops and puff out, being the widest midway from shoulder seams to elbows, and at this widest portion V seams are taken in them, the wider part of the seams coming just below the elbows, where gauntlet-shaped cuffs of linen covered with embroidered chrysanthemums are joined to these puffs. A saucer-shaped hat of white straw trimmed with a huge bow and loose crown bands of yellow taffeta has been imported to accompany this costume. A guimpe and stiff stock of plain white linen with a little cravat bow of yellow taffeta and a yellow silk coaching parasol lined with yellow and white striped silk and having a yellow-shell handle complete this gown, which forms part of the trousseau of a September bride.

A charming white voile frock seen at Delmonico's at the dinner hour was trimmed with pale blue voile and pendants of white passementerie. It was a close-fitting gown, and the wearer, though tall and slender, was rounded and graceful. A coat effect—and with long tails at that—was given solely through the skillful use of the trimmings. The stock had insertions of blue voile inserted in scalloped lines over which the white voile was lapped and stitched, and this overlapping of the white material of the gown over the insertions of blue and the stitching were features of the details of the gown. A yoke was outlined by the insertion of the blue voile, and from each little scallop of the insertion about the yoke swung a passementerie pendant an inch and a half long. The sleeves were small bishop sleeves, plaited above the wrists into deep gauntlet cuffs bordered with the blue appliques. Down the sides of the glove-fitting skirt came simulated coattails, perhaps twenty inches long, ending in squared-tab effects and outlined by the appliques of blue stitched in. At the back were two more tails, joined from some distance below the waist and ending perhaps sixteen inches from the end of the short trail. These long coat skirts, like the others, were simulated by the insertions or applications of stitched blue voile. The waist line of the coat was formed by the separate bodice being finished by a scalloped line of the blue voile inserted under its lower edge and stitched several times above to give firmness. The bottom of the skirt was finished by three overlapping tucks, each an inch and a half wide, edged with a fold of blue an eighth of an inch wide. With this was worn a toque of glossy dark green leaves, slightly pointed in the front and squared across the back, and having gardenias set in the upturned sides at intervals of two inches apart.

Miss Edith Lounsbery has an effective shirtwaist frock of the natural colored pongee, the blouse of which is embroidered in pale blue flowers. The skirt is laid in plaits that are stitched down flat and tight about the hips, and is otherwise quite plain. The yoke projects slightly over the sleeve tops and is finished by a large cord covered with the pongee. From the yoke down the blouse is gathered in tightly, and three or four inches below the yoke, and in the centre of the back a single round blue flower is embroidered in two or three shades of pale blue; on each side of this but higher up and near the outer edges of the yoke are two more flowers, one at each side. The blouse front matches the back, save that there are two or three more flowers, and several similar flowers appear on the sleeve tops, the lower part of the sleeves being quite flowing, and at the wrists are gathered into embroidered cuffs. The hat worn with this frock is a mushroom-shaped, cream-white straw, trimmed with loops and bands of several shades of blue, light blue velvet ribbons extending from the front to the back.

WHY THIS INCONSISTENCY?

WHEN a recent downpour was doing its worst to a Broadway crowd a man caused consternation in a department store by asking for a woman's rain cloak.

"Do you mean a mackintosh—a rain coat?" asked the clerk.

"I mean what I said," returned the man, stubbornly.

"I think we have what you want," said the clerk, "but we never call them rain cloaks."

"Why don't you?" asked the man. "That is what you ought to say. Everything else worn by women has a feminine name, then why not these—yes, Sir, I will say it—these waterproof cloaks. Why aren't you consistent? You call a long garment made of cloth a cloak, but when it happens to be made of rubber it takes on masculine attributes and becomes a rain coat. Why?"

"That is one too many for me," replied the clerk. "All I know is that we'd be considered crazy if we should advertise a special sale of rain 'cloaks.'"

In Woman's Domain.

Miss Grace Coppell, whose engagement to Walter Alexander was announced some days ago, is the youngest of the six daughters of the late George Coppell, whose city home at 40 Fifth Avenue was sold a year or so ago to William B. Boulton. The unmarried daughters spend most of their time at The Towers, the Coppell country place at Tenafly, N. J. This country place is rich in beautiful bric-à-brac and china, the Japanese objects of art being especially interesting, as the late Mr. Coppell bought many choice specimens while abroad and had others imported. Miss Coppell's married sisters are Mrs. Edgar Hetfield Booth, Mrs. Lawrence Bogert Elliman, and Mrs. Louis Haight. Arthur and Herbert Coppell are her brothers. Miss Coppell is an accomplished horsewoman, driving both four-in-hand and tandem; she also plays the harp. She is under medium height, has dark brown hair full of little glints, and has large red brown eyes and a fair pink-and-white complexion. She resembles Mrs. Elliman more than her other sisters.

Queen Alexandra has gone in for cats, and now has a great variety of breeds. Sandy, a Persian cat, has of late been her favorite, and when she travels she takes him with her. Two other Persian pussies—Monarch and Ossy—rank next in royalty's favor. The Queen now possesses nearly seventy-five felines. The animals have a groom, who is supplied with an assistant. Each cat has its daily bath, and is carefully brushed and combed twice a day. If one of them shows signs of illness a veterinary is immediately called, and his opinion at once reported to the Queen. If the animal is pronounced ailing it is removed to the cat hospital, in the stables of Buckingham Palace, where it remains until it is cured or dies. The Queen is informed of the progress of the animal's disease, and if it is serious she visits it.

The diet of her Majesty's pets is chiefly milk and fish, the former being brought from Sandringham for their use. Since her adoption of cats as pets the Queen has read and studied up their habits, the good points of different breeds, and their proper diet and care until she is accredited by her subjects as an expert on the subject of felines.

Italy may by many be deemed the ideal land of romance, but an American woman who has just returned from it discovered that some of its inhabitants are as keen at "doing" visitors as the French shopkeepers. She leased an apartment in Rome for the Winter. It had been connected with a second apartment, and both had been occupied by two titled brothers, but on the departure of one, for some months his thrifty twin, the Count, gladly leased it. One gas meter had served for both apartments previous to the letting, but the Count informed his tenant that on her arrival he had had another meter put in for his suite, but retained the key to the place where the meter was, in order, he said, to save her the trouble of being bothered by the meter tester's visits. At the end of the month the Count called on the American, and in the most courteous way explained that her gas bill had been included with his, and he took the liberty of handing it to her in person. Glancing at it, she replied that she could not possibly have used the amount of gas charged for on the bill. He gently insisted that she must have done so, as he had received his own bill. Next the American visited the gas company's office and learned, as she had expected, that the bill was for both apartments, and that no other meter had been installed. On returning home she sent her servant to the Count, politely requesting the key on the pretext that the gasman was there to see about making a new connection and wished to get at the meter. On receiving it, she had the gas turned off, still retaining the key. That night and the next her household used lamps. On the third day the gas company sent her word that a meter had been put in for the other apartment. At the expiration of the second month this wise woman sent for the Count and handed him the rent, less half the gas bill, saying as she did so that she had made a slight reduction on account of gas burned by him the previous month but paid for by her. Was the Count flustered? one might naturally inquire. Not a bit of it. Neither his expression nor color changed in the least; he merely bowed in his most gracious manner and said: "That is quite right, Madame. I thank you," and departed. Yet for a sum representing three American dollars he had lied profusely and tried his best to cheat a woman, and a young and beautiful one at that. Not much romance or sentiment in that!

Among the celebrated private gardens of Great Britain are those of Lowther Castle, near Penrith, yet only twenty years ago there was nothing on the grounds fit to be dignified by the name of garden. Both the Earl and Countess of Lonsdale take a deep interest in this feature of the castle's grounds, and the Earl designed a small one called "Hide Away Garden," especially for Lady Lonsdale's private use. It is concealed in a labyrinth of trees and shrubs. In its centre is a small pond covered with red lilies; there are also quantities of ancient Japanese trees in their quaint tubs, and numberless huge fuchsias and begonias. The rose tents of the rose garden were designed by Lord Lonsdale; chains are used to outline a structure the size and shape of a Government tent, and rose bushes and vines are so trained that they cover them, while inside small settles with seats for two are placed. This rose garden covers four acres, and every variety of rose save the tea, which does not do well there, is grown. It is inclosed by chains running from posts, and both chains and posts are covered with the growing roses.

The rock garden is perhaps the most novel of all. A severe storm of a dozen years ago that left many uprooted trees in its wake called Lord Lonsdale's attention to an extensive bed of limestone, and as soon as he could compass it an additional garden was created. This is an acre and a quarter in extent, and is slightly sunken, flights of steps leading down to it from the tree and shrub covered embankments surrounding it. Alpine plants with blooms have been used in profusion, and glow in vivid splendor against the soft background of the up-turned masses of gray rock. A natural spring feeds a large fountain, and near this is a small Summer house. This rock garden is near the famous Long Walk of Lowther, with its sweet brier hedges for a quarter of a mile, and marked by having its tall herbaceous plants arranged in twenty-yard spaces, each space being devoted to one color of one flower. Other gardens are the Italian, the Countess, and the scented gardens. There is a spot called Trafalgar Ground, on which a former Lowther planted trees representing the position of the various ships during the battle of Trafalgar. There is a large pond on the grounds called Iris Lake, as its waters are covered with many-colored irises, an ancient yew avenue, and also remarkable banks of rhododendrons three miles long. The castle itself is a huge pile of very pale gray stone, backed by woods, and having an elevation of a thousand feet. It is skirted by superb terraces, one of which is three miles long and has a natural limestone foundation. Lord and Lady Lonsdale, the latter being before her marriage Lady Cecilia Gordon and a daughter of the tenth Marquis of Huntly, are great friends of the Emperor and Empress of Germany, and many handsome gifts from them are to be seen at the castle.

The first Chelsea bowl made of that famous china may be seen in the salon of Lowther Castle, whose furniture consists largely of couches and chairs of solid ivory, with upholstery of beautiful silken materials. These were originally the property of Tippoo Sahib, but were purchased by William, second Earl of Lonsdale. The French silk with its curious scroll patterns that adorns the walls and the silk carpet of French manufacture belong to the same period. In the state bedchamber furniture brought from the Palace of Versailles is used, it being of Louis XV. and XVI. styles, and the walls are covered with Gobelin tapestries. A magnificent ebony and gold four-poster bedstead has Japanese curtains of rich silk, exquisitely embroidered, that were brought from Japan when trade was first opened with that land. A collection of cut glass in this room is stamped in gold relief with the arms and initials of Charles II. This is the suite occupied on their visits by Emperor William and by the present King when Prince of Wales. Queen Victoria, who visited the castle when she was a young girl, occupied a suite near this. One of the former Lowthers, Sir Richard, was a custodian of Mary Queen of Scots, and to this castle she was often allowed to come and there allowed to see her friends. In the room she occupied is a carved oak bedstead on which she slept.

One of the cleverest of the society women who have taken to bookbinding of the artistic sort as a fad is Mrs. Hobart Chatfield-Taylor of Chicago, the recent victim of a runaway accident, and who is about as well known socially in New York as in Washington or Chicago. As Rose Farwell, daughter of the late Senator C. B. Farwell, she had a fine social position before she married Chatfield-Taylor, and had a National reputation as a champion golf player. For the past two years Mr. Taylor, as has been mentioned in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, has been in Paris gathering material for his life of Molière. During most of that time Mrs. Taylor spent her leisure hours in the ateliers of the French capital studying the mysteries of bookbinding as practiced by the artists there, and incidentally such branches of art as would help her in her work. Now she has returned with about all that could be learned of the art, and has gone into the practice of her fad with all the old-time enthusiasm she showed at golf.

Many of Mrs. Taylor's friends now have copies of her husband's stories that she has bound and presented them, and while the work on these showed skill, they are as nothing to the sort of work she expects to turn out in future, when she will bind a number of privately printed books and editions de luxe. Most of these are intended for her own library, but she has promised two or three of her friends here that they shall have some of her handiwork as soon as she finds volumes that appeal to her as worthy of serious decorative binding. It is said that she will have a private bindery built in her charming home in Chicago, where she will have ample opportunity to give her talents in this direction full play.

Mme. Mary King Waddington, who arrived from abroad on Tuesday, after an absence of over thirty years, is a personage of much interest to innumerable New Yorkers and others outside of Gotham. In appearance she is a woman of middle height, having rather broad shoulders and has escaped the reviewer's eye. On her first visit to the French Embassy in London she crossed from Boulogne in a frightful gale of wind and rain, and arrived at Folkestone shivering and drenched. "All the way to London," she writes, "we felt little streams of water running down our backs, and our hats were a curiosity—filled with water like a bowl. We emptied them on the quay, but the feathers, of course, were finished. We were met at Victoria by two swell young Secretaries in evening dress, with gardenias in their buttonholes, who had come to meet their Ambassadress; and I have wondered since what impression they had of the limp, damp, exhausted female they extracted from the reserved saloon carriage."

Her description of going shrimp fishing in a plume-laden hat and diamond earrings, but with her skirts drawn up very short, and her feet and ankles bare, is another amusing bit, and the surprise of the Mayor of the town, on going to the shore, to see Madame l'Ambassadrice, togged out in that somewhat extraordinary combination and followed by her small son and niece quite as inappropriately rigged as to top, but all very happy.

Her presentation, a private one, to Queen Victoria was performed by Lady Harcourt, also an American and daughter of the late historian John Lothrop Motley. She had been a friend of Mme. Waddington when she was a child. She records in her letters describing the presentation that she wore a blue velvet visiting gown. Blue is Mme. Waddington's favorite color. The train of her robe at the Russian crowning was blue also.

Mme. Waddington declines to submit to an interview; says she never has been and never will be. Her son, Francis Waddington, came over with her. She will return to Europe in November. Mrs. Gladstone, Lady Salisbury, the Duchess of Cambridge, and Queen Victoria were among Mme. Waddington's many English friends.

NO COLLEGIAN ON HIS LINE.

"DO you go to Columbia?" inquired the benevolent-looking old lady, with no other purpose than to find out whether she could reach the university neighborhood by the car she had just boarded.

"Naw," replied the conductor in a tone that betrayed supreme contempt for advanced mental culture, "all dem college fellers is workin' on de Brooklyn trolleys."

Superstitions of the Nations

National Museum's Collection of Queer Charms, Amulets, and Fetiches—Some Strange Medicine Compounds.

IN a little corner of the National Museum at Washington is a display of articles especially fascinating to persons of a superstitious mind. It is the beginning of a collection which is being made to illustrate how the various nations of the world have utilized amulets, fetiches, &c., to ward off trouble and cure disease; also for their supposed sacredness. The exhibit has been placed in the department devoted to medicine and surgery, since it includes the equipment of the Indian medicine man, the Hindoo fakir, as well as the voodoo doctor of the negro and others supposed to have gifts of magic.

One of the most interesting portions of the display consists of a great variety of supposed medicines, both in liquid and powdered forms. They include pulverized deer horn, prescribed by Chinese physicians for patients who can pay the cost of the medicine, as it is very expensive.

The value of bones of the tiger is explained by a statement that this beast has such wonderful strength that even a spoonful of the jelly which is made from the bones imparts remarkable vigor to the one who takes such a small dose. The legend connected with this curious jelly is that the bravery, even ferocity, of the tiger enters into the person who takes it, just as the characteristics of the swordsmith of Japan are supposed to enter the weapon which he manufactures.

One of the ugliest articles in the collection in appearance is a clay image of a mountain lion. It is one of the principal fetiches of the Zuñi Indians of the Southwest. The specimen exhibited was carried by a Zuñi hunter about his person in order to insure success in the chase. This tribe considers the mountain lion as a sort of supernatural beast, and before going in pursuit of game they frequently invoke its aid by making sacrifices and other offerings. The fetich serves the same object as the bear's claws so commonly worn by the Indians who inhabited the Middle West a century ago. A fine specimen of this talisman is included in the collection. It is suspended on a thong of deerskin, and the records show that it was used as a necklace for many years by the chief who collected the claws. Not only were they supposed to aid him in hunting, but tended to ward off disease and formed a protection against injury. Perhaps the most notable of this class of articles, however, is a string of what appears to be ordinary red coral, which came from India, where it was worn by its various owners to protect them from disease.

In this country it is supposed to be especially valuable as a remedy for any disease of the blood, while, if applied to sores on the body, it extracts the foreign matter and causes them to heal more rapidly than in the process of nature. In some parts of the South, the negroes believe that pieces of coral hung on fruit trees tend to make them fertile, and that if enough are placed about the trunk and branches of a tree, it will surely bear a good crop of fruit the coming year. The same idea prevails regarding iron, and it is a common sight on the Eastern Shore of Chesapeake Bay to see peach and other trees "decorated" with horseshoes, old nails, barrel hoops, and any other scrap metal which is available.

Naturally a specimen of voodoo practice attracts much attention. The one exhibited at the museum consists of a piece of an old cotton shirt crudely sewed into a bag. The bag contains a chicken feather, two or three pieces of a woman's hair, some dried blood on a rag, and a sliver of pine wood.

An innocent-looking leather strap with an ordinary steel buckle forms another charm which is very popular in Washington itself. The one in question was secured from a colored workman, who bound it about his wrist to prevent disease. Hundreds of these straps are to be seen in Washington.

Next to the strap is a little ring made by bending a nail in a circle. The ring has a history. It was secured from England, where it formed a part of the fastening of a coffin. In the west counties the superstitious country folk have the belief that if a nail can be obtained from the receptacle in which a person has been buried for several years it possesses properties which will prevent cramps, one of the common diseases in this section of Great Britain. Consequently by twisting the nail into a circle they make what is called a cramp ring, to be worn on one of the fingers like a circlet of gold or silver. This charm is also worn not only in England, but in China, and some people in New England have the same belief.

Another guard against cramps consists of the kneecap of a full grown sheep. It is tied about the neck during the day and placed beneath the pillow at night. It may be unnecessary to say that specimens of dried potatoes, horse chestnuts, and ordinary stone carried in the pocket for the same purpose are included in the collection.

All the way from the Soudan comes a chapter of the Koran in miniature carefully covered with leather and provided with thongs by which it was bound to the chest of a dead Sudanese warrior from which it was taken. Probably millions of these amulets are worn by the Mohammedans of Asia and the Dark Continent, the soldiers believing them to be proof against wounds and the others proof against disease; thus insuring long life.

The specimens of the madstone arouse much curiosity on account of the history of their cures as well as their ordinary appearance. One is a creamy white in color, while the other is nearly black. In appearance they do not differ from ordinary stones. The darker one is about the size of the human eyeball and is irregular in shape, while the other is about as large as a hen's egg and is nearly the shape of a heart. Both have records for healing persons who have been bitten by animals supposed to be afflicted with hydrophobia. In each case a cure has been effected in the same way, the stone being placed upon the wound made by the bite until it was supposed to have extracted all the venom. A portion of the larger stone has been analyzed and is known to be composed in part of the mineral known as halloysite. This, it is believed, has magnetic qualities which are especially powerful when it is placed near poisonous matter of the kind associated with hydrophobia. The composition of the smaller stone is unknown, but in each case they were placed in milk, heated to the boiling point after being applied to the wounds, the liquid immediately becoming discolored and it is supposed that it absorbed the poison.

The most repulsive of all the collection is a fetich from Alaska which was the property of a medicine man of one of the tribes of the Far North. It is really a small idol which was carried about the person. Crudely carved of wood, it is painted a blood color, with the great staring eyes and shock of hair which are characteristic of the images found in that territory. It also bears a strong resemblance to the figures on some of the totem poles in the villages along the coast and on the Queen Charlotte Islands.

One of the rarest fetiches is an excellent specimen of the Chinese Kou Chi, or what some have called the vegetable lamb. This is regarded by many of the natives of the Celestial Empire as something supernatural. They believe it to be part vegetable and part animal. It bears a resemblance to an animal, although it might be taken for a horse as readily as for a lamb. It is composed principally of the plant known as rhizome and springs from seed. After attaining its growth, however, roots and tendrils spring from the fibre and grow downward until they enter the earth. It is this pecular formation which has probably caused it to be regarded with such reverence by the natives. They claim that after it has reached its full size it ceases to be vegetable and turns into an animal, feeding upon the tender shoots of plants which are near it. That the Kou Chi has long been regarded as supernatural is shown by the references to it in ancient Chinese literature. The specimen of Washington is one of the very few which have ever been seen in the United States.

This interesting department is the work of Dr. James M. Flint, who has made a study of fetiches and other articles utilized in what might be called magic medicine, and who is one of the principal authorities in this country on the subject. Only a beginning has been made in the collection, and it is expected to be greatly enlarged in the near future.

PALATIAL HOME AND WORKSHOPS FOR NEW YORK ENGINEERS.

Plans for Engineers' Club and Engineering Building to be Erected by Andrew Carnegie—Luxurious Libraries, Living Quarters, and Assembly Halls.

WHEN it became known that Andrew Carnegie had authorized "the erection of a suitable building in New York City to contain the libraries, assembly halls, offices, meeting and other rooms of the following bodies: American Society of Mechanical Engineers, American Institute of Electrical Engineers, American Institute of Mining Engineers, and a building contiguous for the Engineers' Club," it was generally understood that the philanthropist had announced one of his greatest gifts.

With the materialization of his original scheme, to the point where actual plans have been put on paper, the architects chosen, and work begun, what has been before a matter-of-fact acceptance of the importance of his donation to the engineering arts now becomes astonishment on the part of the layman that such a vast undertaking is to be paid for by one man.

It is doubtful if anywhere in the world there will be two buildings more perfectly fitted for their respective needs and more artistic in conception and execution than these two structures.

The programme of competition for the selection of an architect for the Engineering Building and the Engineers' Club followed roughly the fundamental requisites laid down by Mr. Carnegie, whose main thought was to have erected a structure in two parts, similar in exterior treatment and properly connected in the spirit of architecture, at the same time absolutely separate and distinct in the interior arrangement, and above all simple and dignified in the matter of decoration. His requirements were few, and he interjected no others during the entire time of the preliminary work, leaving the several organizations absolutely free to carry out his ideas in their own way.

To this end a committee of three members of each society was appointed to select and employ an architect to prepare plans and specifications and to obtain proposals for and to have charge of the erection of these buildings. Thus there were four committees representing the four bodies concerned, and a head committee of four, with Charles F. Scott as Chairman.

It was decided that the competition should be mixed, and Prof. William R. Ware was selected as professional adviser to assist in making the awards.

The following six architectural firms accepted the invitation of the committee to submit designs in the competition: Ackerman & Partridge, Carrere & Hastings, Clinton & Russell, Lord & Hewlett, Palmer & Hornbostel, and Whitfield & King. To each of these firms the committee paid $1,000 as compensation for the expense of preparing plans for both buildings. Whitfield & King, to whom the contract for the Engineers' Club was awarded, are not entitled to the extra $1,000, this amount being deducted from the final commission.

Besides these six, all architects anywhere in the country, who had been in actual practice for two years or more before July, 1904, and who proved that their experience was sufficient to warrant their competing, were invited to submit designs. Of these four received equal prizes of $400 each for the best design of both buildings. There were twenty-eight of these "outsiders" who competed, and one of them was chosen to build the Engineering Building. He is Herbert D. Hale, a Boston architect, whose work was considered superior to that of any of the six firms which had received the first invitation. One New York firm, Trowbridge & Livingston, received one of the four prizes.

Cost of the Structure.

The money available for the two buildings, exclusive of decorative carving, sculpture, and painting, and of furniture, except the seating of the large auditoriums, and exclusive also of the cost of removing the buildings now on the ground and of any further excavation which may prove necessary as the work advances, is about $1,000,000. The entire cost will exceed $2,500,000, of which $1,500,000 is a gift from Mr. Carnegie.

It is interesting to note that the lavishness of expenditure extends even to the side and rear walls of both buildings. The committee insisted that they should be conformable in treatment to the front walls, so that where they rise above the other buildings surrounding them, they shall look like a completed structure and not a section of an unfinished block.

The problem before the competing architects was by no means a simple one. The peculiarities of the site were no small item of discouragement in themselves. Roughly speaking, the plot on which the two buildings are to stand is midway on the block bounded by Fortieth and Thirty-ninth Streets, Fifth and Sixth Avenues. The Engineering Building is to front on Thirty-ninth Street and the club building on Fortieth Street. The latter thus will have an unsurpassed outlook over Bryant Park and the new library.

The difficulties are best understood when it is known that after a selection of architects had been made their plans were by no means accepted as they stood. As a result, although the selection was made early in July, it is not until now that the corrected, final drawings are ready for inspection.

The Engineers' Club.

Whitfield & King, the successful firm, have prepared a design for the Engineers' Club which immediately strikes even the layman as sumptuous in the extreme. It is doubtful if anywhere in this country so luxurious a club dwelling exists.

The Engineers' Club will stand on a plot having a frontage of 50 feet and a depth of 98 feet 9 inches, on the south side of West Fortieth Street. The private dwellings, Nos. 32 and 34, are now being removed. The top of the adjoining building on the east is less than 60 feet above the curb, while that on the west is 58 feet in height. Both these dwellings carry restrictions preventing their being higher.

A glance at the perspective will show that this height reaches approximately to the beginning of the fourth floor of the Engineers' Club, each of the three lower stories being 19 feet in height. Thus the building is sure of light in abundance for the upper nine stories for all time to come.

The building will cover the entire plot to the rear line, with the exception of a court on the west side of the structure. It is to be twelve stories in height, with a basement and a sub-basement besides. Perhaps the most unusual feature of the entire building, filed, as it is, with innovations, is the fact that for the first time since elevators were first used a building is to be erected in New York City in which a staircase is to be made a practical feature of the interior and is to be used to the exclusion of all other means of ascent between the first three stories.

Staircase of Monoliths.

The staircase will be entirely of marble, with each step a monolith seven and a half feet long. The rises will be low, in order to facilitate the ascent. It will occupy the entire central portion of the building on the west side, and will open off the main hall on the ground floor in two highly ornamental, curving sections, which will meet in a big landing half way up to the next floor. Over the top of the third landing, on a level with the fourth floor of the building, a magnificent dome of colored glass will light the stairway for its entire length. Above this dome the space will be left clear to the sky, the space above forming the only court the building will have.

There will also be service stairs, for use of the club members in case of emergency, to run from sub-basement to roof. Above the third floor these stairs will be the only means of communication between floors other than the elevators. There will be two passenger elevators, each with a capacity for twelve to fifteen persons, which will run from the basement to the roof garden. There will be no entrance to the elevators on the second and third floors, however. A freight elevator will be provided to run through the entire building.

In the sub-basement and basements there will be the boiler and engine rooms, dynamos, pumps, refrigerating plant, elevator machinery, fuel and storage rooms in the former, and in the latter the wine cellar, barber shop, boot-cleaning stands, men's locker, maids' locker, stewards, and storerooms, main lavatory, and men's toilet.

The main floor is to be constructed so as to impress the visitor at the outset that he has entered a building the like of which has never been built before. By no means the crowning feature, it is at the same time a wonderful sample of the beauty and splendor of the floors above. The entrance will be through huge doors 15 feet wide, the total width of many private houses. Windows 6½ feet wide and twice as high will flood the interior with light.

The reception room, running the width of the building, with a ceiling twenty feet above the floor, will be treated in a simple but effective style, marble predominating. The office will be here, mahogany and marble furnishing the equipment, with a safe built into the masonry of the wall. A feature of this floor will be an enormous coat room, with accommodations for more than 700 wraps at one time.

The main hall, lighted sixty feet above by the colored glass dome, will be square in shape, with the elevators on one side and the grand staircase on the other. It will be surrounded with sculpture from famous hands and will be almost entirely in marble. The stairs at this point will also lead to the basement. Behind them will be telephone, telegraph, and stenographers' booths, as well as a lavatory.

Running behind the elevator shafts, the bar will extend along the east wall, with an entrance out of the reception room in front. It will be connected with the wine cellar by dumb waiters and by the service stairway.

Not until the visitor has passed through the main hall and entered the café, however, will the luxuriousness of this club for scientists be appreciated. In this room, covering upward of 1,500 square feet, running the extreme width of the building and clear of exposed columns, will be two grills, one on either side, where chops and steaks will be cooked over coals in the fashion of a century ago. There will be no kitchen connected with the café, every particle of food being prepared on the grill in full sight of the diner. Windows facing the rear of the Engineering Building will afford ample light. The style of finish in this room is yet undetermined, but it is believed that the walls and ceilings will be covered with mahogany, the ceiling being finished with exposed beams, 30 feet in length.

The second or clubroom floor, reached only by the grand staircase, will be divided practically into two parts. In the front half the clubroom, containing 1,300 square feet and lighted by six big bay windows, will serve as a general lounging place for the members. As in the case of the café, the clear span of 50 feet will be carried without exposed pillars.

The library, in the rear, will be almost as large as the clubroom, and will be lined on all four sides with bookcases running the full 20 feet from floor to ceiling. The capacity of these cases is about 18,000 volumes.

A lavatory, the elevator shafts, service stairway, and a landing connected by dumbwaiters with the bar below will occupy the remaining space.

The billiard room floor, as the third story will be called, will contain the billiard room in the front half of the building, and in the rear portion the board room, committee room, and card room. Again a landing behind the elevator shaft will connect this floor with the bar on the main floor, and drinks will be served in the billiard room.

The next six floors will be entirely given over to bedrooms, sixty-six in all. They will be of varying sizes, with a bath attached to each. Besides this there will be a showed bath on each floor as well as toilet rooms.

On the tenth or breakfast room floor there will be the breakfast room, covering 1,000 square feet in area, two private dining rooms, a public lavatory, service rooms, and bar. This floor will have no connection with those below it, and will be served entirely from the floors above.

The banquet hall on the eleventh floor will be the largest room of its kind in the city. The entire floor, except for the necessary service rooms, will be clear of pillars and partitions, and will run the full 90 feet, from front to rear. It will cover about 4,000 square feet. The height of this floor will exceed 20 feet, and will be magnificently finished.

The roof garden will occupy the front half of the roof, a portion of it being roofed with glass. The elevators will run direct to the roof garden. In the rear will be the kitchen, supplying the banquet hall, and the breakfast rooms; refrigerator room, storeroom, housekeeper's rooms, six sleeping rooms for servants, separate service stairs in two parts, one coming up from and the other going down to the service rooms of the banquet hall, making the passage of waiters either way unnecessary, and a big dining room for the servants.

The Engineering Building.

The Engineering or Union Building is to be primarily a workshop, whereas the club is primarily a playhouse. Here the engineers will be at home in the midst of all the latest and most approved mechanical contrivances of the hour. There will be no provision made for the comforts of the members beyond those necessary for the different pursuits to be followed in the various rooms. It will be strictly and grimly utilitarian—every inch of it.

Its exterior will be similar in treatment and material to the club building, marble and Dutch brick forming the walls on all sides. The site comprises the five lots, Nos. 25, 27, 29, 31, and 33 on the north side of West Thirty-ninth Street, giving a total frontage of 125 feet with a depth of 98 feet 9 inches. It is directly behind the plot on which the club building will be erected. Mr. Carnegie owns 23 West Thirty-ninth Street, a private residence, and its height is thus restricted for all time. The building will cover approximately 10,500 square feet.

At the top of the building will be four stories, all alike, to be held for the use of technical, scientific, and engineering societies, which may be invited to make use of them. Below these will be three floors for the accommodation of the offices and other rooms for the three engineering societies, each of which will reserve a floor for its own uses. Each of these floors will be divided as follows: Reception, editorial, counting rooms; Secretary's office, office staff, board and committee, stationery and transactions, and storage rooms. Additional accommodation for the storage of publications and other documents will be a feature of the basement.

Advantage will be taken of the roof spaces in the top floor in furnishing rooms for the making of large scale diagrams and photographic enlargements.

On the floor below the upper seven, the fifth floor, will be the library, containing at the outset the combined collections of the three societies, comprising about 50,000 volumes. There will be shelf room for 400,000 additional volumes. In this connection it is interesting to note that all the books on engineering now owned by the city, and originally intended for the Astor Library, in Bryant Park, will find final lodgment in this library of the Engineering Building.

The room will be 22 feet high, with two galleries running around it. The bookcases will be arranged in three stories, each 7 feet high.

The next two lower floors will be given over to a series of lecture rooms and auditoriums, the largest of which, on the third floor, will have a gallery. This one alone will seat 1,500 persons. The six others will seat from 100 to 600, and are arranged so that they may be thrown into one.

On the second floor there will be an assembly and smoking room for informal meetings. It will also be used for dinners on special occasions, which will be served by caterers from outside. On this floor also will be space for wallcases containing museum collections.

The main floor will be devoted mainly to administrative purposes. Near the main entrance there will be three coat rooms, aggregating 2,200 square feet, capable of taking care of the wraps of 1,500 persons at once. There will also be a women's dressing room on this floor. A Bureau of Information, containing the telegraph and telephone offices, the Post Office, and a sales department for the distributing of the publications of the societies, will be a feature of this floor.

A driveway will run directly through the building on the street level, and all deliveries and shipments will be made at the court in the rear. This will also serve the Engineers' Club.

The floor of this driveway will form the roof of coal pockets in the basement holding 300 tons. All the various machines will be in the basement and sub-basement, the ventilating plant being especially comprehensive.

In the auditoriums at the lecture tables there will be furnished gas, water, compressed air, and electrical current to make more interesting the scientific lectures.

Three elevators will be sufficient to care for the entire building, the amount of access for visitation being much less than is the case in the ordinary office building.

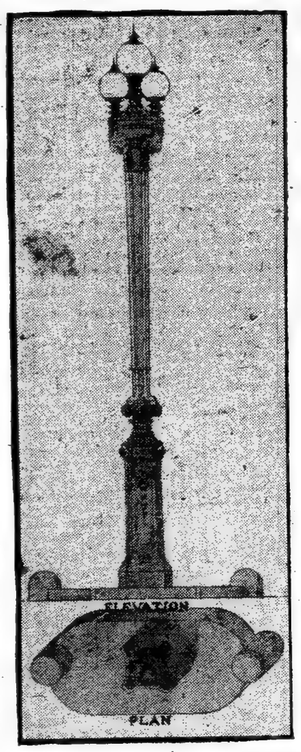
On the first-floor level a bridge will connect this building with the café of the Engineers' Club.

It is expected that the two structures will be completed early in 1906.

ISLES OF SAFETY IN TIMES SQUARE.

TWO isles of safety are being constructed in Times Square directly in front of the Hotel Astor.

The bronze electroliers, costing $10,000 each, presented to the city by William Waldorf Astor, through W. C. Muschenheim, proprietor of the Hotel Astor, will be placed in the centre of the isles.



The Municipal Art Commission has approved the electroliers, and pronounced them to be works of art worthy of a place in one of the city's most prominent and busiest thoroughfares.

The work of construction is being supervised by the Municipal Art Society.

Absentmindedness No Crime.

Judge—Not guilty! Why, the policeman says he actually caught you with your hand in this man's pocket.

"Mebbe so, your Honor. But once I had a coat of the same pattern, an' I'm a little absent-minded at times. Fact, your Honor."

Confirmed.

Quizzy—There is a rumor around the hotel that you and Arthur had a terrible falling out last night.

Dizzy—Quite true; we were both in the hammock when the rope broke.

To Measure the Light of The Faintest Stars

Harvard's New Telescope and the Story of Its Acquirement.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Sept. 3.—The new telescope—an instrument which is expected to be of the utmost value in photographic astronomy—which Harvard has just acquired is the five-foot reflecting telescope constructed by the famous English astronomer, A. A. Common, lately deceased. Mr. Common informed Prof. Pickering before his death that it was his desire that the telescope should belong to Harvard, but the funds of the observatory were inadequate to its purchase and maintenance, and the idea was abandoned.

This Summer Prof. Herbert Hall Turner of Oxford paid Prof. Pickering a visit, and as a result of his visit the telescope has been purchased and is now being packed preparatory for shipment. Mr. Common's heirs have parted with it on terms so favorable that it may in a sense be said that he has contributed largely to the cost.

The Common telescope has an aperture of five feet, and while it is smaller than the reflector which was exhibited at the Paris exposition, it is far more useful from a scientific point of view.

The use to which this glass will be put is the measuring of the light of the very faintest stars.

Reflecting telescopes differ radically from refractors, and had fallen into disuse until the art of stellar photography came into being and was taken up with such distinguished success at Harvard. Instead of lenses, the reflector has a huge mirror at the base of its tube, and is poised very much as mortars are poised in war; indeed, they may not inappropriately be likened to mortars. The focal length of the Common reflector, with its aperture of five feet, is only twenty-seven feet. It will, therefore, not be incased in a dome, but will be placed in the eastern part of the observatory grounds, upon a brick foundation and with a sliding roof arranged to revolve upon a circular rail. The mirrors are to be brought over first so as to experiment previous to setting up the entire instrument.

Harvard has one famous reflector already—the Bruce 24-inch telescope—which is now at the branch observatory in Arequipa, Peru. This instrument is the largest photographic doublet in the world, and has been of the greatest, value in observing the southern skies. Two others, of 24-inch apertures, are being constructed, one to be sent to Peru and the other for use at some northern point. So the equipment of the observatory for its especial work—photography—will, with the arrival of the Common telescope, be second to none other.

NAMING THE COLORS.

THE French are the greatest people in the world to invent names for colors, said Henri Bendel, art designer for the Four Hundred, who has just returned from Paris. "A crisp orange shade will be the Cleopatré. Why? Well, the Egyptian Queen's eyes, like her favorite cats, glittered with gold lights—that's the reason. An exquisite lavender is the Champs Elysées, it is said, for the reason that the Count Castellane wears lavender gloves when he promenades there.

"In the rose family there is a delicious passing from Eglantine through Reine, Roi Corail, Congres, and Weigelia to Corean Azalea. Rubens purple has glints of the German sunsets and Rostand green makes you think of the shrubs of Southern France.

"Paris is quick to catch the attention of the public—quicker, I think, than the Americans. Japanese tints have been studied carefully by their artists, and Nippon color schemes will be the things in art if they can make it so. Cercis Japonica is wine color; Iris is Japan purple blue; Symplocus is of the ultramarine blue. A beautiful green is Japanese Cypress. Callicarpa is the oddest blue on the list. It was discovered, I believe, by a French naval officer, who studied a Festival of the Tail, or Fish fête, at Yeddo, where Callicarpa flowers made the chief decoration. The flowers are generated on a small fish-shaped bush, and when the blue-purple fruit comes in the Fall, the fin-shaped leaves fall off and leave the tree nearly all branches and berries. The brown of the stem and blue of the fruit will be a great combination in art decoration this Fall."

SMALLEST WOMAN AND TINIEST BABY.

THE smallest woman and the tiniest baby in all the world met yesterday at the Infant Incubators in Dreamland, Coney Island, and were photographed. The woman in question was Queen Mab, next to Mrs. Tom Thumb the most celebrated midget of modern times. The baby was little Beatrice, tiniest of her sex and tiniest incubator infant ever reared.

Beatrice at birth weighed just one pound eight ounces, and measured precisely 12 inches. Her head then, as now, was no bigger than a billiard ball, and she herself could easily be held within the palm of a man's hand.

Queen Mab is now twenty-two years old, weighs twenty-nine pounds, and measures 34 inches.

Baby Beatrice is four weeks old and one of the most thriving of the incubator infants in Dreamland. She came into the world fully three months before her time, and when brought to the incubators the chances seemed about one in a thousand that she would survive the day. She hails from Harlem.

Queen Mab was born in Paris, one of three children, two of whom, at birth, were the same as to weight, height, &c., as any normal infant. She was regarded then as the smallest baby ever born to live, and created no end of a sensation.

"A HERB FOR EVERY PAIN."

IN Bethune Street, where Greenwich Village seems to tie itself into a knot of tangled thoroughfares, there is an old-time herb shop. Fifty years or so ago there were many of them in New York, but there are very few now. The sign over the door reads "A herb for every pain." On the shelves and counters are three hundred kinds of herbs for the cure of human ills, and bottles with fluid extracts made from nearly half of that number, or combinations of them. Customers with old-fashioned ideas about health and sickness go there for bugle-weed for consumption, sumach for sore throat, wintergreen for rheumatism, and extract of oats to cure drunkenness. At this season of the year there is a constant call for catnip, sassafras, chamomile, horehound, yellow dock, cherry bark, and mandrake. Boneset tea is brewed as a cure for colds and served hot in little china cups. Lobelia is sold as an emetic when persons living in the neighborhood have taken poison, either by accident or otherwise. Some of the herbs are deadly poisons, and are sold under the same restrictions as other poisons. Strangers to the herb doctor are served with caution.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

New High Records for Loans and Deposits, Large Loss of Cash.

The bank statement made new high records for loans and deposits, while the loss of cash was much larger that was indicated by the reported movements of currency during the past two weeks. It is not unusual, however, at this time of the year and at the beginning of the month for considerable amounts of cash to be drawn out over the counter, which are not reported otherwise than in the bank statement.

Thirty-five banks had increases in loans, six of them exceeding $500,000, eighteen banks had decreases in loans, only two of them more than $500,000.

The First National Bank reported the largest increase in loans, $5,644,700; the National City Bank reported an increase of $5,315,400. The National City Bank showed the largest loss in cash, $4,430,800; the First National lost $2,679,500.

Increases in loans, accompanied by loss of cash, during the crop-moving season may indicate rediscounts of country banks.

There were sixteen banks with less than 25 per cent. reserve, seven National and nine State. This compares with fifteen banks below the reserve required in the preceding week, twenty in the week ending Sept. 5, 1903; thirty-two in the corresponding week of 1902, and twenty-nine in 1901. The total deficit of these sixteen banks was $1,826,350, which is equivalent to the reserve required upon deposits of $7,301,400, out of the total of $1,217,084,000.

Money on call loaned on the Stock Exchange last week at 1½@1¾ per cent. Time money was in light demand at 2 per cent. for sixty days, 2½ per cent. for ninety days, and 3¼ per cent. for four to six months. There was fair inquiry for commercial paper at 3¾@4 per cent. for indorsements, 4@4½ per cent. for prime single names, and 4½@5 per cent. for good names. Demand sterling ranged from 4.8730@4.8740 to 4.8760@4.8770, closing heavy at the lower rate. Gold exports were $1,000,000 in coin to Argentina.

In the corresponding week of 1903 money loaned on call at 1½@2½ per cent., averaging 2 per cent. Time money was quoted at 4½ per cent. for sixty days, 5 per cent. for ninety days, 5¼ per cent. for four months, 5½@6 per cent. for five and six months. Commercial paper was in light demand at 6 per cent. for indorsements, 6@6½ per cent. for prime single names, and 6½@7 per cent. for good names. Demand sterling ranged from 4.8005@4.8015 to 4.8635@4.8645, closing firm at the higher rate on account of the advance of the Bank of England's minimum rate of discount to 4 per cent.

AN EXPENSIVE LUNCH.

Making Pocket Money in the Market Often Very Expensive—Present Extent of Speculative Trading.

Some surprise has been caused by the activity in the stock market in recent weeks, especially on days when it has universally been stated that the public was taking no part in the market, and that all, or practically all, the trading represented transactions made by professionals. Probably some confusion exists as to terms, "the public" being, in the minds of many, a very indefinite phrase. While there are a great many persons in stocks directly connected with the Stock Exchange either as members or as partners in Stock Exchange firms who are constantly in the market, that is not the public.

The public is composed of those who buy stocks for investment, and who, when they have paid for them, put them away in their safe deposit boxes and forget all about them. Their purchases are made through brokers, but they are not members of the Exchange, and they are as much professional traders as the members who are actually on the floor of the Exchange and who trade there for their own account. The market is not considered as having passed into the hands of the public until the buyers include a great many other than those who follow the game as a living, staying constantly to scalp the market, or who are constantly in the market for the sake of gambling. The market is as active as it is without any general public buying, for the reason that of late the number of professional traders of the character described has greatly increased.

To what extent such traders operate, and how actively their operations respond to general bull movements is often illustrated by the following, recently related with much glee by one of the man well known in the Street dropped into a Stock Exchange office, and, "just to make lunch money," sold short about 5,000 shares of the Metropolitan stocks, which on the particular day in question were fluctuating in rather wild fashion, offering large profits if the trader was fortunate enough to be on the right side. After selling the stock the young man went out to take the lunch the price of which he was to make in the market while he was gone. He stayed a good while at his lunch, and when he came back the stock was up several points. The game had gone against him, but his disposition was not to settle it, had matter worse by sending good money after bad, so he gave the order to cover his stock back. Without counting commissions and costs he was out $15,000, which represents the profit of many days' work.

A CURIOUS STEEL SITUATION.

Threatened Price Reductions and Strength of Stocks.

Seldom has Wall Street run across such a peculiar situation as it is confronted with to-day in the steel trade and its representative stock issue. Everywhere there is talk of a reduction in prices, yet steel shares are strong, for it is argued a reduction in prices will ultimately revive the demand and bring about a boom in steel. But in those lines of steel products where all price reduction talk is tabooed, as in steel rails, the argument is exactly reversed. There will be heavy orders for steel rails at high prices, profits will be large, consequently stocks should boom. Whichever way the stock market bear may turn he finds a gun loaded with arguments which confuse him and put him to rout.

But, curious as this situation is, still more remarkable is the attitude assumed toward the policy of reducing prices by the independents and by the Steel Corporation, or the trust, itself. When the trust was originally formed it was heralded far and wide that one of the great benefits it would confer would be on the steel trade in particular, on its shareholders and on the business world in general. By its almost absolute control of output, the its officers Directors, and promoters announced, it would be enabled to maintain prices on such a level as to always insure a handsome profit, and with such stability as to remove that uncertainty as to future quotations which not only causes anxiety, but often loss, to the consumer and producer alike. All the world applauded what was called a laudable intention, but applause is ephemeral, and all that it needed to turn public opinion was a somewhat extended period of depression. Prices, it was said, were too high and should be reduced. The corporation, however, true to its originally announced policy, refused to consent to any reduction. Then its competitors, known as the independents—taking advantage of the fact that the trust had pledged itself to the policy of maintaining prices and was trying to live up to it—began to make secret cuts right and left, all the time reaffirming in public their adherence to schedule prices.

At last the time arrived where the Steel Corporation's officials decided to call a halt to these inroads on its business, and at the last meeting of one of the important pools its representatives openly announced that they were in favor of making a lower public schedule. That would have taken the wind out of the sails of the independents, and they objected, with such success that the lower schedule was not adopted, the independents being numerically strong enough to outvote the trust.

Now, however, the statement is made that this week a public reduction will be decided on at an adjourned meeting of the same pool which last week voted down such a scheme. It would seem to be evident that the trust must have succeeded in bringing some very strong pressure to bear on certain of the independents to secure this change in opinion. Just what that pressure was is not known, but it is believed that it was nothing more nor less than the method employed by Standard Oil interests in other business lines, namely, threats of cutting prices to the bone. It must be remembered that Standard Oil interests have been in the ascendency of the Steel Corporation's affairs for many months.

ADVANCE IN JAPANESES.

Broadening Demand for the New Bonds —Some Reasons That Prompt Their Purchase.

Recent foreign advices have in some instances, at least, inclined to the view that the strength shown more or less consistently by the various issues of Russian State bonds traded in on the European Bourses was the result of a carefully planned support by Russian interests, as well, perhaps, as support given by French bankers who have too much at stake to neglect any opportunity to maintain the status of securities in which French capital has been invested to the extent of many billions of francs. That the reverses suffered by Russia have not been effective in depressing her securities seems indeed unexplainable, except on the supposition that they have been given direct support. During the past week the natural course of events seemed to be more logically reflected in the price of the bonds of the two belligerent countries, but even now that Russia is facing a double defeat the price of her bonds is yielding but little. On the other hand, however, the past week has seen a very substantial improvement in the new Japanese bonds, part of which issue was floated in this country. The trading in these bonds on the Stock Exchange during the past week has been unusually large, and, as stated, the price has advanced sharply. The prospect of new loans, both by Russia and Japan, in the near future naturally suggests the thought that the strength of the belligerent bonds is brought about with a view of facilitating new flotations, but at least so far as the local movement in the Japanese bonds is concerned it is the assertion of the buyers that their purchases have reference to no such event, and that they have been buyers of the bonds because of their belief in their value as investments. Even at this date the issue of foreign securities in this market is looked upon by many as nothing more than an experiment, which in the case of the Japanese issue was very successful, more because of the fact that American sentiment favors Japan in its struggle with Russia than because of any broadening of the American market for such securities in general.

For the Japanese bonds it is claimed that no other investment can be found yielding as good a rate of interest that offers any better, or even as good, security as that underlying these bonds. One of the largest buyers of the bonds during the past week was Sig. H. Rosenblatt, who states that the demand both here and abroad has increased very perceptibly within recent weeks, and rather from investors than from speculators, who might naturally be expected to buy the bonds, in the expectation of a substantial advance if the success of the Japanese is as complete as seems indicated at the moment. The point is made that not since 1874 has there been a deficit in the Japanese budget, and it is claimed that even should Japan fail in the present war, improbable as such an event seems, the interest and principal of these bonds would still be safe, inasmuch as the terms of peace could not be such as to destroy Japan's commerce, the returns from which are directly pledged as security for the recent fifty-million-dollar issue.

14 LIVES ARE LOST IN TENEMENT FIRE

Escapes on Attorney Street House Ladderless.

THREE MEN ARE ARRESTED

Owner, Agent and Superintendent Charged with Criminal Negligence —Many Valiant Rescues— A Dozen Hurt.

A contractor began a few days ago to make alterations in the five-story tenement at 164 Attorney Street. He or his men took down the iron ladders connecting the fire escape balconies from the third floor down, both on the back and front of the house. Early yesterday morning fourteen persons, most of them little children, were burned to death in that house. Twelve others were seriously burned.

The police and Coroner Scholer started out immediately to fix the blame. Detective Sergeant Lennon last evening arrested Leon Sober, an owner of the building; Morris Levine, the agent, and Henry De Breitman, the Superintendent. They are charged with criminal negligence.

According to the police and the firemen, there is no building permit on file for the alterations.

The lists of dead and injured are:

LIGENMUYER, BERNARD, of Engine Company 11; overcome by smoke, and removed to engine house under care of physician.

WHITE, JOHN, of Engine Company 11; bruised on head and contusions of the body; in Gouverneur Hospital.

ZWIRN, PESCHA, forty-eight years old; burned about body and also injured internally by fall from fire escape; in Bellevue Hospital.

It was 2:45 o'clock when the fire was discovered. At that hour, owing to the heat and sultry condition of the air inside the tenement at 166 Attorney Street, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Lipkin, with their little daughter, Anna, were sitting on the stoop trying to get a little fresh air. The little girl happened to go into the middle of the street, and, looking up, she saw a glare through one of the windows on the third floor of No. 164. She shouted to her parents, and they ran into the street and looked up. They, too, realized at a glance that the glare was from no lamp, and immediately began to shout "Fire!" Their shouts attracted the attention of other people in the neighborhood, who also began to shout.

Louis Silkwitz of South Beach, who had been attending a party in the neighborhood, and who was passing through Houston Street, heard the shouts of the people in Attorney Street. Silkwitz ran to the alarm box on the corner and turned in an alarm, or, at least, he thought he did. To be certain he then went to another box at Houston Street and Avenue C and turned in another. This second alarm, it appears, was the one that worked, and a minute later Truck No. 18, whose house is several blocks south on Attorney Street, lumbered up with the horses at a full gallop. By this time, although less than five minutes had elapsed since the little Lipkin girl had discovered the fire, there was a fierce blaze on the third floor, and the flames were already licking their way through the hallways.

The two lower floors, owing to the alterations in progress, were unoccupied. Up stairs, however, men, women, and children fought one another to get out of the house to the fire escapes. They got there only to be thrown into a still greater panic when they saw that the ladders connecting the fire escapes below the third floor had been removed.

When the big truck arrived Capt. Harmon saw at once that he had a great work before him, and shouted to his men to hoist their ladders without delay and to begin the work of rescue. Two of the twenty-foot ladders were quickly hoisted. While they were still in the air and being dropped back against the walls of the doomed building Firemen Michael Stevens and Christian Kalbfleisch were clambering up to start the work of life-saving.

Firemen Soon at Work.

As the first ladder struck the wall just below the third story Stevens grabbed the fire-escape railing, and, being unable to get on it through the hole, vaulted over it, sprang up the ladder leading to the escape on the fourth floor, where he repeated the performance, and in less than a minute

MAD WOMAN KILLS POLICEMAN.

Besieged in Room, She Is Subdued with a Germicide.

BOSTON, Sept. 4.—In a sudden fit of insanity to-day Mrs. Minnie McKenzie tried to kill her husband at her home, 121 Falcon Street, East Boston, shot and fatally wounded Patrolman Alfred M. Sturdivant, wounded Patrolman John Burke, and, barricading herself in the front room of her tenement for more than five hours, stood off a squad of fourteen policemen. She was finally captured by the use of germicide injected through holes in the barricaded door.

When overcome by the fumes she was found to be armed with two large revolvers and had a large amount of ammunition. During the barricade she fired more than fifty shots, many going wild into the crowd of 5,000 people which had gathered about the house.

It is said that Mrs. McKenzie, who is thirty-four years old and of powerful frame, has been an inmate of an insane asylum. She became violently insane soon after the dinner hour, and, securing a revolver of heavy calibre, began shooting at her husband, but none of the shots took effect.

McKenzie notified the East Boston Police Station and four patrolmen were sent to the house. When they arrived Mrs. McKenzie had retired to a front room, locked the door, and barricaded it with a bureau.

The officers succeeded in getting the door partially open, when the woman pushed the muzzle of her revolver through the opening and fired four shots, three of the bullets striking Patrolman Sturdivant. One of them lodged in the left thigh, one in the abdomen, and a third in the left temple. He was removed to the Relief Hospital, where he died to-night.

A hurry call was sent to headquarters, and a squad of ten policemen was sent to the scene with orders to capture the woman without injuring her. Meantime Mrs. McKenzie had strengthened her defenses.

The police made repeated attempts to dislodge her, but every sound of a voice or footstep in the hall was the signal for a fusillade of shots from the front room, the bullets passing through the barricaded door. A bullet struck Burke, but the wound is not serious.

At intervals the woman threw open a street window and fired into the crowd on the street, but so far as known none of the onlookers was injured.

At 9 o'clock to-night a quantity of germicide was forced into the room, and a few minutes later the frenzied woman succumbed to the fumes. She was locked up while still unconscious.

Patrolman Sturdivant was forty-four years old and unmarried. He had been on the force since 1888.

Mrs. McKenzie is the mother of three children, the youngest an infant daughter.

The police say that her insanity was first manifested in an attempt to drown the infant in a wash tub. Her husband interfered, and the shooting followed.

HONOR FOR AMERICAN GIRL.

Miss M. Reynolds of Iowa Governess for Royal Chinese Children.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 4.—The Dowager Empress of China has secured the services of a graduate of Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., as governess for her nephews, in the person of Miss Mary Reynolds. She will embark for China on Sept. 15. Miss Reynolds was chosen by the Minister of China at Washington, on the indorsement of President Salmon of the Northfield College. Her home is at Sibley, Iowa, where she was born, but she has attended Northfield College for seven years. She completed her college course at Carleton this Spring, having gone through the preparatory school and college courses with high honors. She was a member of the editorial staff of the Carletonia, and is a gifted writer. The class play given by the seniors this Spring was almost entirely from her pen. She has taught several terms of school successfully.

Miss Reynolds will have under her charge three Chinese children. The Dowager Empress commissioned her Consul Generals at Paris, at Berlin, at London, and at Washington to obtain the services of a competent governess. All of these submitted names of college graduates, but out of a score or more the Dowager Empress chose the one recommended by the Minister to the United States.

HEAVY STORM IN SARATOGA.

Fire Alarms and Telephones Paralyzed and Sewers Flooded.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Sept. 4.—There was scarcely a street that did not this morning bear evidence of the destructive effects of the terrible rain, hail, wind, thunder, and lightning storm that burst upon this place last evening and roared for upward of an hour.

Shade trees, many of them of immense proportions, toppled over by the wind, lay prostrate, while branches of other trees swelled the amount of general débris created by the storm. The sewerage system and water carriers became temporarily choked, and the side hill streets resembled cataracts.

The fire alarm and telephone circuits were rendered useless, and the trolley system of the Hudson Valley Railway was also seriously affected for several hours by the electrical disturbances.

FAMILY IN BLAZING AUTO.

Bucket Brigade Aids Broker Kerr, Wife, and Children.

Robert B. Kerr, a broker of 510 North Broadway, Yonkers, and his wife and three children and chauffeur, had to clamber hastily from Mr. Kerr's touring automobile at Pelham Parkway and White Plains Road last night, when the machine caught fire. He and the chauffeur and other automobilists formed a bucket brigade and put out the fire after an alarm had been sent in.

The chauffeur was taking the automobile through Pelham Parkway, where some boys shouted at the Kerrs that the machine was afire. No attention was paid to them at first, as it was believed they were mischievous. But Mr. Kerr discovered at White Plains Road that there was something the matter, and then all hastily got out. Flames shot up at once from under the machine. The chauffeur sent in a fire alarm from a nearby box, and turned on the water of a fire hydrant. Buckets were procured and a crowd, including other automobilists, helped put out the blaze. Mr. and Mrs. Kerr and the family and the chauffeur then got into the machine, and a couple of friends with automobiles towed the disabled automobile away.

ELEVATED MEN TURN DOWN PEACE TERMS

Send Reply to Belmont Renewing Old Demands.

NEW ONES ALSO INCLUDED

Request Made for Another Conference—Stone Refuses to Say That Strike Is in Prospect.

The National heads of the three organizations including the elevated road employes sent a reply to the Interborough Rapid Transit Company yesterday rejecting August Belmont's peace proposals, renewing their old demand for $3.50 and a nine-hour day for subway motormen, and making new ones. Superintendent Hedley received the reply in the absence of Mr. Belmont. He said that the old demands were reiterated, but declined to go into details about the new ones. The men asked for another conference, but Mr. Hedley said he did not know just when this could be arranged.

The National representatives of the employés were in conference the best part of yesterday. The last one was held at the Broadway Central Hotel and lasted until 11 o'clock. When it was over Chief Warren A. Stone of the engineers said:

"A reply to the proposal of the Interborough officers was formulated by us this morning, in which we asked for further conference. The reply was handed to Mr. Hedley, Mr. Belmont and Mr. Bryan both being out of the city. We hardly expected an answer to the request to-day, but asked Mr. Hedley, if possible, to try to reach Mr. Belmont and Mr. Bryan, so that the answer could be obtained, if possible. He promised to do so, and later in the day telephoned that he had not been able to reach the gentlemen."

"Was your attitude, as voiced in the reply, favorable to the signing of the proposal or antagonistic?"

"Hardly one or the other. It was, as I said, a request for a further conference."

"Was it not stated in the reply that you insisted upon $3.50 for a nine-hour day?"

"I will not say what decision has been reached in this particular by us."

"If a further conference is held and an agreement is not reached, is it likely that a strike will be called by Tuesday?"

"I have always said, and I repeat now, that I do not believe that a strike will be necessary. There is too much at stake.

It was considered almost certain on Saturday night that Mr. Belmont's proposition would meet the approval of the three Chiefs, especially as it was understood to embody practically the suggestion of the labor leaders themselves. Many hours had not passed, however, before it became evident that the leaders were spending a great deal more time in deliberation than it would require merely to formulate a favorable reply.

Immediately upon receiving the proposal they went into a secret conference at Horton Hall, which came to a close only in the early morning hours yesterday. Grand Chief Warner S. Stone of the engineers, left the hall declaring that the situation still was serious. At 10 o'clock yesterday morning Chief Stone, International President W. D. Mahon of the Amalgamated Association of Street Electric Railway Employes of America, and First Grand Master Charles Wilson of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, again met, this time in the latter's apartment at the Broadway Central Hotel.

While they were in session Local Chiefs W. L. Jenks and W. H. Pinney of the Firemen and President George E. Pepper of the local branch of the Amalgamated Association, accompanied by the Executive Committees of their various organizations, were admitted. They left the room before the conference had come to a close, but remained about the hotel corridors the greater part of the afternoon.

In the meantime, however, the three chiefs left the hotel unseen by the watchers. The next time they were heard from they were in session at the Grand Union Hotel, where Grand Chief Stone has his headquarters.

It was not until long after the Chiefs had left that Jenks, Pinney, Pepper, and the others became aware of their departure. They began to work the telephone in an endeavor to locate them, and President Pepper, among other places, called up the office of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, in the Park Row Building, in the hope of finding them there.

Mr. Jenks had nothing to say as to the sentiments of the engineers, who got very little in the way of concession in the proposal submitted on behalf of the company, and whose principal demand of $3.50 for a nine-hour day the subway was flatly turned down. In this connection, however, the statement of a member of the local organization of Locomotive Engineers is interesting:

"We may have to give up the fight for the time being," said he. "We thought this time favorable for a strike, but apparently it was not. The company was better prepared than we had any reason to believe. This is not the end of it, however, for we will organize the motormen after they get the subway running, and will be in a better position to enforce our demands."

The company's peace proposal indicates that practically every concession made is for the benefit of the Amalgamated Association. The latter organization has already begun organizing the subway employes, and it was said yesterday that under certain circumstances the company would look with favor upon a plan by which the motormen in the subway would become affiliated with the Amalgamated Association, to which employes of other grades in all likelihood will ultimately affiliate themselves.

This, it was pointed out, would give the company only one organization to contend with in the event of any trouble.

The Interborough continued its preparations for any emergency. For the first time the employment office, where applicants for subway jobs are received, was open on Sunday.

All successful applicants were ordered to report at 6 o'clock last night at the Ninety-sixth Street Station, and for three hours five-car trains were run from Ninety-sixth Street down town to try out the recruits.

Not a few of the applicants eager to work ten hours a day on the subway for $3 admitted that they were members of the Brotherhood of Engineers, which is demanding $3.50 for a nine-hour day.

BULL FIGHT AT WORLD'S FAIR.

Took Place Within Sight of the Administration Building.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 4.—A crowd numbering 2,500 persons witnessed the bull fight given within sight of the Administration Building at the World's Fair this afternoon.

The bull fight did not result in any blood letting, because the matadors and toreadors used only blunt instruments, but the exhibition proved vastly entertaining and edifying to the crowd, which roared its approval or expressed its intense excitement by remaining perfectly motionless for seconds at a time.

Twice a toreador had a narrow escape from injury. One of them fell before an angry bull's charge, and was saved from being trampled to death by the prompt action of his assistants who diverted the animal's attention long enough to give the fallen man a chance to regain his feet.

Another time a bull, bellowing his ire, chased a toreador into a corner. For ten seconds the big crowd held its breath, expecting to see the fighter's life trampled out of him. By dropping to his knees and hastily scrambling under the low protecting fence the toreador escaped by a hair. His shoulder was badly scratched in the scramble.

So successful was the day's exhibition the management has announced it would give two performances daily hereafter till Dec. 1.

HORSE FRIGHTENS DINERS.

Scared by White Automobile, He Dashed Into Plate Glass Window.

A horse attached to a hansom cab belonging to Edward Snell, who has a stand at the Hotel Metropole, on Broadway, became frightened at a white automobile and its large headlight, at Eighth Avenue and Fifty-eighth Street, last night, and dashed through the plate glass window of the telegraph office at 983 Eighth Avenue, cutting himself badly.

Two women were in the office at the time, and they ran through a side door into the Port Jervis stables at No. 985, next door, where the horse was to have been stabled. A lot of guests in Reisenweber's café and restaurant next door, on the other side, heard the crash and ran into the street.

The horse was rescued from the broken window, where he had half crashed through, but he was still frightened at the big white automobile and its two white headlights, and refused to be led into the stable. He was blindfolded, but this did no good, and he was "backed" toward the entrance, but this plan also failed.

Some one told the young man in Reisenweber's who owned the automobile that it was frightening the horse, and he came out. He telegraphed a message to Mrs. G. N. McDonald of Bayonne, N. J., that he would not be home for the night, and getting into the automobile with some companions drove away. Then the horse was led around the block, blindfolded, and led in. He did not balk this time.

HONEYMOON IN A BOX CAR.

House on Wheels for New Jersey Bride of Denver Railroad Engineer.

Special to The New York Times.

MILLBURN, N. J., Sept. 4.—From a home of refining influences and urban surroundings to life in a remodeled box car along the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad, through the rough country of Colorado, is the transition which will be experienced by Mrs. Tepper, who as Hannah Harrison Whittingham of Milburn, was married last Wednesday in Pueblo, Col., to Arthur Tepper, formerly of Wyoming, N. J. For the past eight months, since Mr. Tepper left the East, he has been connected with the Denver and Rio Grande Company in the capacity of civil engineer, and has charge of the concrete part of the company's bridge construction.

Frequent changes from place to place are made necessary by the completion of one job and the commencement of another, so that under any other arrangement Mr. Tepper would be isolated from his bride because of the lack of public accommodations. The road extends through an unsettled country, and box cars have been transformed into rough houses on wheels, and the Teppers will spend their honeymoon in one of these.

Mrs. Tepper is the daughter of the late Dr. Edward T. Whittingham, a civil war veteran, and a granddaughter of the Rev. William Rollinson Whittingham, who was Bishop of Baltimore.

ROBBER KILLS A WOMAN.

Desperate Fight in the House of a Prominent Virginian.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Sept. 4.—Mrs. J. Samuel McCue, wife of an ex-Mayor of Charlottesville, was shot and killed at 9:30 o'clock to-night by an unknown man. Mr. and Mrs. McCue had just returned from church. As Mr. McCue entered the hall leading from the bed chamber he met face to face a man carrying a bag and a baseball bat.

The intruder struck at Mr. McCue, but missed him, the latter running back to the bed chamber for his shot gun. McCue had gotten his hands on the gun when he received a vicious blow in the face with the bat and was knocked unconscious.

Mrs. McCue heard the struggle and rushed to the hallway. The man had secured the weapon and shot her twice, one load entering the left breast close to the heart, and the second the left eye. Mrs. McCue managed to reach the bathroom and there fell dead.

McCue recovered consciousness and, with his four young children found his wife dead. An alarm was given at once and the house surrounded, but no trace of the murderer had been found at midnight.

The McCue residence is in the heart of Charlottesville. McCue does not know whether his assailant was white or a negro. Robbery is believed to have been the man's motive.

Mrs. McCue was formerly Miss Fannie Crawford of Augusta County, Va., and was a social leader. Public excitement is intense and a lynching is likely if the murderer is caught.

PRINCESS LOUISE "GOT LOST."

Hid in Hills During Previous Attempt to Escape, but Was Discovered.

DRESDEN, Sept. 4.—The discovery has been made that Lieut. Count Matassich-Kegelvitch lived incognito at Klotsche, a suburb of Dresden, for several weeks preceding the flight of Princess Louise of Coburg from Bad Elster, and that he had frequently communicated secretly with the Princess.

When she was staying at Cowley, the Princess one day slipped away and hid in the neighboring hill country, but she was found and taken back. She explained her absence by saying that she had got lost.

GYPSIES BATTLE WITH ELLIS ISLAND GUARDS

Hear Report That City Is Drowning Their Children.

MOTHERS FIGHT TO ESCAPE

Volley of Wooden Shoes, Pans, and Kettles Meets Attendants Who Go to Doctor's Rescue.

A report that some of their children, sent to the Kingston Avenue Hospital, Brooklyn, with the measles, were being drowned started 200 gypsies detained at Ellis Island on the warpath yesterday morning. All the women of the band made a break to get away at once to go to the rescue, and when the guards attempted to restrain them there was the liveliest sort of a scrap.

The gypsy band arrived here on the Cunard Line steamship Carpathia on Thursday. They said that they were bound for Winnipeg, but the Government, fearing that they would return to this country, decided to exclude them. They could not be deported, however, until forty of their children, ill of measles, recovered. There was a protest when the children were taken away, but nothing serious occurred until the band had several gypsy visitors. Then the men became morose and the women spent most of the time crying. It is thought the report that the children were being drowned was started on Saturday, for the women gathered in corners, sitting on the floor and swaying to and fro, uttering pitiful wails that could be heard throughout the building. The men, separated from the women by a wire screen, gathered in knots and seemed to be disturbed over something. Not one of them went to bed when 9 o'clock came. All night the women sat moaning and the men in consultation.

The marine hospital physician, in making the rounds toward morning, entered the pen in which the women and children were confined. The unlocking of the door was the sign for a rush, and in an instant the doctor was the centre of a howling group of women who struck at him with everything at hand. Some of them took off their wooden shoes and hurled them at him, while others threw pans and kettles. The doctor beat a hasty retreat, calling for assistance.

Several night watchmen ran up and tried to quiet the women, but a shower of missiles stopped further efforts at persuasion and the fight started. The men tried to beat down the barrier to get to the women, and when the guards saw the long knives that some of them brandished they were glad that the partition was good and strong.

The other immigrants became alarmed at the noise and huddled together in the dark, not knowing what was going to befall them. Every night watchman and every inspector on the island ran to the pen where the fight was going on, and soon the entire force was battling with the gypsy women. It did not take long then to force them into submission. Then the doctor proceeded with his examination, and, finding one more child with the measles, started to take it away. The gypsies protested, and some of the women again started a rumpus.

When Chief of Staff Robinson reached Ellis Island yesterday morning he was told of the fight and sent for the leader of the band. The leader said that the women were simply fighting for the lives of their children, whom he accused the authorities of drowning. Mr. Robinson threw up his hands in surprise. He assured the chief that nothing of the kind was done, and to prove the truth of his statement volunteered to allow the parents to go to the hospital. This suggestion had a good effect, but when over 150 wanted to go Mr. Robinson withdrew his offer. But he allowed the parents of the boy found ill on Saturday night to visit him, under guard of an inspector.

When the gypsies saw the little fellow in a fine white bed with a nurse standing over him and all the others receiving the same treatment they were so well pleased that they could hardly wait to get back to the island to tell the others. There was no more trouble.

STARVING ON CHURCH STEPS.

Newark Police Care for Arkansas Family—Child's Condition Serious.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 4.—John Seifert, fifty-six years old, of Fort Smith, Ark.; his wife, Rachel, and their four months' old son, George, were found this morning on Broad Street, in front of the Peddie Memorial Church, in a starving condition. They were huddled together on the church steps when a passerby saw them and notified the police. They were taken to the Second Precinct Station, where it was found that the child was in a serious condition from hunger, and it was sent to the City Hospital. The couple was fed and cared for at the station.

Seifert told the police that he and his little family left their home at Fort Smith two months ago because he feared his wife would die from ague, from which she suffered terribly. They came East to the home of his sister in New York, but, as he was unable to get work he says his sister made life so miserable for him and his wife that he packed up his belongings in several bundles which he carried and came here.

He had spent what few pennies he had for rolls yesterday morning. When they reached the point where they were found his wife collapsed and was unable to go further. She would not allow him to beg, though they were starving.

BIRD CURE FOR BOLL WEEVIL.

Miss Gould Sends a Man to Texas to Study Subject.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 4.—Col. Isaac W. Brown of Rochester, Ind., reached Dallas yesterday to study the Texas boll weevil situation and try to find a remedy in the bird creation. Col. Brown believes that for every insect dangerous to vegetable life God has created a bird to exterminate it.

After meeting and listening to him, Miss Helen Miller Gould, requested Col. Brown to try to discover the bird that naturally should feed upon and destroy the boll weevil. She offered to pay all his expenses to Texas and the expenses of his investigation. Col. Brown is, therefore, in Texas as the philanthopic proxy of Miss Gould.

He spent all yesterday afternoon in the country around Dallas looking at birds, insects, and vegetation. To-night he delivered a lecture at the Second Presbyterian Church. To-morrow he will go back to Indiana on personal business, but will return to Texas in a short time.

DID WE PREVENT GENERAL WAR

Dr. MacArthur Says We Did, and Praises Roosevelt and Hay.

The Rev. Robert S. MacArthur declared in Calvary Baptist Church last night that the spirit of rivalry seen in all parts of the country was "one of the humiliating elements in our American life." "Strikes," he declared, "are relics of barbarism. Strikes ought to be the very last resort between labor and capital. Labor is capital and capital is labor. It is a reproach to both that their difficulties must be settled by strikes.

"The time has come when the pulpit, press, and platform must insist on the observance of law. This is virtually the only country in the world where men are burned alive at the stake. Every lyncher is a murderer, and the stain of blood is on his soul."

As to his experience during his recent lecture tour, Dr. MacArthur said: "I have seen the utmost enthusiasm over Col. John Hay and our American diplomacy. I stated to my audiences that the greatest diplomat under God's clear skies was Col. John Hay, and no one contradicted me. I told of Col. Hay's speaking for Mr. McKinley and of his defining American diplomacy as first the Monroe Doctrine and secondly the Golden Rule.

"We have a Government that does things. When the history of Russia and Japan's war is written the most marvelous chapter in it will be about America's influence in preventing all Europe from going to war. I feel so grateful to Almighty God for Col. Hay, and I honor and revere President McKinley for having appointed him and President Roosevelt that he has retained him.

"I said to my audience that the foremost man in all the world to-day was the President of the United States; the foremost man in the human race is President Roosevelt."

MRS. COOLEY IN RUNAWAY.

Cousin of Mrs. Roosevelt Unhurt—Horse Wedged in Station Doorway.

Miss Agnes Cooley and her mother, Mrs. James C. Cooley, widow of Major Cooley and a cousin of Mrs. Roosevelt, narrowly escaped being injured yesterday afternoon when the horse attached to the trap in which they were driving ran away. The women were passing from Eastchester to Westchester, and, as the trap neared the Westchester station the horse took fright at a passing locomotive and ran away.

He darted directly for the Westchester station, and ran into the door, where he became wedged and unable to move. The carriage was overturned and the women thrown to the road, where both landed but slightly bruised. People standing about helped to right the trap, which was then turned over to a coachman, while the women continued home on the train.

FRANCE'S BREAK WITH ROME.

Combes Says His Programme Includes Separation of Church and State.

AUXERRE, France, Sept. 4.—Premier Combes made an important speech here to-day.

In retracing the policy of the Government during the last two years he asserted that the municipal and departmental elections had given full evidence that the policy was approved by the county.

Regarding the future, the Premier said he would continue to carry out his policy for national sovereignty and the complete laicization of society. The religious power had openly torn up the concordat, and it was not his intention to try to mend it.

The risk of France losing her position as the protector of Eastern Catholics, the Premier said, was a wholly insufficient motive for foregoing the separation of Church and State, which circumstances had obliged him to inscribe on his programme alongside the reduction of military service, the income tax, and workmen's pensions.

The Premier was heartily applauded.

FIVE SHOT IN KENTUCKY FEUD.

Two Men Dead and Three Wounded Result of Battle at a Dance.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 4.—For the first time in three years members of the Griffin and Philpott factions in the famous Clay County feud met Saturday night at a dance given by Henry Thompson on Saxton's Creek, near the Owsley County line, and when the smoke of battle cleared it was found that Bud Griffin and Jim Philpott were dead, while Tim Wiggins, brother-in-law of Pete Philpott, and two members of the Griffin faction were seriously wounded. The fight started by Pete Philpott, leader of the faction, striking Sam Griffin with a beer glass. Bud Griffin, brother of Sam, drew his pistol and was leveling it at Peter Philpott when the latter's brother, Jim, fired, killing Bud Griffin instantly. As Bud fell Sam Griffin shot Jim Philpott through the heart.

The fighting had by this time become general, and before the small room could be cleared the two other members of the Griffin faction and one of the Philpott faction had been wounded.

Pete Philpott, who was credited with the killing of three men during the Baker-Howard feud three years ago, and who started the fight last night, came out of the battle unharmed and no effort so far has been made to arrest him.

Officials Profess Ignorance of the Exact Status of Their Army But Deny Guns Were Lost.

TOKIO, Sept. 4.—The long-continued attack on Liao-Yang ended this (Sunday) morning in the capture of the city.

The Japanese losses were heavy, but have not been ascertained.

The attack on the Russian southern and western intrenchments was unceasing throughout yesterday. There were frequent assaults last night, and this morning the general attack was renewed, resulting in a Japanese triumph.

By The Associated Press.

TOKIO, Sept. 4.—Field Marshal Oyama, telegraphing at 9 o'clock this morning, says:

"After the fighting of last night and this morning Liao-Yang fell into our hands. Our casualties are believed to be very heavy.

"No report has been received concerning conditions on the right bank of the Tai-Tse River."

In a previous telegram Marquis Oyama reported that the Russians burned their storehouses near Liao-Yang yesterday.

Marquis Oyama added that Gen. Kuroki, leaving a force at Satzuago to protect his right flank, had swung sharply westward to reach the railway and envelop Liao-Yang.

Oyama's left and centre armies were still attacking the Russians south and west of the walls of Liao-Yang when this first telegram was sent.

(How far north Gen. Kuroki's right flank had penetrated when this new movement began is not made certain in the Japanese dispatches. It is evident, however, that it dominated the Yen-Tai mines, for a force of at least 35,000 men fell upon the Russian detachment under Gen. Orloff at this point, and almost annihilated it, driving it back toward the railway. Gen. Stakelberg's corps was also forced back from this point. As the Russian dispatches say that Gen. Kuropatkin's army from Liao-Yang is gathering south of the branch railway running to the mines, it is probable that Gen. Kuroki had a large force north of the Russian point of concentration. A sweep west, therefore, would place him across the path of the bulk of the retreating Russian Army.)

Beyond Marquis Oyama's dispatches, the later of which records a new turning movement by Gen. Kuroki against the Russian left, nothing concerning the battle of Liao-Yang has reached Tokio to-day. Neither the number of Russians who succeeded in escaping northward nor the number encompassed by Gen. Kuroki's turning movement is known here.

The severity of the Russian defeat hinges largely on Kuroki's movement. If it is successful the number of Russian prisoners will be large.

The meagre reports received indicate that the soldiers of both armies went to the limit of human endurance and suffered terribly. It was impossible constantly to supply them with food and water, and the men have fought for days past starving and parched with thirst.

Although full details are lacking, the duration of the fighting, the numbers engaged, and the losses so far reported indicate that Liao-Yang will prove to be one of the greatest battles of history.

The dispatch received from Marquis Oyama announcing the fall of Liao-Yang had the effect of cheering all the subjects of the Mikado. Throughout the rejoicings here following the earlier successes of Japanese arms at Liao-Yang the more thoughtful people feared the results of the exposure to which the right wing of Gen. Kuroki's army was subjected, and it was held possible that the strength of the Liao-Yang fortifications would permit the withdrawal of the bulk of the Russian forces there. Even now there is doubt concerning the number of Russians who have escaped, but there is no doubt about the character of the victory at Liao-Yang.

Tokio is brilliantly illuminated to-night and joyful crowds are parading the streets, cheering the exploits of Field Marshal Oyama and Gens. Oku and Nodzu.

STAKELBERG GETS AWAY.

Joins Main Army—Russians' Terrible Losses—Alarm in St. Petersburg.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, Sept. 5.—Gen. Stakelberg's corps, which was reported on Saturday by Gen. Kuropatkin as having been cut off to the westward of Liao-Yang, has been extricated.

Gen. Kuropatkin, in a report dated Saturday, 7 P. M., says:

"To-day (Sept. 3) the greater part of the Russian army, including the First Siberian Corps, (Gen. Stakelberg's corps,) is occupying positions south of the branch railway from Yen-Tai station to the Yen-Tai mines, (about ten miles northeast of Liao-Yang.)

"The Japanese, although they were in the immediate vicinity of our troops today, confined themselves principally to sniping from the Chinese cornfields.

"Our troops which were posted at Liao-Yang are crossing to the right bank of the Tai-Tse River.

"The area of operations is almost entirely covered by growing Chinese corn, which greatly impedes the movements of the troops.

"The retreat of Major Gen. Orloff's detachment yesterday (Friday) was largely due to the fire with which the force was assailed among the millet fields.

"Gen. Orloff's losses were considerable, one regiment alone losing 1,500 men."

This message, which was received by the Emperor early yesterday morning, threw a more hopeful light on the position of the Russian army, and the authorities heaved sighs of relief. There is no attempt, however, to conceal the gravity of the situation, in view of the absence of news regarding what happened yesterday.

It was reported here last evening that Gen. Kuropatkin had arrived at Tieh-Ling, (Tieh-Ling is on the railway twelve miles north of Yen-Tai and eighteen miles south of Mukden.)

Grass Concealed Japanese.

The report from Gen. Kuropatkin makes it clear that large numbers of Gen. Kuroki's troops, perfectly concealed in the Chinese corn and grass, stealthily crept up on the retreating Russians and inflicted heavy losses.

These same tactics had previously been adopted with terrible results against Major Gen. Orloff's mixed European detachment, which was guarding the left flank at Yen-Tai and which was assailed in the midst of the grass with a completely unexpected fire. A panic ensued, and one regiment alone lost 1,500 men, half its total strength.

The gloomy report telegraphed by the Russian Commander in Chief in the early stages of the fighting of Saturday and his bitter reproaches against Gen. Stakelberg are attributed to his chagrin over the failure of his offensive plans.

No details are given of the escape of Gen. Stakelberg's corps from the clutches of the enemy, but it is believed that it owes its safety to the neglect or the inability of the Japanese to follow up their advantage. Gen. Stakelberg was allowed to cross the river, and he came up with the main army in time to enable the shattered remnants of Major Gen. Orloff's detachment to retreat.

This exploit is likely to make up for Gen. Stakelberg's disobedience, but unless the Emperor forgives the General, he will have to appear before a court-martial, and probably will lose his command.

Denies Guns Were Lost.

The War Office made the reassuring statement that the Russian retreat from Liao-Yang did not involve the loss of guns; and it also asserted that the abandoned stores at Liao-Yang were set on fire before the Russians crossed the Tai-Tse River.

In spite of one or two hopeful features, however, there is bitter disappointment here, probably the keenest since the land campaign began, over the situation at the front. Up to Liao-Yang retreating from and abandonment of positions had been expected, and that much the public and the officials thought they knew of Gen. Kuropatkin's plan of campaign. Had Liao-Yang been abandoned without a fight the public at least would have looked forward patiently to a decisive stand at Mukden, but after a desperate battle, with victory for an instant apparently in sight, to find Liao-Yang abandoned, its immense stores captured or destroyed, and the retreat continued under the most adverse conditions, severely tries public confidence in the Commander in Chief.

At this hour even the authorities know little more than what has already been given to the public. There is still much doubt as to whether Kuropatkin is continuing his retreat, or whether, indeed, he has been able to do so.

The situation, as it is known to date, is that the Russian army is south of the branch railway connecting Yen-Tai station, ten miles northeast of Liao-Yang, with the Yen-Tai mines, where fierce fighting occurred.

Actual fighting seems now to have been suspended for the moment, the armies probably resting after their terrific continuous exertions of the past ten days, the longest single battle in history, and it will depend upon their respective recuperative powers as to which will first be able to resume activity.

The country is ill-suited to military operations. It is flatter and more open than the region south of Liao-Yang, but is covered at this season with dense fields of Chinese corn, growing higher than a man on horseback. It is more suited to surprise tactics and to offensive operations than to an orderly retreat.

There is one hopeful feature of the situation, namely, that Kuropatkin is still in command of the railway and apparently has saved a majority of the rolling stock. This is chiefly in requisition at present for the transportation of the wounded, but Mukden, with strong defenses, is less than thirty miles north of Yen-Tai. What force Kuropatkin is holding in reserve there even the authorities do not exactly know, but it is believed that it must be considerable, while the European reinforcements, which have been rushing East for weeks past, are pouring in there daily.

Mukden Strongly Defended.

The Japanese army is confessedly exhausted, and is getting further from its base of supplies. If it reaches Mukden without dealing Kuropatkin a crushing blow—and Oyama seems to be not yet able to envelop the Russian force—the Japanese will find themselves in front of a strongly defended city.

It is possible that even now Russian reinforcements may be descending from the north to aid their retreating comrades at Mukden, which is less than two days' ordinary march distant, even ignoring the railway.

What effect the present reverse will have on Gen. Kuropatkin's reputation at home it is impossible to say. It may be remembered, however, that before starting for the Far East Gen. Kuropatkin said he fully expected his reputation to sink lower than his friends even dreamed, but that thereafter there would come a turn in the tide. He was unwilling to predict where it would occur.

NODZU WITH KUROKI?

Report at Yen-Tai That Two Japanese Armies Crossed the River.

YEN-TAI, Saturday, Sept. 3.—(Delayed.)—The battle continued with great fierceness up to yesterday. The Russians evacuated Liao-Yang, but got the bulk of their rolling stock across the river safely. A new station, with locomotives, trains, &c., was established several versts north of the Tai-Tse River, as was also a general station for the Red Cross.

Yesterday, the fourth day of the battle of Liao-Yang and the tenth of the general advance, the battle commenced at dawn on both sides of the Tai-Tse River. The Japanese advanced early in the morning in the direction of the Yen-Tai mines, which were defended by twelve battalions.

Owing to the superiority of the Japanese this force was giving way, preparatory to retiring on its rear position, when fresh men were brought up, which enabled it to retain its former position.

From the left bank of the Tai-Tse the Japanese persistently bombarded Liao-Yang, their shells reaching as far as the railway station.

Russians Took Offensive Sept. 1.

The Russian troops on Sept. 1 occupied the main line, where the Japanese assaults were persistent and deadly, and the Russians not only stood off the attacks, but took the offensive, broke the Japanese lines, and occupied a village in front of the position. The advance through the Chinese corn, which was over fourteen feet high, was very difficult, though it had been cut down in places.

The Russians pushed forward in the face of all obstacles, and, reaching the Japanese lines, drove in an assault before which the Japanese fled, leaving piles of corpses. The Russian losses also were very heavy.

Last evening a large Japanese force occupied the right bank of the Tai-Tse River. It is reported to consist of the whole of Gen. Kuroki's and Gen. Nodzu's armies, Gen. Oku alone remaining south of Liao-Yang.

The Chinese population is quiet. The Chinese bandits are sometimes offensive when they become encouraged by the Japanese advance.

Russians Praise Foes.

The Russians are in the best of spirits. The wounded speak in the highest terms of the bravery and endurance of the Japanese.

The battle near Liao-Yang continues to-day, (Saturday.) There has been hot cross firing at the Yen-Tai Mines, but at present silence prevails and no firing is heard in any direction.

The fight of Aug. 31 continued in a terrific manner until after dark. The Japanese maintained a storm of artillery fire on the Russian positions and pressed the Russian right flank and southern front, but they were driven back by the infantry whenever they came within rifle range.

On Sept. 1, owing to the extreme fatigue of Oku's and Nodzu's forces, all was quiet until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when forty-two guns opened simultaneously on Liao-Yang and continued until dark. Little damage was done, only four persons being killed.

The Russian artillery began to reply at 3 P. M., and, under cover of a sharp cannonade, the evacuation of the town was commenced and the new railway station was established several versts to the north, the station master, his assistants, and the engineers all working bravely under fire and apparently having contempt for the flying shells.

Gen. Kuropatkin decorated the station master for his services.

EUROPEAN EXPERTS DISAGREE.

French Think Russia Has Lost the War—English Fear Oyama Failed.

PARIS, Monday, Sept. 5.—The battle of Liao-Yang is absorbing public attention, and the tone of the French military critics has undergone a marked change.

M. Bernet, the military expert of the Temps, who heretofore has been confident that Kuropatkin's strategy would win the day, now says that a single battle may lose the entire fortunes of war. His comment indicates his belief that Kuropatkin's defeat is irretrievable, and he says this means that Russia will lose Manchuria, and that it will be impossible to relieve Port Arthur.

The prevailing comment of other military experts is in the same discouraging tone, and the experts appear to be agreed that the fall of Port Arthur will be a speedy sequel unless Kuropatkin is able to make a rapid retreat and secure the reconcentration of his army at Mukden.

Opinion in London.

LONDON, Monday, Sept. 5.—The gruesome and tragic details of the struggle between Oyama's and Kuropatkin's forces do not deter British critics from repeating the vital question: "Has Kuropatkin made good his retreat?" With all the official news before them the experts here seem half inclined to believe that the Russian commander has achieved what was thought to be the impossible, and has saved himself from envelopment.

That the Japanese, with superior numbers and the choice of time for aggression, would inflict severe losses was taken for granted. The occupation of Liao-Yang, the enormous Russian casualties, and the evacuation of fortified positions are regarded here as merely incidents, though it is recognized that the week's battle which they mark must take its place as one of the bloodiest in ancient or modern history. Yet if Kuropatkin reaches Mukden with a potential remnant of his army, Oyama's efforts will, in English eyes, be regarded more or less as a fruitless sacrifice.

The bravery of both the opposing forces excites here a thrill of admiration, mixed with awe. Steeped, as English military critics are, in the histories of their own wars for centuries past, this combination of fanaticism and science displayed under modern conditions of warfare strikes for them a new and almost terrible note.

Aghast at the Slaughter.

Well-known exponents of civilization, accustomed to deal with all phases of world politics, confess themselves aghast at the slaughter now proceeding, yet even this sentiment is writ small compared with the momentous question of the eventual fate of Kuropatkin's army.

"All we know," says The Daily Graphic, "is that the battle of Liao-Yang has been fought and won by the Japanese. We have yet to learn the extent of the defeat of the Russians."

Kuropatkin's position is generally held to be still desperate, but, as The Daily News says, the latest cablegrams point to the fact that the Japanese have "lost the chance of achieving an unequivocal triumph."

The Morning Post pays a high tribute to Kuropatkin's genius and to the traditional morale of the Russian troops under the disadvantages of defeat. It believes that a pause will now follow events that even in themselves would mark the century with a grand tragedy.

Such a keen supporter of the Japanese as The Daily Telegraph this morning rather regretfully admits that Oyama "failed to achieve his strategical object." Reflecting the British Government's view The Daily Telegraph pins its comment solely upon the main objective, and declares that nothing has been accomplished unless Kuropatkin's force is put out of action.

The Standard characterizes Kuropatkin's transport of his army across the "wide and flooded Tai-Tse River in the face of a pursuing enemy" as a remarkable feat, and voices the general belief that the Russian commander, having temporarily extricated himself, will still effect his retreat with an "army in being."

BOY DYING FROM A BEATING.

Greek Living in Same House Accused by Him and Now Under Arrest.

Henry Jensen, a nine-year-old boy, living at 76 Fifth Street, Brooklyn, was taken to the Brooklyn Hospital last evening in a dying condition and almost blind as the result of a beating. The police of the Adams Street Station have arrested James Maradellas, a Greek, living in the same house with the boy.

The story told by the boy while he was still in a condition to talk was that Maradellas beat and kicked him in the hallway of their home on Saturday night. His statement was supplemented by neighbors, who told the police that Maradellas had interfered with some playmates of the Jensen boy, and that when the boy had resented his interference the Greek had beat and kicked him.

He Breaks Into Church with an Axe—Police Rescue Him.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 4.—Surrounded by twenty policemen and five detectives, and with the blunt axe with which he battered his way into his church beside him, the Rev. Father Bekavac of St. Nicholas Roman Catholic Croatian Church, in Allegheny held early mass this morning. A large number of his former congregation awaited him outside and made frantic efforts to assault him at the conclusion of the ceremony.

When Father Bekavac reached the church he found all the doors locked and nailed fast. Returning to his residence he secured an axe and applied it to one of the doors, while the police aided him to force it down under the weight of their bodies. Excitement by this time had reached a high pitch in the mob of probably 500 men and women who had gathered to prevent services being held. About fifty of Father Bekavac's adherents attended the mass.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the police awaited Father Bekavac to escort him to the parish house. At this stage the mob became bolder, and, spurred on by one or two women leaders, ascended the stone steps to the church door, and as the priest appeared, shouted threats of vengeance, while women and men alike called upon their followers to attack him.

The police surrounded the priest, and with their clubs fought back the crowd, finally landing their charge safely in the parish house. Eight of the mob leaders, three of whom are women, were taken to the Central Station in the patrol wagon.

St. Nicholas Church has been the scene of factional disturbances for several months, and the dissenters demanded the removal of Father Bekavac, charging misappropriation of funds. Bishop Phelan upheld the priest and ordered him to hold services today in spite of the protests.

STEWART ESTATE LITIGATION.

BALLSTON, N. Y., Sept. 4.—Action has been brought in the State Supreme Court here in an effort to revive the partition case begun several years ago involving the immense property left by the late Mrs. A. T. Stewart, widow of the New York merchant.

The action just begun was filed by New York attorneys, the counsel for the plaintiffs in the original partition case, brought in 1887. In the first suit Prescott Hall Butler, as nephew and heir-at-law of Mrs. Stewart, alleged that her millions of dollars worth of property—including the Grand Union Hotel at Saratoga—were illegally and unjustly withheld by Henry Hilton from her heirs. The defendants were Judge Hilton, as executor of Mrs. Stewart's will, and a large number of others, as heirs-at-law or otherwise interested.

Judgment in partition sale of real estate in New York, Queens, Saratoga, and Westchester Counties in this State was granted in 1893, from which appeals were taken. These appeals have never been decided. Since then Judge Hilton, Charles J. Clinch, and other defendants have died, and last of all the plaintiff Butler died.

The present plaintiff is Lawrence Smith Butler, who appears as heir-at-law and legal representative of Prescott Hall Butler. Lawrence Smith Butler has procured an order of the court, substituting himself as plaintiff and the executors and heirs-at-law of Judge Hilton as defendants, and also bringing in new defendants to represent Mr. Clinch and other deceased heirs.

LOWER CORPORATION INCOME.

Jersey in Eight Months Gets Less Than Half Last Year's Fees.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, Sept. 3.—The Corporation Department of the office of the Secretary of State closed the month of August with a record of chartering 182 companies, for which the State received in filing fees $9,379.40. This amount is much smaller than for the month of July, when there was received $13,706.50 in filing fees from 126 companies.

As there were two companies more chartered to do business in the month of August, 1904, than there were in August, 1903, although the filing fees were $4,327.10 less, the corporation office is forced to the conclusion that business among smaller corporations is good. As compared with the corresponding month of 1903, when 126 companies were chartered, with a capitalization of $10,636,250, there is shown that two more companies were chartered in the month of August, 1904, while the amount received in filing fees was but $1,255.85 less.

In a Presidential year this showing is considered indicative of the feeling that no serious result to business or great change in policy of the Government can result from the determination of the contest in November. There are no big companies being chartered in New Jersey, and a careful scanning of the record other States are doing show that there are no big combinations being chartered in those States either.

With the ending of August two-thirds of the year has passed, and the record shows that the State is up to the present time $130,107.54 in filing fees behind the corresponding time of last year, this past eight months the filing fees aggregating $26,765.68, while for the corresponding period of last year they amounted to $223,872.22. The number of companies has been lower by 1,507 in 1903 to 1,103 in the similar eight months this year.

CROWD AT SAENGERFEST.

Singers Will Parade on College Point Streets To-day.

The sixth annual Saengerfest of the Swiss-American Saengerbund is in progress at College Point, and yesterday was attended by fully 5,000 persons. It will continue to-day and there will be a parade through the streets of College Point by the singers. In the evening there will be a grand banquet. Four hundred singers took part in the grand choruses yesterday in the auditorium at Donnelly's Grove. The singing was under the direction of Dr. Felix Jaeger of the Williamsburg Singerbund.

A feature of the afternoon was the singing of two hundred junior members, who rendered "The Star Spangled Banner" and "The Schweizer Psalm." The societies taking part in the Saengerfest represent Brooklyn, Manhattan, Philadelphia, Newark, N. J., Rochester, N. Y., Hudson County, N. J., Scranton, Penn., and a number of small places.

AMERICAN TO GUIDE KOREA'S DIPLOMACY

Japan Appoints D. W. Stevens Adviser to Seoul Government.

TOKIO'S TIGHTENING GRIP

It Is Now Admitted That Japan Means to Have Complete Control of Korea's Foreign Affairs.

TOKIO, Sept. 4.—The Japanese Government announces that Durham White Stevens, counselor of the Japanese Legation at Washington, will be the diplomatic adviser to the Korean Government, while M. Megata, Director of the Revenue Bureau at Tokio, will be Korea's financial adviser.

The Government to-day published the text of an agreement signed at Soul on Aug. 22 between representatives of Japan and Korea. The agrement follows:

"First—The Korean Government shall engage as financial adviser to the Korean Government a Japanese subject recommended by the Japanese Government, and all matters concerning finance shall be dealt with after his counsel has been taken.

"Second—The Korean Government shall engage as diplomatic adviser to the Department of Foreign Affairs a foreigner recommended by the Japanese Government, and all important matters concerning foreign relations shall be dealt with after his counsel has been taken.

"Third—The Korean Government shall previously consult the Japanese Government in concluding treaties and conventions with foreign powers and in dealing with other important diplomatic affairs, such as the granting of concessions to or the making of contracts with foreigners."

The Japanese Government explained the foregoing agreement to the representative of The Associated Press as follows:

"This agreement is nothing more than a natural and logical sequence to the protocol of Feb. 23. It will be remembered that in this protocol the Japanese Government undertook to give advice to the Korean Government with regard to improvements in administration, which advice the latter agreed to accept with full confidence. The financial embarrassment of the Korean Government has been in the past a constant cause of internal trouble and the chief hindrance to the development of foreign commerce. This serious aspect of Korean administration naturally attracted the first attention of the Japanese Government.

"It will be remembered, further, that in the protocol it was stipulated that in case the welfare of the imperial house of Korea or the territorial integrity of Korea was endangered by the aggression of a third power or by internal disturbance the Japanese Government was to take the measures made requisite by the circumstance.

"This stipulation makes it incumbent upon Japan to exercise careful control of existing Korean diplomacy. In fact, the responsibilities devolving upon the Japanese Government in consequence of this protocol of Feb. 23 can only be discharged by possessing a consultive voice in all important questions of foreign intercourse and in assisting Korea to secure trustworthy advisers to examine on the spot questions of international concern.

"These measures to control Korean finance and Korean foreign intercourse do not in any way interfere with the full operation and validity of Korea's existing treaties.

"Article No. 3 is not intended to place an impediment in the way of the legitimate enterprise of foreigners in the sphere of commerce and industry, but is calculated to serve as a precaution against the conclusion of improvident and dangerous engagements which in the past have proved to be sources of serious complications, such as was shown conspicuously in the case of the Russian lease at Yon-gam-Pho."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—Durham White Stevens, who has been selected as diplomatic advisor to the Korean Government under the new treaty between Korea and Japan, has been the counselor of the Japanese Legation at Washington for the past fifteen years. His appointment was made at the request of Japan. This appointment will require Mr. Stevens to take up his residence in Korea.

He was a resident of this city before becoming counselor for the Japanese Legation, and was educated in Washington and graduated from one of the law schools. Mr. Stevens is about fifty years of age, and is regarded as well equipped for performing the duties of diplomatic agent, his long association with Japanese diplomatic service making him especially desirable to Japan in that capacity.

SAYS CZAR WILL MAKE PEACE.

St. Petersburg Paper Expects War to End with Fall of Port Arthur.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegrams.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Sept. 4.—Although the Novoe Vremya is an erratic print, its reported statement that upon the fall of Port Arthur Russia will make peace with Japan has attracted the attention of diplomatic circles here.

It is regarded as not impossible that the expediency of making peace at once and sparing Russia the financial strain and political danger of another campaign may become a matter of earnest consideration for the Czar and the more enlightened of his advisers.

BERLIN, Sept. 4.—With regard to the remoter consequences of the battles around Liao-Yang, assuming them to be decisive of this year's campaign, it is fully recognized in Germany that the Russians cannot or will not come to terms with Japan on the basis of the present naval and military superiority of the island empire.

Wide publicity is given to a letter from a "Russian statesman," in which the writer calmly declares his belief that no number of Japanese victories on land or water will lead to the conclusion of peace unless Russia ceases to be Russia. He adds that the only circumstance in which Japan could hope to dictate terms of peace would be that her armies first enter Moscow in triumph.

The writer goes on to say that even if the impossible should happen and peace be concluded on the basis of the retention of Port Arthur by Japan this arrangement would only be in the nature of a truce, for Russia could not afford to accept peace from the hands of her adversary.

On the other hand, there are not wanting observers who deny the ability of the Russian Empire to endure the consequences of a series of disasters like those of the present campaign from a financial point of view, even if certain sections of the banking world, tempted by spendthrift commissions and premiums, were to undertake the issue of large loans for Russia. It is believed in some quarters that this policy of blind extravagance would work its own ruin at an earlier date than Russian soldiers or even Russian politicians are at present inclined to anticipate.

PARIS, Sept. 4.—The question whether an attempt at mediation between Russia and Japan is opportune at the present juncture is answered to-day in a decided negative by two prominent French Senators.

Count d'Aunay considers the question premature. He declares it is not the time to talk mediation when a great battle is being fought on which the fate of Manchuria may depend and when the capture of Port Arthur appears imminent.

"Later on," he says, "when the situation is more clearly defined, the powers interested in the maintenance of the status quo in the Far East will no doubt be anxious to intervene with the object of bringing hostilities to a close, but I question whether M. Delcassé will ever associate himself with an attempt at intervention without a previous understanding with Russia."

M. de Macère considers that France ought to take no action without first consulting Russia, and holds that the suggested intervention of the Continental powers, in concert with England and the United States, would be regarded by Russia as an act of hostility or at least as a discourteous proceeding.

By The Associated Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, Sept. 5.—The Novosti, commenting on the abandonment of Liao-Yang, says the foreign press attaches undue importance to its effect on the war.

There could have been only one issue of the fight which might definitely have settled the whole campaign, namely, the utter and crushing defeat of the Japanese, says the paper, and since that has not occurred, there must be other battles.

The fighting near Liao-Yang is now approaching its culmination, the Novosti continues, but, whatever its issue, it cannot be regarded as the last word. The war turns on deeper questions than the immediate possession of a disputed position, and it can only be settled on terms of peace satisfactory to Russia with regard to her position in the Far East.

CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY SAFE.

Will Be Pinched by Waggaman's Failure, but Will Pull Through.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 4.—Rector O'Connell of the Catholic University at Washington was in Baltimore to-day, the guest of Cardinal Gibbons, and Catholic University matters were the subject of a conference between the two prelates. In a subsequent interview Dr. O'Connell was emphatic in his denial of the statement in several newspapers that, in consequence of the bankruptcy of Thomas E. Waggaman, the Treasurer of the institution, the university would not be able to take students during the coming year.

"It must be remembered," said Dr. O'Connell, "that all the funds of the university were not in Mr. Waggaman's control. The last collection was in the possession of the fathers, and the large collection of the Knights of Columbus had not been turned over to him."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—A prominent official of the Catholic University said to-night it could not be true that Cardinal Gibbons was to make good the losses occasioned by Waggaman's use of university funds. The university has other funds than those intrusted to Waggaman, but not sufficient to produce the necessary income to run the institution through the year. It requires for this about $100,000. A considerable part of this amount it will be necessary to raise by contributions and collections.

The interesting fact has come out that since the accession of the present Rector of the university, Mgr. O'Connell, in April, 1903, the university has not intrusted any moneys to Mr. Waggaman, and the Financial Board of the institution has taken charge of its investments. Since April, 1903, the university has received from various sources $250,000, which has not been placed in Mr. Waggaman's hands, and this amount, saving a portion which has been spent for current expenses, is available as endowment to produce the income required to maintain the university.

So far as can be ascertained the indebtedness of Waggaman to the university is $276,000, which is believed to be amply secured. It is denied by Father Stafford of St. Patrick's Church of this city that $50,000 of the funds of that church was given to Waggaman. Father Stafford said to-night that the future of the university was in no manner involved in the Waggaman failure and regardless of what may be the outcome of the settlement of Waggaman's affairs the work of the university would not be impaired in the slightest degree.

WIFE MURDERER SHOT DOWN.

Virginia Sheriff's Posse Corners Him After a Six Weeks' Hunt.

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 4.—Frank Sattlethight, who killed his wife with a monkey wrench at their home in Princess Anne County six weeks ago, lies at the point of death in a hospital here from bullet wounds received while endeavoring to escape through a Sheriff's posse that surrounded him at his father's home, on Lynn Haven Bay, early this morning.

Sattlethight killed his wife because she went to see a sham battle at Cape Henry against his wishes. Immediately after the crime he took refuge in the swamp lands near Lynn Haven Bay, and had eluded pursuit. Sheriff Akiss, with a posse of seven, surrounded the home of Sattlethight's father early this morning and demanded the murderer's surrender.

Sattlethight's brother opened the front door of the house and endeavored to attract attention as Sattlethight made a dash from the rear. The move was detected, and as the wife slayer, armed with a Winchester, darted for the woods a load of buckshot brought him down. He was hit fourteen times.

WATCH AUTOS IN BROOKLYN.

Big Squad of Police Along Bedford Avenue and Parkways.

Under orders of Deputy Commissioner Farrell a special squad of detectives and mounted and bicycle policemen watched along Bedford Avenue, Eastern and Ocean Parkways in Brooklyn yesterday for violators of the automobile speed limit. The Deputy Commissioner took the action after hearing that one of his friends had narrowly escaped being run down.

In order to estimate the speed of the automobiles cords were stretched across the roadways yesterday, but no arrests were made. The Deputy Commissioner said last night that he had discovered that the only way to cope with the situation was to provide policemen with motor bicycles.

Colgate Hoyt's Barn Burned.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Monday, Sept. 5.—1 A. M.—Fire which started early this morning destroyed the barn, carriage house, and other outbuildings belonging to Colgate Hoyt on Centre Island, near the Seawanhaka Yacht Club house. The fire brilliantly illuminated the bay and Sound, and could be plainly seen from this place. The employes on Mr. Hoyt's place and at the club had a hard fight to keep the flames from the house, but they saved it, although one side was blistered.

JAPANESE AHEAD OF AMERICA, PERRY SAYS

Professor Says They Are Originators, Not Imitators.

WHY THEY CAN WIN VICTORIES

American Electrical Engineer Tells of His Experiences While on Faculty in Tokio.

Prof. John Perry, President of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers in Great Britain, many of whom are en route for St. Louis to attend the International Congress of Engineers, talked yesterday of reasons for the Japanese successes. Prof. Perry was for four years Professor of Engineering in the College of Public Works Department in the University at Tokio.

"I have heard the remark," he said, "that Japanese officials have been making over here in America, at banquets or elsewhere, that Japan is the intellectual child of America. Nothing could be further from the truth. Japan is about a thousand years in advance of England, and, I fear, of America, too. It is a question whether we will ever catch up to her.

"In the first place, the Japanese are not imitators. They are originators, strikingly prone to original investigation. You must remember that their civilization began long before ours did. I had not been long a professor with Japanese students in my classes before I made a striking discovery. I discovered that while the English or American youth is reading romances, the Japanese young man is reading Macaulay and Herbert Spencer. Common sense and subtlety, those are the most pronounced mental characteristics of the Japanese mind. They read and study what I fear the English and American youth knows he ought to study and don't. They actually spurn trash; are serious minded.

"For example, their military methods of surrounding and entrapping troops as made public during the last few days do not surprise me at all. They are simply playing the national game of 'go.' You don't know what that is? I'll tell you. No, it is not like our chess. It is infinitely more intellectual, more subtle. Chess is greatly a matter of good memory. 'Go,' on the other hand, requires greater subtlety of mind. Almost every youth with any pretense to mental acumen plays it in Japan.

"If you go into any of the public places in Tokio or elsewhere in Japan you will see the game played. You will see, in that respect not entirely dissimilar to chess, a lot of white and black pawns on a board before the players. They are imitation black and white soldiers. When the game begins the pawns are stationed in circles, the black forming a ring completely encircled by another ring of the white pawns. You wonder how the player who is hottled up will ever work his way out, and yet if you watch awhile you will see that this is done. the Japanese are strategic by nature and by education.

"To further convince yourself of this, I ask you but to recall or reread the reports in the newspapers during the last few days. Recall also, the Russo-Prussian war. It was a remarkable fact that when ever the Germans faced the French lined up for a battle their soldiers outnumbered those on the French side about two to one. The Japanese go the Germans and the Russians one better in this respect. Read the reports. In every case when the Russians and the Japanese have faced one another thus far there have been three Japanese to two Russians on the spot. That is not blind luck. That means headwork, thinking—thinking on the part of Generals, military strategy worthy of the name.

"There is another thing about the Japanese very, very hard for any nation to overcome. Any man who has ever been to Japan will tell you what I am now about to tell you. The Japanese make a religion of patriotism. First Japan, then the Emperor, then the head of the family. In Japan, you know, the family is the unit. The head of it is responsible for every member in it, for their successes, for their failures.

"Now, regarding this spiritualized patriotism, I can imagine, you can imagine an English or an American soldier. For they are racially alike, standing up to be killed rather than retreat when the are being watched. I for one, however, cannot imagine an English or American soldier standing up to be killed when he could get away without any one observing him, when there is no great thing gained by his being killed, and yet the Japanese soldier will do that.

"Up to the present time few of these instances have been published. There have been more important things to write about. You will find, however, when the less important things about the various engagements are told hereafter, striking examples of what I say—acts of heroism which from our standpoint seem fanaticism. Many of them were told after the Chinese and Japanese war. It is difficult to down such patriotism.

"There is a common household fire current among the housewives of England, here, too, perhaps, that the sun shining into a grate fire, for example, tends to extinguish it. In class one day a Japanese student asked me if there was any scientific reason for this, if it were true. I was forced to tell him that I had not investigated the matter, and therefore could not answer the question. Unobserved by him, I came across this student unawares an hour or two later, and let me tell you what he was doing.

"Having provided himself with a box of matches, he had seated himself before a window. The sun was shining in. He had placed his chair so that he sat half in the shadow and half in the sunlight. On his lap lay his watch with the lid open. He was lighting two matches at a time and was holding one of them in the sunlight, the other in the shadow, and was timing the result. It does not matter whether his discovery was consequential or not. I merely wish to illustrate the originality of the Japanese.

"I look for the fall of Port Arthur within about a week."

OFFICERS' BUSY SUNDAY AT BULL RUN FIELD

Brigade Parties Explore the Ground of the Coming Manoeuvres.

12TH REGIMENT STOWAWAYS

Ignore Col. Dyer's Warning and Pay the Penalty—New Yorkers Don't Like Their New Uniforms.

Special to The New York Times.

CORPS HEADQUARTERS, GAINESVILLE, Va., Sept. 4.—Not for nearly half a century has sedate old Prince William County seen so busy a Sunday.

Usually in this region of green hills and oak trees, said an imaginative native this afternoon, the country folk are wont on the hebdomadal day of rest to talk with one another from hill top to hill top, so profound is the lack of interruption by noises without. To-day, however, the peace of this most peaceful community was rudely broken by the manoeuvring of many trains bearing the last of the militia troops to the scene of the most elaborate military manoeuvres that the United States ever has attempted.

Bugle calls resounded ceaselessly throughout the terrain set apart for the war game, which, approximately, is a rectangle twelve miles by eight, with Gainesville and Gen. Corbin's headquarters almost exactly in the centre. The camps at Manassas and Thoroughfare were alive with the arrival and detraining of the troops and the inspection of ammunition, which is the first thing a regiment goes through after it alights from its train.

Among the troops which arrived were the First Maryland, which reached Thoroughfare shortly after midnight. On account of the hour the men did not pitch their tents, but bivouacked under the open sky. This is the only regiment so far which has been compelled to sleep in the open. The Fourth New Jersey came in in good shape at 9:15, and were followed about 1 o'clock at the Thoroughfare camps by the Ninth Massachusetts. The Eighth Massachusetts came into camp two hours later. In all 12,000 militiamen arrived to-day.

A VERY TIRED REGIMENT.

The weariest looking lot to put in an appearance was the Third Tennessee, which detrained at Thoroughfare about 1:30. Most of them were ready to drop when they stumbled out of the cars and lined up on the platform.

In sharp contrast to the showing of the Tennessee boys was that of the Second New York, a provisional regiment from Albany, Watertown, and other up-State cities. Physically this body is superior to any other militia regiment on the field, and absolutely no effects of fatigue were discovered after the trip. The officers particularly are noticeable for their fine physique. The staff officers who were on hand to note the detraining were really struck with the work and appearance of the up-Staters.

For all except the officers of the troops already on the ground, the day was one of almost complete rest. As this is a think war, however, the success or failure of the various tactics will fall wholly on the officers, and to-day they were busy riding through the country in brigade parties, noting hills which might be used to advantage as artillery positions, woods which might serve as a cover for the troops, and routes by which the various strategic points might be best connected.

These numerous mounted excursions were tremendously interesting to the natives, not all of whom, however, viewed with favor the movements of the soldiers. On the lawn in front of one old but well kept house a number of girls sat and waved old Confederate flags whenever they could distinguish Northern officers riding by.

Gen. Grant's officers have so thoroughly reconnoitred that he said this afternoon that he thought his officers knew the country as well as it could be known for manoeuvring purposes.

HARD LUCK OF STOWAWAYS.

New York's Twelfth took things very easy to-day, although Col. Dyer and his staff went for a tour of investigation around the manoeuvre field. The other officers rested with their men. The saddest men in the Twelfth's camp are three stowaways, who once belonged to the regiment and who came down on the train uninvited. Col. Dyer discovered them and told them that if they persisted in coming down to the camp he would take their clothes away from them and make them work harder than they ever did in their lives. Col. Dyer kept his word.

As soon as the regiment arrived he ordered that the clothes be taken away from the three men and that they be dressed up in the brown fifty-five-cent suits allotted to prisoners. Since then they have been digging trenches, putting up tents, and doing the hardest kind of camp work. Their guards keep them circulating around where they shall be most prominently in view, and the work of the stowaways isn't made easier by the ceaseless fire of comment which accompanies it.

"Oh, we've no kick coming," said one of them, picturesquely attired in a brown blouse and a black derby, "but we would like some ice cream."

There are many complaints among the New Yorkers on account of their new uniforms, which, though serviceable as to the olive-drab color, are very heavy, and put them at a decided disadvantage when hard work is to be done compared with regulars in their light khaki outfit. Complaints have been made also as to the supplies which the different States have neglected to furnish for their regiments, and which, the men say, seriously handicaps them in their work of putting up tents and in their other duties about the camp. A Captain in the Twelfth, for instance, when he came to investigate his tent, found that while he had eight guy ropes he had only three tent pegs.

The Fourteenth of Brooklyn are complaining, too. As members of the Blues they wear their old uniforms, but carry the new Krag-Jorgensen rifles. With their uniforms they wear the web belt made to accommodate the old cartridges, but as the new cartridges are considerably smaller the Brooklyn boys have to carry them in their pockets.

Mrs. Grant, the wife of the Blue commander, paid her first visit to the camp to-day arriving with Mrs. Corbin, who, however, has been here before. To-night Gen. Corbin entertained at dinner at corps headquarters Gen. and Mrs. Grant and Gen. Grant's staff.

Several of the foreign military attachés arrived to-night and are at headquarters.

WHY UNION STORE FAILED.

Co-operative Department House Fell Through Mismanagement.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 4.—Developments made public to-day by John Woage of Chicago show that the failure of the co-operative department store in which some 1,700 poor investors were caught was due principally to mismanagement and the four guarantors, A. C. Clas, W. D. arrick, and W. H. Surles of Milwaukee, and Harry Leyser of Chicago will lose heavily.

There are liabilities of $221,210, and assets of $36,000. The guarantors are now trying to settle at 50 per cent., and will have to raise some $80,000 among them to do so. The attempt to float a million-dollar enterprise on $70,000 cash caused the failure.

Had all the stock been paid for the enterprise might have floated. Hundreds of poor stockholders who invested their savings are indignant.

COUNT APPONYI WELCOMED.

Hungarians Plan to Give Statue of George Washington to Budapest.

Several thousand Hungarians gathered at the Grand Central Palace yesterday afternoon to honor Count Albert Apponyi and the other members of the Hungarian Parliament who have come to this country as delegates to the Inter-Parliamentary Peace Conference in St. Louis. The reception was tendered by the United Hungarian Societies of New York City and the crowd was limited only by the capacity of the hall.

Public announcement was made of a project to raise funds to provide for the presentation of a statue of George Washington, to be erected in the City of Budapest. The project for the statue was mooted first two years ago, and is said to have been approved by Senators Fairbanks, Hoar, Depew, and Frye, Gov. Pennypacker, Grover Cleveland, William J. Bryan, John Wanamaker, and Tom Johnson. Subscriptions to the amount of $2,500 have already been received. The enterprise is especially under the direction of E. T. Kohanyi and Marcellus Ujlaky.

There is a statue of Louis Kossuth in one of the parks of Cleveland, and the present scheme was first suggested as a means of recognizing the courtesy shown to Hungary in the erection of that statue.

At the reception yesterday Count Apponyi spoke in both Hungarian and English, and was wildly applauded. He said, in part:

"We have hearty sympathy with this gigantic Commonwealth, which has achieved liberty for all time, a liberty which makes us in Europe feel safer, even in lands where liberty is scarcely known. We feel safer because there is such a country as the United States of America. The freedom of America is one of the safeguards of liberty in old Europe."

WIGWAM INVITES PARKER.

Plunkitt Would Have Him Meet the Braves at Esopus Station.

State Senator Plunkitt announced last night that he would take the Tammany contingent to the State Convention over a railroad other than the New York Central. The word startled the contingent, who feared that Plunkitt and the Central no longer were on good terms. Plunkitt promptly set all fears at rest, however, by announcing that the special trains would go by West Shore instead. The idea to take the special trains, which will be three in number, was adopted so as to enable the Wigwam shouters to stop off at Esopus for a few minutes and give Judge Parker a sort of impromptu serenade.

Senator Plunkitt has written a letter to the Presidential candidate asking the Judge whether he would be willing to be at the station when the trains go through, so that the Wigwam braves might shake hands and give three cheers.

"But if it will not be convenient or proper for the Judge to meet us at the station, and let us pay our respects to him there en masse," said the Senator, "we may be able to have the trains held a little longer so that the crowd can go up the hill to his house and give him a serenade and three cheers there."

The Tammany trains will start for Saratoga by noon on Sept. 19, and are expected to return on Wednesday night, Sept. 21. Between 1,200 and 1,500 Tammanyites are expected to go.

WOODRUFF MEN MAY FIGHT.

They Intend to Carry Their War Into the Preliminary Conferences.

Disturbed by the attitude of Gov. Odell, and in order to overcome the growing strength of the movement to nominate Lieut. Gov. Higgins for Governor, friends of Senator Platt and Timothy L. Woodruff let it be inferred yesterday that they were doing everything in their power to make a determined stand at Saratoga. Whether or not they will take their opposition to Gov. Odell into the convention is a question, but they declared they would surely carry it into the conferences to be held at Saratoga just prior to that convention.

It is said to be the intention of the Platt men and Woodruff supporters to force the Governor to place the Odell tag on whoever is nominated, so that the Governor-Chairman himself will have to stand the brunt of the camnaign and the responsibility for the candidate. The Woodruff people are preparing to gather at Saratoga as early as Saturday of this week so as to get at work on the advance guard of delegates and leaders who will come in that night for the Sunday preceding the convention, which will meet on the following Wednesday, Sept. 14.

Gov. Odell spent the day yesterday at his Monmouth Beach cottage with his family. Some of his close friends and advisers, however, declared that Odell had not been backing up the Higgins movement, and they further said, on their own responsibility, that the Governor had not to date given any pledge of support to any one for the nomination. They admitted that the situation looked to them more like the nomination of Higgins than any other man, but they said with emphasis that they knew Odell never had pledged himself to Higgins, and that Higgins himself did not know really whether the Governor was with him or against him.

Lieut. Gov. Higgins is in Syracuse, where he will open the State Fair to-day, while Mr. Woodruff is at his Adirondack camp.

HIGGINS MAY NOT RUN.

Won't Allow His Name to be Presented as a Factional Candidate.

SYRACUSE, Aug. 4.—Lieut. Gov. Frank W. Higgins to-night made the following statement:

"There is some mistake in relation to the report coming from Lockport, that State Republican Committeeman John A. Merritt is in receipt of a telegram from me in which I stated that I would go to the State Convention at Saratoga as a candidate for the Gubernatorial nomination.

"To no person have I said I would accept a nomination for the Governorship if I were selected. The names of several able and competent men have been mentioned in connection with this nomination. My name will not be presented to the Republican Convention as a factional candidate under any circumstances."

FIGHTER'S WOUNDS FATAL.

"Kid Leonard," Shot in Bowery Quarrel, Dies in Hospital.

Leonard Bulo, twenty-eight years old, better known as "Kid Leonard," a local prize-fighter, died at Gouverneur Hospital last night as the result of three bullet wounds received during an altercation several weeks ago on the Bowery.

The fighter was leaving a restaurant at the Bowery and Grand Street accompanied by a young woman, and met Diedo Cacciola of 153 East Houston Street. A quarrel ensued over the young woman, and Leonard was shot in the head, the back, and the hip. Cacciola was arrested.

GOT WRONG COLOR IN HAIR DYE.

Woman Started to Break Up Store That Made the Mistake.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—An angry woman with red hair began breaking up the furniture in T. E. Cannon's drug store, North Clark and Huron Streets, this afternoon. A patrol wamong was called, but she fled before it arrived.

The police said she was angered because hair dye she had purchased there had turned out to be auburn instead of chestnut.

WORKING OF THE BRITISH PUBLIC HOUSE TRUST

The Movement to Promote Sobriety Among the People.

150 SALOONS ALREADY SECURED

Plan Finds Favor with Many Land Owners—Brewery-Owned Houses Chief Obstacle to Its Success.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—Frank W. Mahin, United States Consul at Nottingham, England, has sent a report upon the Central Public House Trust Association, an enterprise in that country which, he thinks, may result in important changes in the habits of the people and in the conduct of a vast business.

"The public house of Great Britain," he says, "is essentially the same as the saloon of the United States. There is the marked difference, however, that in Great Britain women are almost as numerous as men at the drinking bars, and that the bartenders are usually young women. It is argued for the barmaids that their presence tends to preserve order, but no defense of female dram drinking is attempted. The public house trust is a trust in the interest of the community and not for private profit. Its object is to reduce intemperance by changing the ordinary methods of conducting public houses.

"The origin of the enterprise dates back to 1877, when the Rev. Osbert Mordaunt, on his appointment to a parish in Warwickshire, found himself the trustee of a village inn left by a predecessor in trust for the parish. He decided to run the inn according to what is known as the 'Gothenburg' system, a system which, it is claimed, transformed Norway from the most drunken to the most sober country in Europe—the main principles adopted being that the liquor should be of good quality and the manager should have no interest in increasing its sale.

"This experiment was followed by others, notably that at Elan Valley, where the Birmingham Water Works Committee established a canteen for the use of its workmen, which led to the formation by the Bishop of Chester and Col. Crawford, 1896, of the People's Refreshment House Association. Its aim was 'to give wider facilities for the adoption of the system of public house management, with limited profits, already successfully at work in various parts of the United Kingdom.'

PLAN ENLARGED BY LORD GREY.

"The successful experiments of the People's Refreshment House Association led Lord Grey, in 1901, to form, purely as a propagandist society, the Central Public House Trust Association, for the purpose of inaugurating a public house trust company in every county, the county as a unit being an essential feature of the scheme. Beginning with Northumberland, Kent, Durham, and North Yorkshire, local trusts have now been established in every county in England except Leicestershire, Oxfordshire, Berkshire, and Buckinghamshire. Trusts have also been formed in Ulster (Ireland) and in South Wales.

"In Scotland, where the movement has established itself strongly and a number of trust companies are working, a Scottish Central Association has been formed this year to spread trust principles and to regulate public opinion with the view of arriving at the best form of public management.

"At the present time about 150 public houses are under trust management. This number is likely to be largely increased in the near future, as landowners are more and more appreciating the advantages to a village or neighborhood of trust management and are offering their public houses to the local trusts as the present tenancy agreements expire.

"The underlying principles enforced by the Public House Trust Association are as follows:

"The general arrangement and management of the house shall be on the lines of a house of refreshment, instead of a mere drinking bar.

"Food and a good variety of non-intoxicant drinks shall be easily accessible to customers as beer and spirits.

"The licensing laws enacted by Parliament for the regulation of public houses and the promotion of temperance shall be most strictly carried out in every particular.

"A holder of a license is in a sense a servant of the public, and he must study the comfort, well being, and health of his customers; his house must therefore be scrupulously clean, and the rooms most used by the public must be comfortably arranged, well warmed in Winter, and well ventilated.

"The manager of the house receives a fixed salary, with inducements to push the trade in food and non-intoxicants, but with no interest in the sale of alcoholics.

SYSTEM OF INSPECTION.

"A system of inspection guards against abuses and mismanagement. An Inspector visits the house without previous notice, takes samples of the liquors, examines the quality of the food and drink, and goes thoroughly over the premises.

"It is not the purpose to establish new public houses, but only to acquire such as are already established, except in the case of new licenses which the authorities intend granting—these the association will try to secure. It may, however, open refreshment rooms for the sale of food and non-intoxicants.

The capital is raised by subscriptions for shares in the trust companies formed in the various counties. The shares subscribed capital at present amounts to $1,500,000. The company in each county is governed by a council, of which the Lord Lieutenant of the county is ex officio the head, and by Trustees, Directors and other officers, among whom are usually the most distinguished men of the country.

"The total number of subscribing members is nearly 1,000. The shares are alloted on such conditions as to prevent the council a voting power, enabling it to prevent the trust from getting into the control of persons who might use it for their private purposes. The maximum dividend payable to the shareholders is 5 per cent., the surplus profits being devoted to public objects.

"The net profits of the public houses in the United Kingdom last year are estimated at about $100,000,000, or nearly $2.50 per head of the population. The profit of an average public house is indicated by the fact that several trust houses last year distributed to objects of public benefit surplus profits ranging from $1,500 to $5,000. These, unlike the ordinary public houses, made special efforts to sell the least profitable things—food and non-alcoholics.

"From all parts of the British isles where trust houses exist come reports of less disorder and drunkenness, decreased use of adulterants, and a general improvement in the character and appearance of such resorts and of their patrons.

CORRESPONDENTS AS AGENTS.

"In this county (Nottingham) the trust has sixty-five correspondents, who have volunteered their services, and who advise the Secretary of all opportunities of securing public houses now existing. The work was begun here only last year, and the trust does not yet own any houses, though it expects substantial results from the efforts of its correspondents. A great obstacle in the way, existing as well in all parts of Great Britain, is the system of 'tied' houses—those owned or financed by breweries. This system has been in existence in a sporadic way for the past fifty years, but lately it has grown to enormous dimensions, owing partly to home brewing having declined, but mainly to the conversion of most of the large breweries into limited companies.

"At present nearly 80 per cent. of the English public houses are 'tied.' How to detach these is the most serious problem confronting the trust. It never expects to gain control of all the public houses in the United Kingdom, but its work will be imperfect unless it can control more than the proportion of houses now outside the 'tied' system.

"It should be explained that the public house trust is entirely distinct from any of the 'temperance' societies of this country, which generally favor policies looking to the complete extinction of the liquor traffic.

"Among the members and liberal subscribers to the funds of the central association are a number of Americans widely known for their interest in philanthropic works."

"LITTLE MOTHERS" DROWNED.

Two Lost in the Sound—Four Others and Two Young Men Rescued.

Jeannette Meehan, fifteen years old, of 427 East Seventeenth Street and Katherine Collins, fourteen years old, of 408 East Twentieth Street, two of a party of twenty-five young girls sent to Hunter's Island, in Long Island, by the Enterprise Chapter of the Little Mothers' Aid Association of 236 Second Avenue for a week's vacation, were drowned about noon yesterday in the Sound off Hart's Island.

Four other girls from the same party and two young men from New Rochelle who had taken them rowing had narrow escapes from a similar fate. One of the girls, Jennie Flynn, sixteen years old, of 626 East Fourteenth Street was rescued in an unconscious condition, and half an hour's work was necessary to resuscitate her. The bodies of the drowned were not recovered.

On Saturday the party went to Hunter's Island for a week's vacation, being sent by the association of which Mrs. Clarence Burns is the President. William Shaw and Charles Brooks, both of New Rochelle, and friends of many of the vacation party, went over to the island. They quickly made up a party of six girls and started out in the Sound for a row. In a narrow, bound-bottomed skiff with Brooks were the Meehan and Collins girls, Jennie Flynn, who had such a narrow escape, and Gertrude Willis of 293 High Street, Brooklyn. With Shaw in his skiff were Mary Smith of 325 East Twenty-fifth Street and Grace Brown of 516 East Sixteenth Street. Both boats were of the type known as St. Lawrence skiffs.

At the time of the accident the party was in what is known as "Middle Ground," about half way between Hart's Island and David's Island, on which is Fort Slocum. The thirty-foot naphtha launch Clytie, with Capt. Castrop in command, was anchored off Hart's Island, about a quarter of a mile away, with a small fishing party on board.

The boats had drifted about two hundred feet apart by the time Capt. Castrop neared them. He says that he saw one of the girls floating in the wyater apparently unconscious. He headed the launch toward her, and as it drew alongside, Edward McGlory of 124 East Eleventh Street reached and grasped her by the hair just as she was sinking. This was Jennie Flynn. She was hauled aboard the launch and placed unconscious in the bottom. Then Capt. Castrop started toward the skiff, where Gertrude Willis, Mary Smith, Grace Brown, and Brooks, and Shaw were taken aboard the Clytie.

After getting them all on the launch, Capt. Castrop asked if the party was all safe. He was told everybody was there, and started at full speed for Jordan's Hotel, City Island. While nearing there the rescued got the better of their excitement and fright sufficiently to recall that Jeannette Meehan and Katherine Collins were missing. Proprietor Jordan said that one of the girls declared that the fault was all due to Brooks having tried to dive from his skiff. Mr. Jordan said he did not know which one of them it was that made the accusation.

Brooks denied this story, and said that the swell from the Starin Line steamboat Glen Island tipped his skiff over, throwing the four girls and himself into the water, and that the two boats were so close together at the time that the girls in clutching to save themselves caught the side of the skiff in which were Shaw and the other two girls, capsizing it also.

Afterward Capt. Castrop and Superintendent Prout sent the Clytie all around the scene of the accident in a vain search for the missing bodies.

CARRY ON THE FIGHT.

Chicago Strikers Undisturbed by New York Fight.

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—The return to work of the 3,500 strikers in New York City will have no material effect upon the general situation in the stockyards strike, according to President Donnelly of the Butchers' Union. In an address this afternoon before an audience composed of 5,000 strikers and their friends Mr. Donnelly declared that despite the desertion of the New York members of the union he would make no change in his plans to tie up the meat industry of the country this week.

"The action of the New York strikers, who are said to have voted to desert us," said Mr. Donnelly, "was not entirely unlooked for. Their grievances were not as great as ours, as they quit work merely in sympathy with the strike of the Western members of the Butchers' Union. Before next Saturday night I expect there will be fully 50,000 more workmen involved in the struggle, and the product of the New York plants will not break the tie-up planned for this week. We will be all the stronger and will secure a better settlement if we stay out for seven or eight weeks longer."

A representative of the United Dressed Beef Company said yesterday that it would take a little time to provide places for all of the strikers to whom they could give positions. There would have to be a weeding out of all but the competent men.

"In calling off the strike," he said, "the union made a complete surrender. The men go back to work on the open shop basis. That is understood, and no walking delegates will be allowed to enter the plants. We would prefer to have our old employes back where there is room for them, but we will not discharge any competent men we have."

There was a belief yesterday that when the strikers return to work the non-union men will have a hard time with them. On this account the police may be kept around for some time.

BUFFALO BULLS IN FIGHT.

Keepers Part Black Beauty," Leader of Bronx Herd, and McKinley.

Some of the thousands of people who went to the Bronx Zoological Park yesterday saw a struggle between Black Beauty, leader of the Buffalo herd, and McKinley, on of the largest bulls, which was kept from becoming very serious by the intervention of the keepers. Black Beauty has a big record as a bad buffalo, and he was just beginning to do a few things to McKinley when the fight was declared off by the guards.

Black Beauty has already killed two bull buffaloes that tried to wrest the title of leader from him. When he first arrived in the park he had a bad fight with a big bull named Antonio, and killed him. Then when the William C. Whitney herd was combined with the park herd Peta, one of the newcomers, tried a fight for the leadership and he, too, was killed.

For a time past the keepers have been watchful of McKinley, because he seemed to be full of fight, and yesterday, for further precaution, they put him in a pen by himself. In the afternoon some visitors ran to the keepers and said that two big buffaloes were at it good and hard. All the keepers were called at once, and arming themselves with long poles went after the fighters. Black Beauty seemed reluctant to stop the fight, but after he had been beaten a few times he retired, while McKinley was led back to the pen from which he had broken.

Rabbi's Daughter Kills Herself.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—Rosa Stern, the daughter of the Rev. Lewis Stern, a rabbi of this city, who several days ago made an attempt to kill herself by cutting her throat and wrist with a razor, died to-day. She was twenty-three years old and had been sick for some time. She was to have been married in a few months.

from the time that the truck had arrived he was on the escape of the fifth floor with a little unconscious girl in his arms. Her he lifted over the railing and dropped into the outstretched arms of Kalbfleisch, who was stationed on the escape at the fourth floor. Kalbfleisch dropped the little girl into the arms of Lieut. Sheridan just below him on the next fire escape, and then the firemen who were on the ladders that reached to the third floor, amid the cheers of the excited people who packed the street, dropped her into the arms of their comrades at the foot of the ladders.

By this time Engine No. 11, with Battalion Chief Crogan, had arrived, and the engine men eagerly went to the assistance of the truckmen. Stevens, Kalbfleisch, and Lieut. Sheridan were still working like Trojans, and as quick as one of the sturdy rescuers dropped a little tot into the arms of a comrade he immediately seized another, and time with that dexterity that has made the firemen of New York famous, the little one was passed with clocklike regularity to the ground below.

While all this work was going on in front of the building, other equally brave and more hazardous work was being done in the rear. There it was extremely difficult for the firemen to get their apparatus into position, and it was on the top floor in that part of the building that most of those that lost their lives died. The conditions in the rear were like those in front, the fire escapes being packed to suffocation with the frantic, fear-crazed people, among them, according to the firemen, being many men, who actually fought the women and little children in their efforts to be the first to get out of the fire trap. To the rescue of these people went first Firemen Adamosky, who is now in Gouverneur Hospital at the point of death; John White, Benisch, and Hubiltz, Adamosky, Benisch, and Hublitz went to the fifth floor, while White stopped at the fourth to assist the people there.

Kalbfleisch, who was ordered to the rear a few minutes after to assist in the work there, followed Adamosky and his comrade up the ladder, and, like the first three, continued to the top. The relay line was quickly formed, and everybody except one, Pecha Zwirm, a tenant, had been handed down, when suddenly Kalbfleisch, who was hanging to the ladder that runs along the wall between the fourth and fifth stories, saw it give way.

White was on the fire escape at the fourth floor. A second line of hose had just been worked up the wall at the time, and Zwirm's rescue was to follow. It was at this moment that Kalbfleisch saw the fire escape sag. The next moment it gave way and crashed with great force to the ground below, poor Adamosky being caught directly underneath the débris of the iron stuff of which it was made. White had been struck a glancing blow by the wreck as it went down, and was knocked back through the window.

Fireman Directs Own Rescue.

When the firemen reached Adamosky they saw at a glance that he was badly hurt. He was still conscious though, and directed the work of removing the tangled mass of iron beneath which he was pinned. He said he thought his back was broken; he knew that his legs were fractured, and that he was internally injured. When his comrades released him and lifted him up he screamed with pain, and asked them to handle him more gently, a request which, because of his position, it was absolutely impossible to grant. Hublitz and Benisch had fallen on a feather mattress, and although they were bruised their injuries are not very serious. They are all expected to be back at work in a few days. White was also declared to be out of danger from his injuries. Kaibfleisch, whose hands were frightfully blistered in rescuing two little children just before the escape fell, was not hurt in the wreck of the escape owing to the fact that he was clinging to the ladder on the wall at the time.

While the firemen were rescuing the women and little children, many of the men and boys on the third floor saved their lives by jumping to the ground, landing on mattresses and other soft materials that had been thrown there. Jacob Baer was one of the men who jumped. He was hurt. All of these rescues and escapes occurred within half an hour from the time the fire started.

To control the big crowd that assembled Capt. Handy of the Union Market Police Station asked for and got the reserves from his own, the Delancey, Madison, Eldridge, and East Fifth Street Stations. Despite the great number of people that filled the streets for blocks around, Capt. Handy said later that the crowd was a wonderfully easy one to control, and that his greatest trouble had been in keeping quiet those who had relatives living in the tenement. One of these, a man, he said, became so frantic that at one time he seriously thought of having him placed in a straitjacket in order to prevent him from taking his own life. It was the discovery of this man's little three months' old daughter, he said, that finally quieted him and made unnecessary the extreme methods contemplated. Eight ambulances, two each from Bellevue, St. Vincent's, Hudson Street, and Gouverneur Hospitals, were summoned by Capt. Handy. Only one of the young doctors, he said, seemed to dislike the work of mercy for which he had been detailed. The Captain did not remember the doctor's name.

As soon as the fire was under control the firemen began the work of removing the dead from the building. Most of the bodies were recovered on the fifth floor, only two being found on the fourth floor. Most of them were found in a crouching position on the floor. Among those found were the mother and most of the children of two more families, the Feurbergs and the Millers. The husbands, Maxmilian Feuerberg and Louis Miller, had escaped. Like most of the other men in the tenement, they slept on the roof on hot nights, and escaped by jumping to the roofs of the adjoining buildings.

Mrs. Rosa Eichler and her three-months-old baby, Rebecca, were found in their bedroom on the fourth floor near the rear fire escape. Mrs. Eichler had her infant clasped tightly to her bosom. All of the bodies were lowered to the ground in blankets by means of ropes, and as each body was let down a wail of grief from the thousands below, many hundreds of whom were neighbors and friends of those that had perished, went up. As soon as a body was lowered it was placed in a patrol wagon and taken to the Union Market Station, the wagon being followed by a crowd of excited men, women, and children, each anxious to learn whether or not the unfortunate was of their kin. The crowd around the station house soon numbered at least three thousand, the police say, and it was only with the greatest difficulty that they were able to preserve order in the line of those that passed through the room where the bodies were stretched out in order to identify them.

Stars and Stripes Over Dead.

Capt. Handy tried to get a bolt of cotton cloth to cover the bodies, but at the hour none could be found. He then remembered that a great American flag, such as is used for campaign purposes, was stored in the house, and he ordered one of his men to hunt it up. This was done and the flag proved large enough to cover all of the bodies. The bodies were soon identified, with the exception of one little boy. Later in the day they were sent to the Morgue.

Those of the injured who were not sent immediately to the hospitals were attended by ambulance surgeons in the various stores in the neighborhood. Capt. Handy was especially impressed with the work of one of the neighborhood doctors, Dr. Gustav Kompert. Dr. Kompert, he said, worked for four hours at the scene and was of the greatest assistance to the police in designating those that should have the first attention. Dr. Kompert took full charge pending the arrival of the ambulances.

Fireman Kalbfleisch yesterday afternoon gave a description of the work done by the firemen.

"We left our house at 2:55 A. M.," he said, "and in less than five minutes were on the scene. The minute we saw that blaze and got a view of the crazed, frantic people on those fire escapes, we knew that it was going to be impossible to get everybody out alive. We pushed our ladders as quick as possible, and, while the ladders were in the air, Stevens and I went up, followed right away by Nelson, another of our men, and Lieut. Sheridan, the second in command of the company. Stevens went to the top and I stopped at the floor below. After Stevens had handed me two or three little tots, I saw that he had his hands full trying to keep the men under control while he saved the women and children first, and I went up and joined him.

"Nelson, Sheridan, and several others then came up further and we continued the work of rescue until we had about cleared the escapes of all the little ones, and, this done, I went into the house to see if there were any left in there. I did not think so at the time, but I soon found out my mistake. I first booted in a bedroom door, but it was a mass of red-hot flames and smoke, and I knew that if any were in that room they had been dead some time. I then burst in another door with a like result, after which I started to grope my way back to the fire escape. I had nearly reached the window when I stumbled over what proved to be a little boy. I picked him up and was surprised to find that he was still alive. I handed him to Stevens and Stevens passed him to Nelson, who lowered him to Lieut. Sheridan and the stree..

"Next I went to the fourth floor, and there I found a girl and three or four little children. The girl asked me to save the children first, which I of course did, and then I went back to her. I got her to the fire escape, and then I made her put her arms around my neck and cling to my back while I carried her down.

"She did as I told her, and a little more, too, for she got it into her head that I was going out of my way to help her, and she leaned over and kissed me. I was in no position to object, and was getting down as fast as I could when, just as I landed on the escape at the third floor preparatory to getting on the company ladder, a man who was there grabbed me and demanded that I save him first.

"I told him he was big enough to save himself, and started down the ladder. Just as my face got even with the foot of the escape he kicked me in the head. That was the only time during that awful fire that I felt like licking somebody. Soon after this I went to the rear, and there it was that the fire escape collapsed and poor Adamosky got hurt. I got off with thirteen blisters on my left hand and seven on my right."

Fireman Stevens told a story that tallied exactly with the one that Kalbfleisch told. He said, however, that before Kalbfleisch went to his assistance on the fifth floor at the beginning of the fire he had a lot of trouble with the men.

"Some of them fought like tigers," he said. "In their efforts to be saved first, regardless of the fact that there were delicate women and little children who were entitled to come first. This disgusting spectacle soon became so outrageous that I realised that if I did not act heroically with them I might lose some of those women and little children. Accordingly I knocked several of them against the wall and after that they were better behaved, and we eventually got everybody who was alive out."

Maximilian Feuerberg, who lost most of his family, is a tailor. He said that one of his sons, Abraham, was on Randall's Island, where he had been placed because he was unruly. This boy is all that he has left now. Feuerberg said he and his wife had gone to the synagogue on Saturday night and that on their return she announced that she would sleep with the children and he went on the roof. Yesterday afternoon the man, still half dazed with grief, told his story.

"After bidding my wife and children good-night," he said, "I climbed the stairs leading to the roof. I carried a blanket and a pillow with me. When I got up there was a nice breeze blowing. I think there were about eighteen people on the roof. I could see them stretched out in various positions. Soon I was asleep. I remember I had a dream. In my dream I heard the roar of a cannon, and now I know it was an explosion in the basement of the building. I sat bolt upright. I was dazed. I saw others rising to their feet about me and throwing off their coverings. I rubbed my eyes, scarcely knowing where I was. Then something brought me to my senses. It was the smell of smoke. As I looked toward the scuttle hole in the roof, the only way of reaching the place where I was, I saw a red glow, and I jumped to my feet. I thought of my wife and three children, sleeping on the third floor.

One Man's Struggle.

"I would have jumped down the scuttle hole then, but the people were crowded about it and the red glow had become a column of flame. I saw a man try to go down into the place, but some one grabbed him by the shoulders and pulled him back. In the crowd about the scuttle hole I must have seen faces that I knew, people whom I had known for a year or more, but then I recognized none. I thought only of my wife and children. I tried to get near them, but there was a struggle between two men. Some one else had attempted to descend, to the help of some one, I suppose. This man had been grabbed by the friend. I heard them say:

"'He ought to be pulled back. What can he do? It's death to go down there. It's worse than going into a red-hot furnace.'

"But even then I wanted to go into the building. After fighting my way to the edge of the place where the flames shot out I waited a moment until I thought that the opportunity would be a good one, for the fire seemed to die down a little. Then I put one foot over the edge of the hole. The next instant my shoe would have rested on the top step leading below, but a gust of hot air swept up in my face, staggering me, and I fell backward. Some one caught me, or I would have fallen on my back. Some one else dragged me from the edge of the scuttle hole. When I got up I saw there was no chance. The thought that I must leave them there to perish was agonizing. But I had hope. I thought perhaps they might have got down by the stairway or that some one had helped them down a ladder. When I came to consider how quickly it all had happened and how little opportunity there really was for them to get out my heart sank.

"I would have been burned to death had I remained on the roof any longer. I looked about me and saw that the place was about deserted, so I followed the others over to the adjoining roof, making my way thus to the ground."

The Blame for It.

The criticisms of the police, Coroner Scholer, and the firemen of the condition in which the tenement was at the time of the fire were all emphatic. Inspector Schmittberger declared that it was the Tenement-House Commission which was to blame, while Coroner Scholer said he thought the Building Department was at fault. The firemen seemed to think that neither department had done its duty. Coroner Scholer said the Building Department should have prevented the removal of the fire escape ladders while tenants still remained in the building.

The basement and lower floor of the house, the latter about six feet above the sidewalk level, have been cut through, the front and rear walls being supported by steel beams that workmen were placing in position. This left the dark, narrow stairway that extends up through the building, and which ends in a dark mass of timbers on the first floor, as the only possible exit for the tenants. To get to the street from the first floor they had to go down an improvised wooden stepladder kind of affair, the stoop, like the fire escape ladders, having been removed.

In order to make the building bring in some money while the alterations were being made, the owners reduced the rentals of some apartments from $12 to $9 and of others from $10 to $7. There were twelve families living on the three upper floors.

Capt. Handy said no permit for the alterations was on file at Police Headquarters, where it should certainly be if one had been granted. Tenement House Commissioner T. C. T. Crain said last night that he did not know whether plans for the alterations had been filed with either the Tenement House Commission or the Building Department. He said if the contractor was guilty of removing the fire escapes, that fact should have been noticed by the police and the Inspectors employed by the other two departments.

The fire is supposed to have started from the overturning of a lamp of candle on the third floor.

When Fireman Adamowsky was hurt an ambulance was sent after Father Harrington of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church to administer the last rites to the fireman. While returning with the priest the ambulance, in a turn, ran into an ice wagon at Henry and Gouverneur Streets. The driver, John Murray, was thrown out and painfully injured. Father Harrington, after ascertaining that Murray's injuries were not mortal proceeded on the run to the hospital, where he saw and comforted the injured fireman.

LABOR DAY PLANS COMPLETE.

Parade Starts at 10 o'Clock—Theatrical Union to Make Big Showing.

The Labor Day Committee of the Central Federated Union reported yesterday that the Marshals and aides for to-day's parade had been instructed to report to-day at 8 A. M., at Fifty-ninth Street and Fifth Avenue, where the parade is to start.

There will be carriages and automobiles for women, and citizens who are not members of labor unions, but take an interest in organized labor. Out of the 850 members of the Theatrical Protective Union, 800 have guaranteed that they will be in line. Each will wear a gray Fedora hat, and the union will be preceded by a band of fifty pieces. Other delegates reported that their unions will be well represented.

The charge that some of the asphalt companies are violating the eight-hour law was again discussed at yesterday's meeting. President Haffen of the Borough of the Bronx was denounced as an enemy of organized labor for deciding that more proof would be required of the alleged violations.

The delegate of the Asphalt Workers' Union said that the Cranford Asphalt Company had directed its men to work on Labor Day, and it was decided to send a telegram to Borough President Littleton asking him to investigate the matter.

ONE LAW FOR THE STRONG, ANOTHER FOR THE WEAK.

We are indebted to the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, and we here make grateful acknowledgment of the obligation, for furnishing a fit occasion to put before the voters of the United States certain passages from public documents forming a part of the history of their country, than which we can imagine no campaign reading likely to be, politically and morally, more instructive.

In his article in the current North American Review, setting forth the reasons why Mr. ROOSEVELT should be elected President, Senator LODGE makes this comment upon a not yet forgotten incident:

> The last time the Democratic Party had control of our foreign relations they signalized that control by a blundering attempt to reverse the unbroken policy of America in regard to Hawaii, which has since become a territory of the United States.

President HARRISON, on the 15th of February, 1893, sent to the Senate for ratification a treaty providing for the annexation of Hawaii, which had been negotiated by JOHN W. FOSTER, Secretary of State, and certain Commissioners representing the "Government" of the Hawaiian Islands, this Government being the fruit of the revolt of Jan. 17 against the constitutional Government of Hawaii. On March 9 President CLEVELAND, who had succeeded President HARRISON, recalled the Hawaiian treaty from the Senate "for the purpose of re-examination." In a special message sent to Congress on the 18th of December, 1893, President CLEVELAND recited the actual history of the revolution in Hawaii, and the part played by representatives of the United States therein. Of the Committee of Safety which organized the revolt seven members—a majority—were foreign subjects or citizens; five Americans, one Englishman, and one German. Our Minister, JOHN L. STEVENS, a Maine man trained in the Blaine school of politics, was in the confidence of this Committee, and co-operating with it. When the time was ripe for action, on the 16th of January, 1893, STEVENS caused to be landed in Honolulu a detachment of marines from the United States steamer Boston with two pieces of artillery, ostensibly to protect American property. Really this force was used to back up the little rebellion, the proclamation of the new Government being read from the steps of the Government building with the United States marines drawn up under arms and with artillery in readiness only a few yards away. The deposed Queen, not wishing to engage in a war with the United States, made no attempt to deal with the insurrection, which she could easily have suppressed but for our interference, and appealed to the sense of justice of this Government. Like the Panama revolution, the thing was over in five days; the committee was organized on the 14th, the new Government proclaimed on the 17th, and on the 19th Commissioners representing it sailed for San Francisco.

In his message reciting the facts and referring the whole subject to "the broader authority and discretion of Congress," President CLEVELAND said:

> The lawful Government of Hawaii was overthrown without the drawing of a sword or the firing of a shot by a process every step of which, it may safely be asserted, is directly traceable to and dependent for its success upon the agency of the United States, acting through its diplomatic and naval representatives. But for the notorious predilections of the United States Minister for annexation the Committee of Safety, which should be called the Committee of Annexation, would never have existed.
> But for the landing of the United States forces upon false pretexts respecting the danger to life and property, the committee would never have exposed themselves to the pains and penalties of treason by undertaking the subversion of the Queen's Government. * * * And, finally, but for the lawless occupation of Honolulu under false pretexts by the United States forces, and but for Minister STEVENS's recognition of the provisional government when the United States forces were its sole support and constituted its only military strength, the Queen and her Government would never have yielded to the provisional government even for a time, and for the sole purpose of submitting her case to the enlightened justice of the United States.

These are the facts, this is the truth of history, as honest-minded men may ascertain by reading any authoritative chronicle of the time that is untainted by the misrepresentations of STEVENS's partisans. With the morality of the transaction Mr. CLEVELAND's message deals in language which, it seems to us, it will be profitable for the voters of this country to read and ponder at this time:

> Believing, therefore, that the United States could not, under the circumstances disclosed, annex the Islands without justly incurring the imputation of acquiring them by unjustifiable methods, I shall not again submit the treaty of annexation to the Senate for further consideration. * * *

But in the present instance our duty does not, in my opinion, end with refusing to consummate this questionable transaction. It has been the boast of our Government that it seeks to do justice in all things without regard to the strength or weakness of those with whom it deals. I mistake the American people if they favor the odious doctrine that there is no such thing as international morality; that there is one law for a strong nation and another for a weak one, and that even by indirection a strong power may with impunity despoil a weak one of its territory.

> By an act of war, committed with the participation of a diplomatic representative of the United States and without authority of Congress, the Government of a feeble but friendly and confiding people has been overthrown. A substantial wrong has thus been done which a due regard for our National character as well as the rights of the injured people requires we should endeavor to repair. The provisional government has not assumed a republican or other constitutional form, but has remained a mere executive council or oligarchy, set up without the assent of the people. It has not sought to find a permanent basis of popular support, and has given no evidence of an intention to do so. Indeed, the representatives of that government assert that the people of Hawaii are unfit for popular government, and frankly avow that they can be best ruled by arbitrary or despotic power.
> The law of nations is founded upon reason and justice, and the rules of conduct governing individual relations between citizens or subjects of a civilized State are equally applicable as between enlightened nations. The considerations that international law is without a court for its enforcement, and that obedience to its commands practically depends upon good faith instead of upon the mandate of a superior tribunal, only give additional sanction to the law itself and brand any deliberate infraction of it, not merely as a wrong, but as a disgrace. A man of true honor protects the unwritten word which binds his conscience more scrupulously, if possible, than he does the bond a breach of which subjects him to legal liabilities, and the United States, in aiming to maintain itself as one of the most enlightened nations, would do its citizens gross injustice if it applied to its international relations any other than a high standard of honor and morality. On that ground the United States cannot properly be put in the position of countenancing a wrong after its commission any more than in that of consenting to it in advance. On that ground it cannot allow itself to refuse to redress an injury inflicted through an abuse of power by officers clothed with its authority and wearing its uniform; and on the same ground, if a feeble but friendly State is in danger of being robbed of its independence and its sovereignty by a misuse of the name and power of the United States, the United States cannot fail to vindicate its honor and its sense of justice by an earnest effort to make all possible reparation.

This is what Senator LODGE stigmatizes as "a blundering attempt to reverse the unbroken policy of America in regard to Hawaii." We are confident, we are certain, that the conscience of the American people approves and ratifies, not his sneer, but GROVER CLEVELAND'S stern denunciation of a wanton outrage perpetrated upon a defenseless victim. The parallel with the Panama escapade is altogether too close to be observed without discomfort by the supporters of President ROOSEVELT. The likeness is indeed startling. The deed of overthrow and spoliation which Minister STEVENS, backed by the Administration at Washington and by United States armed forces on the spot, accomplished upon the little island kingdom in the Pacific, was accomplished upon the territory of the Republic of Colombia by five Panama Canal speculators, under the protection and also with the aid of United States armed forces. "Weaklings," of course, have no rights which a war-loving Administration is bound to respect. But the man or the party that assumes that the American people have no conscience, no honor, and no sense of justice, makes a mistake.

DIGESTING THE SECURITIES.

The behavior of the bond market during the past week was by far the most interesting development not merely of that week but of the entire year in the domain of finance. It would appear that some, at least, of the "undigested securities" which have for the past two years been a source of discomfort are being distributed. The total transactions in Government, railway, and miscellaneous bonds on the New York Stock Exchange during the past week reached a total of $29,686,900, par value, being an average of nearly $6,000,000 a day for the five-day market. How this compares with the previous week and with the corresponding week in the last three years may be seen from the following table:

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE BOND SALES.

	Railway and Miscellaneous.	Government Bonds.
1904	$27,790,900	$1,896,000
Previous week	13,201,000	124,000
1903	5,510,000	9,000
1901	8,356,000	2,000

After a period of depression in trade and in the securities markets there is no weather sign which experienced observers study more attentively or with a deeper interest than the buying of bonds and the tendency of bond-market prices. The range of quotations during the past week has carried many leading railroad and miscellaneous bonds to the high point of the year. Compared with 1903, prices are in the majority of cases somewhat higher. These phenomena are, of course, not conclusive as to the immediate or the more distant future. They are significant, however. They indicate a return of confidence and a resumption of investment buying.

Something over two years ago investors stopped buying bonds. Since that time neither bonds nor shares have had a good market. Stock Exchange shares indeed have been the mere plaything of the traders of the Street; the public has pretty much let them alone. But the present bond buying indicates a changed sentiment. As a season of depression approaches its close, when money has accumulated in the hands of investors—as it does in the hands of many investors accumulate, even in the worst times—and when little by little dealings has been regained, the first stir is observed in the buying of gilt-edged bonds. As the demand forces up the price of these securities the market broadens to include a somewhat lower grade, and so on until buying broadens throughout the whole range of bond issues. The next thing to be looked for usually is, as rising bond quotations reduce the annual return on the investment, a shifting of the demand to the share market. By that time the Street knows that the public is "back," and everybody rejoices in the return of "good times." London is still skeptical about the return of business activity in the United States. There are two theories here. It is insisted on the one hand that the tremendous losses due to over-speculation which culminated in 1901 and in the painful liquidation of 1902 must be recouped before the public will have any money to invest in securities. This class of theorists defers the return of good times to next year, or possibly later, when another great crop shall have added to the National wealth. There seem to be doubts whether the crop of the present year is sufficient to bring about anything resembling a "boom."

The other class of theorists is fond of pointing out that the losses of 1901-02 were largely paper losses, not money losses. They contend, therefore, that a restoration of confidence, not an accumulation of cash, will be the condition of revived interest in securities. So far as the Street plungers are concerned this theory may be true, but notoriously the general public throughout the country, the public which includes persons of the most moderate means, did lose actual money, in the aggregate a great many millions of actual money, partly through unfortunate investment, but largely through pure bucket-shop and Stock Exchange gambling in the boom days and the ensuing black days.

Whether the public is or is not about to return to the "Street" is not a matter of so much consequence as the visible signs of some improvement in general business. Notwithstanding a few discouraging decreases in net railroad earnings reported during the past week, the August tendency of the leading railroads is in the direction of improvement, and bank clearings in the country for the month of August show an increase for the first time since June, 1903.

CORRUPT PRIMARIES.

The theory of the primary meeting law was that the action of voters in choosing the officers of party organisations should be surrounded with the same safeguards as those placed about action at the polls. The weak spot in both cases is the election officers, the men who pass on the right to vote and who count the votes. In each case it is assumed that the representatives of opposing interests will have a sufficient motive to watch each other, and will do so. There are, however, opportunity and temptation for deals between the managers of opposing parties, and they have taken place notoriously in the past as to general and local elections. These frauds have been reduced in number and importance by the activity of independent and vigilant citizens not connected directly with either party.

In the party primaries this element is necessarily almost if not wholly absent. The contests are between factions within parties and the whole business is largely in the hands of professional politicians. It is not surprising, therefore, that frauds such as were described in our columns yesterday morning take place. The worst of them are attributed to the Elsberg amendment, which enabled the representative of a party to secure the removal of an Election Inspector summarily without charges. But this very amendment was inspired by the fact that Inspectors had been found acting in betrayal of the interests of the party by which they were originally selected. If the head of the county organization of each party is honest, the amendment would serve its professed purpose. If he is not, it is not easy to see how the law can effectually prevent his party from suffering in consequence. It is impossible to secure individual integrity by statute, and the rule that responsibility generally is in the ratio of undivided authority would seem to justify the amendment.

CORNERS AND THE LAW.

If the decision of Judge CHYTRAUS of the Superior Court, in Chicago, be generally sustained in the matter of prices during "corners," it will be followed by a revolution on all the Exchanges of the country, or by a change in the law.

The decision as reported is practically against all dealings in futures. It is to the effect that a contract to pay a certain price for commodities at a future designated date cannot be enforced if the actual price of the commodities at the time of the agreement is lower than the price agreed upon. The reasoning on which the decision is based is not given in the dispatches, but it is probable that the Judge, if he did not rely on some special provision of the Illinois statutes, depended on the general proposition that the contracts involved were contrary to public policy as being essentially of the nature of gambling agreements. That is a popular view, and it is held by some serious authorities in economic ethics, but we are unaware of any such view sanctioned by a court of standing. The line between gambling and certain sorts of commercial and financial speculation is not clearly to be drawn in all cases. But so far as transactions on the Exchanges are concerned, the distinction lies in the fact that the dealer in futures knows in advance that he must be prepared to make or take delivery of the commodities involved at the prices agreed upon or settle the difference. If that is not a definite element in the transaction, it is not suited to any legitimate Exchange and descends to the level of the bucket shop or the poolroom.

Of course prices may be affected by manipulation, and that is known to all parties and enters into their calculations. The mere fact that a man stakes his money on his judgment as to a change in price within a certain period does not make him a gambler. If it did, trade would be reduced to barter, and even barter would have the gambling element in it, since the production of anything, grain, for instance, would be governed by individual judgment as to the willingness of some one else to take it for cloth or what not. It is not likely that the decision of the Chicago Judge is as sweeping as the first report of it indicates.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Comment on the fact that the more or less famous war correspondents who sought to do their work within the Japanese lines have at last given up in despair and started for home, should take into account the fact that, while these eminent and talented gentlemen have struggled in vain against a cruelly courteous determination to keep them at what the Japanese considered a safe distance from the scene of active operations, the events of the war have nevertheless been reported with what has been, in the circumstances, amazing promptness and accuracy. "Advance information," indeed, has been altogether lacking, except for innumerable rumors from the Chinese ports, but these have almost invariably been offered for what they were worth and with no attempt to conceal their dubious character, so that their frequent contradictions are no reproach either to those who sent or to those who published them. Of things asserted actually to have happened, however, on Russian as well as Japanese authority, very few have subsequently been denied, and newspaper readers all over the world have been enabled to follow the movements of the contending armies, their successes and their reverses, in a way that left no just excuse for complaint. Apparently the war reporters, as distinguished from war correspondents, have been provided with all reasonable facilities and liberties, and the censorship to which their productions have all been subjected, while severe as to what should not be revealed, has never taken the active form of dictating, for political or military reasons, what they should send out. The difference is due, doubtless, to the fact that the reporters were not critics of prophets, either in reality or in pretense, were there for news alone, and were men who could be controlled by the military authorities so long as those authorities made no attempt to use them for purposes opposed to journalistic ethics. We must all regret that writers like Mr. DAVIS and Mr. FOX were not allowed to send us the descriptions and impressions of a great war which they were so competent to produce, but the Japanese are engaged in the performance of a stern and desperate task, and cannot afford to have even one of its chances for success imperiled by the presence of men with reputations of their own as experts to maintain or make. Curiously enough, however, the correspondents have fared better with the ever victorious Japanese. The former seem to give the writing folk as many opportunities to get killed as they choose to take, but it will be noticed that the vivid battle stories are all devoted to the laudation of Russian valor, while the facts of the campaign reach St. Petersburg in the form of brief official dispatches.

—Various Federal and State officials are taking due care to notify subordinates of all ranks that they are under no special obligation to make contribution to party funds and to warn all persons in the public employment that for them to solicit such contributions is an illegal act that will be severely punished if detected. Even our own Governor, little remarkable as he is for delicacy in political matters, has been careful to impress upon campaign managers, big and little, the necessity for observing the letter of the law in this matter. His critics may suspect that his purpose in telling them what they must not do was to fix their attention on the lamentably easy ways in which the admirable intention of the law can be safely evaded, but he did give it the seal of his official approval and obedience, and that is something. Still, we all know that the office holders are turning in their contributions on both sides, and that refusal to do so would not only be known to the party leaders, but would be followed in many cases by disciplinary measures of the harshest kind. The problem is an extremely difficult one. Of course there can be no thought of telling the man in office that he must not give anything toward the legitimate campaign expenses of the party to which he belongs and for whose success he hopes. Just as long as that is permitted, however, the law against the assessment of office holders for political purposes will be more or less of a farce, and, exactly as the candidate for office eludes the necessity of itemizing his campaign expenses by contributing a lump sum to a committee Treasurer, so the collector of assessments will be put beyond reach by the simple expedient of selecting him from among those who really or technically are not themselves office holders. They may have all the knowledge and exert all the pressure of that class, but if they are not of it they are safe. Conditions, however, while yet far from ideal, are vastly better than they used to be, and ultimate punishments can usually be avoided by recalcitrant employés who know their rights and dare maintain them.

—Our recent suggestion that an improved construction of city roofs would turn almost every one of them into a very valuable addition to urban opportunities for enjoying good air and comparative quiet has been rather ill received by The Insurance Press. "Undoubtedly," it says, "there is room for vast improvement in the construction of roofs from the fire hazard point of view, but the idea of transforming the average roof into a pleasure resort is a dangerous suggestion. It would probably mean the making of more openings through roofs, which would create draughts for fire, and such places would likely be covered with combustible shelters, because of their low cost, instead of doing everything to minimize the danger from fire. Combustible superstructures of any description are a menace to life as well as property, and should be prohibited by law. It is not to be supposed for a minute that EDWARD ATKINSON would indorse any such idea as THE NEW YORK TIMES suggests. Rest and recreation are indispensable to good health, but The Insurance Press is of the opinion that both can be obtained without increasing the fire hazard of a city." With the last statement we are in thorough agreement, but see not the slightest reason for assuming that the new roof approaches and the shelters thereof would be so made and of such material as to increase the danger from fire. That it would be possible to do so is obvious, but obvious, too, is it that it would be easy to make them of incombustible substances and in such a manner as to prevent, instead of favoring, draughts from below. Even at present there is some means of access to almost every roof, and the majority of them are used to some extent. The use could be enlarged without any increase of existing dangers, and the enlargement, by directing more attention to these dangers, would tend directly toward the taking of precautionary measures against them. The Insurance Press should think again, and not too hastily assume that it monopolises all knowledge as to fire hazards.

—It is more than a little difficult to understand why a Judge with conscientious scruples against capital punishment should deem himself free from responsibility for what he considers a great wrong when he calls in another Judge to pronounce the death penalty. This, or about this, is what Judge JOHN I. MULLINS of Denver has done, for, finding ten persons awaiting trial for murder before him, he appealed to a Judge in a neighboring district to sit in his place and himself took up work that did not involve the performance of the repugnant duty. The reasonable course for a man who felt deeply on this question would have been, not to transfer the task to another, and so perform it by proxy, but to remain on his bench and there resist as long as he could the demands of the law. Such action, naturally, would not have been long successful, and it would have cost the Judge his position, but it would have contained an element of the martyr's heroism, and it would not have been logically absurd.

FUTILITY OF STRIKES.

The Ultimate Loss is to the Men Who Go Out.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Who benefits the most between the two, the labor organisation or the workingman? This is an important question which to-day in the midst of our strike is being discussed. The people at the present time say that strikes must exist in order to bring the bosses to terms. This may be true, in some respects, but after the strike is over who is the victor of the fight? That is another question.

Has the poor workingman of the present century ever made any headway by enrolling himself in a labor organisation, and if so, to what extent has he benefited. If a workingman is fortunate enough to gain headway and thus enable himself to save a few hundred dollars, he looks forward to prosperity, and everything looks bright until a strike appears, and because he is a union man and a few of the others belonging to the union are dissatisfied with the rate of wages which they are receiving, a strike is ordered, and all hands must step out.

Many a workman were he not a union man would continue working, but in order to save his name, and the disgrace of being called a "scab," he steps out, against his will, with the others. When we deeply consider all the strikes and what good we have derived therefrom we must ask ourselves the following question, "Will we gain in the fight or will we lose?" That question means a great deal to the poor workingman, who perhaps has a large family at home depending upon his labor.

I, for one, think that strikes ought to be discontinued, as every man is capable of knowing his own wants, and when to look forward for an increase, and he necessarily requires no one to dictate to him as to what methods he should use when the time comes for such purpose. I really believe that every workingman knows when he should get an increase, and he knows very well that he can gain more in the end by asking the employer for such increase, as at the present time a voluntary request works more wonders than action by compulsion. I, for one, think every man fully capable of attending to his own affairs, and he needs no one to dictate to him, or that he needs any adviser as to what he should do and should not do. The proper way is to follow his own dictations, and if he fails in his ideas he has he one to blame for his misfortune but himself.

"WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN."

Report About Lodge Suggests Title for Roosevelt Book.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The flagship of the anti-reciprocity squadron, the Henry Cabot Lodge, is reported to be leaking badly and to be in a sinking condition, with the Admiral on board after whom it is named, in the Boston Harbor, in the very spot where our great-great-grandfathers sunk the cargo of British tea in 1776 and in sight of the Admiral's residence at Nahant.

It is further reported that shots fired by the Hon. Eugene N. Foss pierced her armor plate in several places and that it will require seven years to put her in fighting condition, and that the Admiral will be retired March 4, 1905.

How very appropriate! He and Theodore can then write a book entitled "What Might Have Been" if Judge Parker had not been elected.

YOUNG CONVICTS AS FARMERS.

Instructed in Useful Trades While Undergoing Punishments.

From The London Chronicle.

An interesting experiment is at present being tried with youthful criminals of from sixteen to twenty-one years of age. Each class or grade is kept apart from the others, and wears a distinctive dress, according to whether it is penal, ordinary, or special. The last grade is the highest, and contains those whose conduct is most satisfactory.

The most important point of the code is employment in association in workshops or in outdoor labor, such as farming, gardening, &c., so that while the subjects are undergoing punishment they are also being specially instructed in useful trades and industries.

Special attention is given to their education by instruction in the ordinary subjects of the Elementary Education Code, by lectures and addresses, and by their being provided with books.

Before the prisoner's discharge arrangements are made with some philanthropic society or benevolent person to aid in supervising his future.

At the Young Convict Settlement of Borstal, Chatham, these experiments are achieving very successful results.

A Correction.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I gratefully acknowledge the honor you did me in admitting a part of my letter of the 30th ult. to your columns, and I would not impose on your good nature by coming again, were it not for an error of the types that makes me appear to be as ignorant of the history of the building of this Republic as are the Imperialists who claim that they are following in the footsteps of the fathers of our liberties. But to the error. I wrote: "These flippant depreciations of the author of the Declaration of Independence and the father of the Constitution—Jefferson and Madison." The compositor added an "s" to the word father, which makes me include Jefferson among the framers of that great chart in which not only we but all free peoples have found an anchor for our and their liberties both sure and steadfast—so long as we and they regard it. Besides, it makes me take from the immortal Madison the distinctive honor with which by common consent he has been deservedly clothed.

GROUT A VOTE GETTER.

Figures to Show Why He Should Get the Democratic Nomination.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Whether a candidate is acceptable or not to a State or city leader should not control in the selection of a nominee for Governor by the Democrats this year. The Democratic rank and file want a candidate in whom the public has confidence and one who will poll the biggest vote.

I am one of those who believe that Edward M. Grout should be the Democratic candidate for Governor this year, because he has always been a vote getter. The people believe in him, irrespective of how he may stand with the bosses.

Mr. Grout in 1895 was a candidate for Mayor in Brooklyn, when the Democratic cause was regarded as absolutely hopeless. Had any reasonable amount of campaigning been done by the Brooklyn Democratic organization he would have won hands down, as his vote was 75,330, as against Wurster's 77,425. A third candidate, Edward M. Shepard, who claimed to have an enrolled organization of 30,000 independent Democrats, managed to attract 9,510 votes and was a very poor third in the race. Mr. Grout's vote for Borough President in Brooklyn in 1897 was 85,921, as against Hinrichs's 50,777 votes and Roberts's 46,353. Mr. Grout's plurality over Hinrichs being 35,143. In 1901 Mr. Grout defeated Mr. Ladd as a candidate for Controller of the Greater City by 46,450 plurality, Mr. Grout's vote being 302,639 and Mr. Ladd's 256,189. In 1903 Mr. Grout's vote for re-election for Controller was 67,490 greater than that of his competitor, Mr. Hinrichs, Mr. Grout obtaining 316,165 and Mr. Hinrichs 248,675.

The vote cast for Mr. Grout has been irrespective of the position he has taken as regards the local bosses. Tammany put Mr. Grout on the ticket last year to satisfy independent Democrats and to make the issue clear as between Mr. Low and Mr. McClellan. Mr. Grout got the votes, just the same as he had two years before in a campaign of protest against the Tammany of Devery and Van Wyck.

Now, look at the vote-getting ability of at least two of the candidates who are suggested this year and who are favored either by a local or a State boss. We have seen what a corpse showing Mr. Shepard made in Brooklyn against Mr. Grout in 1895. Mr. Shepard was a candidate for Mayor of Greater New York in 1901 against Mr. Low. With the entire machinery of Tammany and Mr. Shevlin's organization in Brooklyn behind him he was miserably defeated by Mr. Low by a majority of 80,110, the vote being: Low, 296,050; Shepard, 205,940.

Mr. Stanchfield is another candidate who is "favorably mentioned" for a renomination. Why it should be suggested that Democrats be compelled to work and vote for a man who has already been nominated by the party and badly beaten is a mystery. Although Mr. Stanchfield ran against Mr. Odell, who is a political boss, and therefore should have been an easy candidate to defeat, the Governor-boss beat him by a plurality of 110,000 in the State.

I would suggest that our State and local Democratic leaders try the experiment of putting Mr. Grout, who is a vote getter, at the head of the State ticket. The fact that he may not be desired by the bosses would seem to be one of the best reasons for his candidacy.

CALCULATING THE RETURNS.

How He Figures Parker's Majority in November.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

By way of prediction by one who made close calculations of the several past elections, predicting Robert Van Wyck's defeat, Bryan's double defeat, Augustus Van Wyck's defeat, Coler's election, (writer hereof positively believes that had they counted heads, exclusive of cabbage heads, &c., up State, Coler would be our Governor to-day,) McClellan's victory in Brooklyn, and his election by very nearly the right figure, let me offer you the following:

State.	Parker.	Roosevelt.	Doubtful. —But Probably— Parker.	Roosevelt.
Alabama	11	..	..	..
Arkansas	9	..	..	..
California	..	..	10	..
Colorado	5	..	..	..
Connecticut	..	..	..	7
Delaware	3	..	..	..
Florida	5	..	..	..
Georgia	13	..	..	..
Idaho	..	3	..	..
Illinois	..	..	..	27
Indiana	..	..	..	15
Iowa	..	13	..	..
Kansas	10	..	..	..
Kentucky	13	..	..	..
Louisiana	9	..	..	..
Maine	..	6	..	..
Maryland	..	..	8	..
Massachusetts	..	16	..	..

New Hampshire	..	4	..	..
New Jersey	..	..	12	..

North Dakota	..	4	..	..
Ohio	..	23	..	..
Oregon	..	4	..	..

Wyoming	..	3	..	..
Total	226	150	30	70

Now, giving each candidate two-thirds of his "doubtful though probable" vote plus one-third of his opponent's vote of the same kind, I find that Parker will have (approximately) 226 plus 20 plus 23, or 269 votes, while Roosevelt will have 150 plus 10 plus 47, or 207 votes.

On Nov. 9 I'll be able to say "I told you so," maybe.

Sunday Closing in Spain.

From The London Standard.

SAN SEBASTIAN, Aug. 21.—The Home Secretary having completed the necessary regulations, The Madrid Gazette will publish to-morrow a royal decree putting in force the Sunday Closing bill. Under this measure all work is absolutely prohibited on Sundays in every trade—factories, shops, stores, and in State, provincial, and municipal services. All newspapers, agencies, printing offices, even bakeries, fruit and coal shops, and hairdressers, must be closed at 11 o'clock on Sunday mornings.

The bill is applicable to loading and unloading vessels in ports and to railway goods traffic with certain exceptions. The new law enacts, however, that railway traffic for passengers and mail, the telegraph and telephone services, gas works and electric power stations, domestic services and hotel service, bath houses, and funerals may proceed as usual. The regulations also allow taverns, cafés, eating places, and theatres to be open on Sundays, but bullfights will not be permitted, except on extraordinary occasions. Despite great popular protest in Madrid and the provinces, the present Conservative and Catholic Government is determined to enforce the provisions of the new measure.

Kaiser's Snub of the Bismarcks.

From The London Chronicle.

The marriage of Count Herbert Bismarck and the Countess Hoyos took place at Vienna, and it was on this occasion that the Kaiser took a step which was one of the falsest steps of his life—a step equivalent to the malevolent boycotting of the Bismarcks. By order of Majesty, Count Caprivi, the new Chancellor, wrote to Prince Reuss, German Ambassador at Vienna: "Should the Prince (ex-Chancellor) or his family make any approach to you, pray confine yourself to conventional forms of courtesy. This order is also to be observed by the staff of the Embassy. I may add that his Majesty will take no notice of the weddings."

KING EDWARD'S DOG STORY.

Told for the Ears of a Reporter Who Engraved His Card in the Sand.

From The London Mail.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—Watching King Edward promenading the other day at Marienbad, accompanied by Gen. Sir Stanley Clarke and Capt. Ponsonby, a representative of the Gaulois, who is staying in the town, was particularly struck by his Majesty's high spirits, which were evidenced by his frequent and hearty bursts of laughter as he conversed with the two officers.

Presently the trio sat down on the seat occupied by the journalist, the King being on his left with only an iron bar between them. The Frenchman stole occasional glances at the monarch's face, and could not help remarking the robust vigor and health which it denoted, as well as "the keenness of his glance, which at one moment expressed benevolent irony and at the next grave tranquillity, and again good nature."

For a long time the journalist endeavored to pluck up courage to address the King. Raised by a bright idea, he traced with his stick in the freshly sprinkled sand the words "Le Gaulois," and underlined them heavily. Then as a species of introduction he took off his hat.

King Edward read the words with some surprise and then turned toward Sir Stanley Clarke, who laughed. The French reporter hastily effaced the inscription, while the King, who had been speaking in English, now continued the conversation in French. Of all that he heard, the journalist only permits himself to send to his paper the following anecdote told by his Majesty:

"A French Princess married to a Danish Prince was stopped one morning in the streets of Paris by a policeman while taking her favorite dog Capi for a walk.

"The constable declined to believe that she was the Princess, declared that she had stolen the dog, and took her to the office of a magistrate.

"The latter gravely shook his head at her story, and urged her to make a full confession! Finally her royal highness obtained her liberty by being permitted to ring up her father on the telephone."

NATIVE CHINESE SPECIE.

One Coin, Worth About a Mill, Made in Flowery Kingdom.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your statement in a recent editorial on "The Chinese Currency," that there is no coin of Chinese make, is correct only as to gold and silver.

There is a native coin, but only one, in circulation throughout the Flowery Kingdom, made by the Government in the mints of the different provinces. Permit me to present you with a specimen of this specie. Its inscription calls it officially "currency" (tung-par) of the reign of Kien-lung, (1736-1796.) The reverse gives the province of its origin in Manchu.

The coin is made of a cheap copper alloy; its value fluctuates around that of our mill.

A MYSTERIOUS IKON.

Remarkable Demonstration of Russian Superstition.

From The London Chronicle.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 3.—The Rus states that on the 26th ult. a rumor was circulated among the inhabitants of a village near Saratoff that the Ikon of the Holy Virgin of Kazan had suddenly made its appearance on a hill named Sparrow-hawk Hill. It was declared by some to be the same Ikon which had been stolen from the Kazan Monastery, while others maintained that the new apparition was that of the Holy Virgin of Kursk. An enormous crowd immediately proceeded from Saratoff to the Sparrow-hawk Hill, which, it may be remarked, is very steep.

In a short space of time the hill was packed with a crowd of thousands of persons. On the summit they found set up an ordinary galvanized iron cross with an Ikon of the Kazan Virgin in its centre, and a small lamp burning in front of it.

The crowd proceeded to kiss the Ikon, women brought their newly-born infants to it, and decrepit old men were dragged up to it. At the foot of the Ikon there was soon quite a heap of silver and copper money, and the cross was covered with ribbons and other pieces of material which had been brought as offerings by the inhabitants of the neighborhood. Hawkers of various articles, especially religious pictures and objects, thronged to the spot, and the police had to be summoned to maintain order.

In the evening the ecclesiastical authorities ordered the Ikon to be removed to the church, but it was late at night before the crowd could be got to disperse. The place where the cross was set up has become the centre of a veritable pilgrimage.

All that can be ascertained regarding the way in which the cross came to be set up is that it was purchased, the night before its discovery on the hill, in the bazar at Saratoff by a person wearing the uniform of an excise officer. Accompanied by a workman, he went to the hill and fixed the cross in the ground. Then both disappeared. The police are actively searching for this mysterious individual.

THE PASSING OF THE PIE.

If was a golden, yellow pie—a pie that was renowned
For crispness and for flavor through the entire country 'round;
So thick with luscious filling and the top piled up so high
With waves of creamy egg-froth—that was Mother's lemon pie.
I remember when in boyhood she would serve a piece to me
That roused my gustatory sense to speechless ecstasy;
And all these years of absence I have often yearned to fly
Back there to the old homstead for a piece of Mother's pie.
My wife has sought to gain that height of culinary art
That Mother reached in lemon pie, but they lie far apart,
The pie that Mother used to make and my wife's pie, that truth
Compelled me to observe was not the pie I knew in youth.
Through cook-books without number we have searched in vain to find
A recipe for lemon pie—the good old Mother-kind,
But while they bud with promise and awake the kindling eye
To lively expectation, they don't taste like Mother's pie.
Last week we went down to the farm to visit, wife and I,
My visions of the old home largely tinged with lemon pie,
And Mother, dear old Mother, how she smiled at us through tears
And bade us welcome to the home I had not seen for years.
What subtle divination had inspired her to prepare
For dinner such a lemon pie! What happiness lay there
Within its yellow bosom, where the egg-froth piled so high,
At last! At last! Brought face to face with Mother's lemon pie!
But oh, I grieve to tell it! It was tough and soggy, too;
Its flavor far from that ideal my boyhood fancy knew.
It roused no gustatory glow and caused no keen delight,
As slowly its tough substance was dissolved and passed from sight.
Farewell the dreams I'd cherished, for 'twas then I came to know
My boyish hunger dulled o'er that pie of long ago;
And as I sat there I could see, though with a misted eye,
Another idol shattered—that of Mother's lemon pie!

GREEN-EYED ONES MAKE HAIR DYE THEIR WEAPON

BACK, HE FINDS THEM RED

Jealous Women Rivals Sent Her to Hairdresser with Prescription Known Only to Themselves.

The police of the West Forty-seventh Street Station heard a story last night that convinced them that the green-eyed monster had discarded such shopworn agents as vitriol, the clumsy revolver, and the vulgar stiletto in wreaking vengeance. The green-eyed one in the person of two women has gone a step higher and made art and the innocent hair dyer the tools of wrath.

The revelation came from Alexander Smalley, a young man who entered the station house last night and abruptly asked the Sergeant:

"Is it red?"

"Sometimes," responded the Sergeant, "and sometimes it's black."

"That's just it. It was black and now it's red."

"Aw, what are you giving us? What do you mean? Are you dippy?"

"Come in here, Marion, and pulled off your hat," called the young man.

Marion, small of figure and demure of face, came in trembling.

"Now is it red?" asked the anxious one.

"Yes," said the Sergeant, "it is, unless I'm color blind."

Smalley said he had formerly lived in New York, but went to Topeka to seek his fortune. He prospered there, and now had a snug bank account as well as a comfortable home. He had worked hard, because Marion had agreed to wait until he had made a place for her.

He wrote to Marion ten days ago that everything was in readiness and that he would come to claim his bride in a few days. He reached New York on Saturday and hurried at once to the apartment house on West Forty-seventh Street where she lives. She met him at the door, but he did not recognize in the red-haired maiden before him the girl of whose glossy black locks he had so often spoken to his friends in Kansas.

Between sobs she told him how her hair began gradually to decrease, and how she had confided her troubles to two young women friends. These young women had also been fond of Smalley, and the situation was seized upon by them as a means of revenge. They advised that she go to a certain hairdresser on Fifty-second Street and take the treatment which they recommended. She did so, but when she looked in the glass after the first treatment she was shocked to find that her hair had been changed from a glossy black to a fiery red.

Smalley gallantly told her that no designing women could part them, but he wanted the guilty ones punished, so the couple told their troubles to the police. Smalley said he had so often spoken of Marion's black locks to his friends in Topeka that if he went back with a red-haired bride they would think that he had been trifled and married another.

The Sergeant told the couple to go to the West Side Court this morning and the Magistrate would mete out the proper punishment to the two jealous young women and the hairdresser.

CONEY DAZZLES FOREIGNERS.

Dreamland and Luna Park Suddenly Lighted for Visiting Engineers.

The electrical engineers from abroad who are en route for the International Electrical Congress at St. Louis met in this city yesterday and took a trip up the Hudson and to Coney Island. They took the trip—about 600 of them in all—on the Richmond of the Starin Transportation Line. The feature of the day was the visit to Coney Island, which was made ostensibly for the purpose of inspecting the Brooklyn Edison light works, but the visitors found a little time also to take a snapshot glance at the whirl and bustle of Coney and at the attractions of Dreamland and Luna Park.

By skillful manoeuvring both on the part of the managers of the Brooklyn Edison Light Company as well as T. C. Martin, the Chairman of the New York Reception Committee, a surprise was created for the foreigners when the Richmond approached the pier at Dreamland. There is nothing like the newer Coney Island display in Europe, which was one reason for taking the visitors there. It was, therefore, managed so that the Richmond would approach the Dreamland pier just at dusk. The Captain beat the time a little, and floated well out from the shore, where he loitered a bit.

Suddenly the variegated lights of the little buildings nearest the Edison light works began to flicker a little, and then, with one gust of light, like a flash of lightning, all of Coney Island, Dreamland's high tower, and the many fantastic buildings and booths of Luna Park were revealed before the visitors. The engineers had taken their wives and women friends ashore, and the sudden illumination was followed by a chorus of "Ahs" and "Ohs," supplemented by hand-clapping.

FIVE DROWNED IN LAKE ERIE.

Naphtha Launch Capsizes During Night Trip Near Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Sept. 4.—Five men were drowned in Lake Erie last night as the result of the capsizing of a twenty-two-foot naphtha launch, in which they were en route from Cleveland to Vermilion to attend the yacht races at the latter place to-day.

The launch floated to the beach near Edgewater Park late last night. Cries for help had been heard by campers along the shore, but no assistance could be given in the darkness.

The dead are John D. Begley of 551 Scoville Avenue; Albert G. Treiber of 28 Avondale Street; Paul Hartner of 200 Root Street; Max Hurtig, a traveling salesman for a New York City firm, and his brother Jules Hurtig, draughtsman, employed by the Gerry Iron and Steel Company of Cleveland.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR HONORED.

San Francisco Illuminated to Celebrate the Conclave.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—A number of special trains bearing Knights Templar entered the city to-night. Special services were held to-day in connection with the conclave. At night a sacred concert was given at Mechanics' Pavilion in memory of President McKinley, with a chorus of 500 voices. The city was brilliantly illuminated to-night.

The feature of to-morrow's programme will be the arrival and reception of the Earl of Euston, representing the Grand Priory of England and Wales. He will be received by a full Templar escort, consisting of four troops mounted and two companies of foot and a band of twenty-two pieces.

Killed by Fall from Slide.

George Howard, twenty-seven years old, of 376 East Twenty-third Street, fell from the top of William Skinner's toboggan slide at South Beach last night and was instantly killed. He is said to have been standing up in the car as it was passing the highest point.

KEPT POURING ANTIDOTES.

But Doctors' Untiring Zeal Failed to Impress "Patient" Properly.

ORANGE, Sept. 4.—Detective Sergt. John Drabell was sitting behind his desk at Police Headquarters last night when two excited negroes rushed in and managed to gasp out that Lillian Cutchen of 3 Richmond Row had taken poison and was even at that moment in her death throes. Drabell didn't wait for particulars, but sent in a hurry call for an ambulance, which he accompanied to the scene. Richmond Row was very quiet, but it was not long before another excited colored man rushed out of a house, crying:

"She's in here. Oh, hurry up, doctor, she's g'wine to die!"

Detective and orderlies rushed in, and there they saw Miss Cutchen seated in a chair struggling with a number of excited colored women, one of whom was forcing down the woman's throat a mixture which Drabell afterward ascertained was salt and milk. Between gulps the girl wailed: "I didn't take it, I didn't take it!" but to no purpose, for when she had gulped the milk and salt she was treated to a mixture of beaten eggs and sugar.

When Drabell and the orderlies carried her to the ambulance she was nearly exhausted. She gasped:

"Oh, doctor, doctor, don't take me to the horspital! I'll die for sure then."

Drabell was not taking any chances, and the horse was whipped up. In a few moments Lillian was landed in the Orange Memorial Hospital, where the house surgeon gave her some more remedies. He then examined her carefully and remarked that there were no signs that the girl had taken any poison at all.

The girl arose from the operating table in the accident room and, looking reproachfully at Drabell, the doctors, and attendants, remarked:

"I done try to tell you the bes' I know how that I ain't swallowed none o' that stuff, yet they keep er pourin' an' er pourin' of dat stuff down mah throat and mek me so sick."

Further inquiry elicited the fact that Lillian had a bad toothache which she was endeavoring to subdue with creosote and had spilled a little of the stuff in her mouth.

CROWN PRINCE'S BETROTHAL.

Kaiser Wilhelm Announces His Son's Engagement to Duchess Cecilia.

ALTONA, Prussia, Sept. 4.—During a dinner which Emperor William and the Empress Augusta Victoria gave at the Kaiserhof to-night to the leading officials of Schleswig-Holstein, the Emperor announced the betrothal of Crown Prince Frederick William to the Duchess Cecilia, sister of the reigning Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin.

The announcement was received with great enthusiasm.

Frederick Wilhelm is an amiable, modest Prince, exceedingly popular in Germany, and especially in the army, of which he is one of the most dashing officers. As a horseman he has few superiors in the empire, and on more than one occasion he has been the hero of daring feats that brought upon him the official displeasure of his father, who, however, at heart is known to admire the young man's nerve.

His last recorded exploit was performed in May last, when he took part on the Berlin race course in a hotly contested race for officers over obstacles for a cup offered by the Kaiser. Frederick William tied for the prize, but generously relinquished it to his brother officer. For risking his life in the race his father confined him to quarters for three days. On a previous occasion he was similarly punished for riding his horse up a steep flight of steps.

He has always manifested a liking for Americans, and was said to have been deeply in love with Miss Gladys Deacon, and to have caused the Kaiser serious concern as the result.

His education has been very complete. He is a good musician, and under the guidance of his father he has acquired a thorough grasp of affairs of State.

Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin is the second sister of Friedrich Franz IV. The Grand Ducal house of Mecklenburg is the only reigning family in Western Europe of Slavonic origin, and claims to be the oldest sovereign house in the Western World.

PRINCESS SEEKS POPE'S AID.

Wants Marriage to Frederick of Schonburg-Waldenburg Annulled.

ROME, Sept. 4.—The Giornale d'Italia, in denying that a reconciliation has taken place between Princess Alice de Bourbon, daughter of Don Carlos, pretender to the Spanish throne, and her husband, Prince Frederick of Schonburg-Waldenburg, asserts that the Princess has arrived in Rome unaccompanied, for the purpose of urging on the Vatican authorities the annulment of her marriage through the influence of the Pope, whom she knows personally.

Prince Frederick of Schonburg-Waldenburg, a cousin of the head of the house, married at Venice, in 1897, Princess Alice de Bourbon, youngest daughter of Don Carlos, the Spanish pretender. It was reported some time ago that the Princess had eloped with her coachman, an Italian named Maberni, but this report was soon proved untrue, and it was said that the Princess charged her husband with circulating the rumor.

She began divorce proceedings against Prince Frederick at Dresden on Nov. 24, partly on the ground of bodily injury and forcible deprivation of liberty. A dispatch from Dresden on Dec. 23 last said that the court there had dissolved the marriage. Announcement of the decree was made without explanation of the reasons for it, and the proceedings were conducted in entire privacy.

FAVORS TO RUSSIAN JEWS.

Extended Residential Privileges Granted to Higher Classes.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, Sept. 5.—An imperial ukase has been published making provisional amendments pending a general revision of the whole legislation concerning Jews.

The amendments grant greatly extended residential privileges to the higher-class educated Jews, and permit certain indicated Jews or those who have served in the army to reside in any part of the empire.

The new regulations, however, do not apply to districts where special regulations exist for the circumspection of Jews.

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 4.—Wong Kim Yuen, a Chinese merchant, resident of Quintaro, in the State of Tamaulipas, has refused to accept the office of Mayor of that place, although urged to do so by the prominent residents of the town.

He declined the office, it is said, on account of his nationality, although he is now a naturalized citizen of Mexico.

To-day's meetings were crowded, between 5,000 and 6,000 attending.

TWO ANGRY BLUECOATS DAUBED WITH ORANGE

And One of Them Was from the South of Ireland.

FOUGHT NINE PAINTERS ALOFT

Sunday Law Violation and Insult to Old Sod Were Too Much—Painters Are Corraled.

The oppressive quiet which obtains on the Sabbath out in drowsy East New York was suddenly and startlingly ripped up the back and turned inside out yesterday afternoon by the spectacle of two big policemen, thickly daubed from shoe to helmet with paint of a flaming orange, grimly and solemnly parading nine men in overalls and jumpers through the streets to the Liberty Avenue Station. It was a sight which brought from the small boy of the place a long-drawn howl of perfect joy and caused the Sunday dignity of their elders to turn double handsprings.

The painted and unhappy policeman were Orr and Slot, and the men they were marching wrathfully to the lock-up were painters. Yesterday Orr and Slot, on duty, were walking along Barbey Street, near Blake Avenue, when they beheld eight journeymen painters and one foreman painting away like mad on a new house near the corner, fracturing the Sunday law in the most cheerful manner imaginable.

"Well, well, and do yer pipe that?" observed Slot, when he could command speech.

Orr made no reply, and Slot looked at him inquiringly. The other was staring fixedly at the painters, his face red and his usually drooping mustache fairly bristling. He stood thus for a moment or two, a great convulsion going on within him. Finally he found voice.

"Slot," he said, chokingly, "I was born in the South of Ireland."

"Well, what of it?"

"What of it!" And Orr, his kindling emotions bursting into flame, pointed to the painters on the scaffold. "Do yer see what they're paintin' that house with?"

"Sure; they're paintin' it with paint," returned Slot, readily.

"But the color, man, the color—it's orange," and with a growl Orr ran to the house.

"Hey, you, come down out of that," he commanded, beckoning to Morris Zoylach, the foreman of the painters. "You're breaking the law and insulting every Irishman in the neighborhood."

Zoylach intimated that he would remain where he was. Just then a painter accidentally upset a pot of paint by throwing it from the scaffold and the orange fluid fell upon and spread itself over the policeman standing below. Orr, with a yell, ran into the building followed by Slot. In order to get to the scaffold they had to ascend to the roof and slide down the ropes. Under a galling fire of orange paint they reached the enemy and engaged him at close quarters. The painters fought valiantly with their brushes, which they kept wet and dripping by dipping them into the pails between strokes. The air was filled with bright orange paint and most of it found its way to the persons and uniforms of the policemen. Something like eighty-seven small boys, in convulsive glee, looked on from below.

Victory was finally with the policemen, and the painters were forced to descend to the ground. Then they were marched to the station. By the time they got there about the only small boys in East New York who weren't following them were those who happened to be home sick in bed. Orr, looking at the Sergeant, pointed to the orange paint on his face, hands, and uniform, finally the Sergeant spoke.

"Take it on the run for a Turkish bath," he said to Orr and Slot.

After they had been in the steam room for about four hours, Orr turned to Slot and, observed disgustedly:

"I'm thinkin' we came to the wrong place, Slot."

"How's that?"

"We should have gone to a livery stable and been curry combed."

CHINESE VOTER'S DEBUT.

Gives "Coming-Out" Dinner to Politicians in Mamaroneck.

Special to The New York Times.

MAMARONECK, Sept. 4.—Chew Ugon Wing, the only Chinese voter in New York State, was welcomed into Mamaroneck society to-day, when Wing gave a "coming-out" dinner to about thirty leading officials, politicians, and merchants of Mamaroneck. His guests included former Supervisor Frank Hardy, who is Chief of Larchmont's Fire Department and a member of the Larchmont Yacht Club; Postmaster Boyd, and Henry C. Weeks, Superintendent of Elections Morgan's representative in Westchester County.

Mr. Hardy made a speech, in which he welcomed Chew Ugon Wing into Mamaroneck's society. Three cheers were given for Wing by those present.

Although Wing has a ballot, he has not yet declared his intentions as to whom he intends to vote for. Both the Republican and Democratic politicians have made overtures to him.

FIRE UNDER ASBURY CASINO.

4,000 Were Listening to Band Above—Two Syrians Arrested.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, Sept. 4.—Commotion was caused at the Asbury Avenue Casino this evening when Fahda Jabalie and A. Jabalie of New York were arrested, charged with attempting to burn that structure. They are Syrians who were on the beach beneath the Casino, and it is charged that while there they burned a number of newspapers near the floor of the building.

The men, accompanied by their wives, were arraigned before Magistrate Borden, who remanded the two men for a hearing to-morrow morning. They say that others fired the newspapers, and that they assisted in extinguishing the blaze. There were 4,000 band concert patrons in the Casino when the fire started.

DROWNED IN CANADA LAKE.

Mrs. Dalley, Formerly of Orange, Was Upset from Canoe.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST ORANGE, Sept. 4.—Word has been received here of the drowning in Muskoka Lake, Canada, last Tuesday of Mrs. Charles M. Dalley, formerly a resident of West Orange and well known in Orange. Mrs. Dalley was a daughter of Mrs. Jennie M. Bushnell of Northfield Road, West Orange. Mr. Dalley, before his marriage, lived in High Street, Orange. Since the marriage he and his wife have spent most of their time in traveling. Recently he returned from a business trip to St. Louis, and was to have joined his wife in Canada in a few days. They expected to come to West Orange on a visit next Friday. Both Mr. Dalley and Mrs. Bushnell left for Canada as soon as they heard of the accident.

According to the word received in Orange, Mrs. Dalley, who had been spending the Summer at Muskoka Lake, went out on Tuesday afternoon in a light Indian canoe with a boy. The canoe upset and they were unable to keep afloat. It is not known here whether the boy lost his life or not.

SMITH'S AN ACTOR NOW.

Jumped from Family Circle Ushering to the Opera Chorus.

For seven years William Smith was an usher in the family circle at Daly's Theatre. From this lofty height of fifty-cent bliss he looked down and saw the rise and fall of make-believe monarchies, saw tinseled kings and queens come, conquer, and pass on. And all these years he yearned to be among them, amid the dazzling lights and gorgeous costumes. Of a sudden the hitherto unnoticed usher now finds himself there—on the stage, rubbing arms with imposing ladies of the chorus and almost touching, at times, the comic opera idol of London, Edna May herself. Moreover, he gets a much fatter pay envelope.

In the daytime he worked in a printing house, and he "ushered" every night because he needed the money. Then a friend heard his voice and advised him to try for the chorus. With no certain step Smith went to the offices of Charles Frohman, the Napoleon of the amusement world, and got to the sanctum of the General Manager. This person was in a hurry.

"Well?" he asked, shortly.

"I want to sing in the chorus of 'The School Girl,'" said William.

William got his trial. A stage manager listened to him, and then told him to sing again.

"You'll do," was the verdict, and the usher almost fainted with joy.

At rehearsals Smith was always first to arrive and last to take his leave. He worked hard to get all the steps just right, and sang so lustily and well that he drew favorable attention to himself. Now "The School Girl" is going at full blast, and it's very likely that no one in it, not even the star, is so happy as William, the quondam usher.

STEEL TRUST ECONOMY.

Sheet Steel Mill Improvements to Reduce Cost of Labor Fifty Per Cent.

Special to The New York Times.

SHARON, Penn., Sept. 4.—To reduce the cost of labor in the manufacture of sheet steel and iron the United States Steel Corporation is expending nearly $1,000,000 in improving its South Sharon mills.

The Sharon Steel Company two years ago erected a modern sheet steel mill at a cost of $750,000. The United States Steel Corporation bought this mill.

The sheet steel mill was allowed to remain idle until recently, when it was decided to make a continuous mill out of it. The improvements will do away with 50 per cent. of the labor required to operate an ordinary sheet mill. It was also decided to do the same with the tin mill, and the work is now in progress.

STUDENT DEAD IN HOTEL.

Candidate for Rabbinical Degree Asphyxiated!

Simon Rapport, thirty years old, of Hempstead, L. I., who, it is said, was graduated from a medical college at Vienna two years ago and who had recently been studying to be a rabbi at the Jewish Theological Seminary here, was found dead in a room in the Harlem House, at One Hundred and Fifteenth Street and Third Avenue, yesterday afternoon. The room was filled with gas. Coroner Jackson said he thought Rapport had committed suicide.

A man who called last evening at an undertaking establishment where Rapport's body was said that Rapport had recently disagreed with his brother, Jacob Rapport, of 1,668 Lexington Avenue, who was supporting the student. Then, he said, Simon was left without money.

THE NEWS OF NEWPORT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Sept. 4.—The presence of many guests at the cottages for the Horse Show made it a lively social Sunday in Newport to-day. Luncheons were given by Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, J. J. Van Alen, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. A. G. Vanderbilt, and Mrs. William T. Bull, and dinners were given to-night by Miss Leary, J. J. Van Alen, Mrs. George B. De Forest, Mrs. P. M. Lydig, Mrs. R. T. Wilson, Jr., and Mrs. J. E. Widener.

Mr. Van Alen's luncheon was in honor of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Sheehan, and his dinner in honor of Mme. Mary King Waddington. Miss Leary's dinner was also in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Sheehan, and among the guests whom she had invited to meet them were Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, J. V. Parker, Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Lehr, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel B. Fearing, Mr. and Mrs. T. Shaw Safe, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Q. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney J. Smith, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Spencer.

Next week promises to be the liveliest of the season in social circles. Monday evening Mrs. E. A. Brugière will give a dinner and dance at the Deerham cottage, and Mrs. Lewis Cass Ledyard and Mrs. E. R. Thomas will give a large dinner. Tuesday evening Mrs. W. B. Leeds and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish will give dinners. Mrs. Leeds's is to be followed by a vaudeville entertainment and Mrs. Fish's by a dance, elaborate preparations having been made for each event. Wednesday evening Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Thomas will give their largest function of the season, a dinner dance, for which a large addition has been made to their villa to be used as a dancing pavilion. Numerous smaller dinners have also been arranged, and many luncheons will be given each day.

The Bacchopen-Pfizer wedding takes place Monday at noon at the Marquand villa, Linden Gate, which Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pfizer have occupied for two seasons. A large number of guests are expected from New York and Brooklyn in addition to those who will attend from Newport.

The Horse Show opens Monday, and will be held three days, and a large gathering of society people will fill the boxes, all of which were taken many weeks ago. The entries of Alfred G. and Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Mrs. J. B. M. Greenwood, and Mrs. Burke Roche will give a local flavor to the exhibition, and make an interesting competition of itself. Reginald C. Vanderbilt will exhibit the horses that won many prizes at Boston and Philadelphia in the Spring, and in addition a new pair, Storm and Cold Wave.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt will exhibit an active and alert pair of high-steppers which he has recently purchased; Mrs. Grosvenor will show the horses which won many prizes at Long Branch and Atlantic City, and Mrs. Roche will show the horses which won at Bayside and Narragansett Pier. Few of these horses have met in competition, they having been exhibited in different shows, and the competition between the several stables is keen.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanford White of New York are guests of the Misses Cheney at the Pizard cottage.

William F. Sheehan will return to New York to-night after Miss Leary's dinner.

Dinners were given at the Casino grill-rooms to-night by James W. Gerard and Charles D. Jordan.

TRUSTFUL COBBLER DIES WHEN DEBTORS DEFAULT

Is Said to Have Loaned Large Sums Without "Writings."

SAVED FORTUNE AT HIS BENCH

"Old Man" Deitchman, a Wizard with Decrepit Footwear, Found That He Could Not Get His Money Back.

"Old Man" Deitchman, known on Division Street as the "Subway Shoemaker," is dead. The doctor's black-and-white, matter-of-fact diagnosis was that Deitchman's death was the result of poor food, squalid surroundings, and a lack of fresh air. The neighbors all declare that he died of a broken heart, because he could not get back the money which he had saved by almost half a century of work and lent to people on the block.

For more years than the oldest resident of the neighborhood can recall Sender Deitchman had lived, slept, eaten, and worked in a tiny cellar beneath the tenement house at 212 Division Street. A shoemaker of more than usual skill, his strong point was in the resurrection of old footwear which had seemingly outlasted its usefulness.

"He could buy a worn-out pair of shoes," said a young man who lived a few doors from the cellar, "for 5 cents, patch 'em up, and sell 'em for a dollar. He didn't spend 10 cents a day on food. There was a little cook stove in his workshop, and his cobbler's bench served him for a bed. If he had any relatives they didn't live with him. Of course he saved a lot of money, and in the last few years he began to lend it out for interest. I don't know how much he saved—some say $20,000, some more and some less. He had the name of being a miser.

"He didn't know anything about business, even if he was a miser, and when he loaned his money out he didn't take no writings from the men he let have it. He didn't even have a witness. He just took the man's word. When he began to try to collect the money he had hard times, and it worried him night and day. Last week a firm he had loaned $400 to failed, and that was the last touch. He couldn't get over it. He almost quit eating, and brooded over his losses all the time."

On Saturday night Leon Silverman, who had known the old man for years, passed the cellar. Though the open door he heard faint calls for help. When he ran down the stairs the cellar was dark, and he could not see a foot before his face, but Deitchman had heard his footsteps and feebly asked him for a drink of water.

"I'm so sick," the shoemaker moaned. "I lose all my moneys."

Silverman ran to the street, hunted up a policeman, and sent in a call for an ambulance. When the ambulance arrived, Deitchman was already dead. After his death a man who said he was a kinsman appeared and yesterday Deitchman was buried. Now the people in the block are wondering whether he left any heirs, and if they will take steps to collect the money owed him. Everybody in the neighborhood is sure as to how much the debts are and the names of the debtors. It is neighborhood gossip.

IN THE SHOPS.

Pittsburg is to have a new light in its shopping district. A big McCreery & Co. store is to be opened at Wood Street and Sixth Avenue on Sept. 14. It will be a bright store inside and out, windows on four sides, built of white terra cotta and glazed that it may be kept free from the city's grime. It will be run on the line of the New York store; it will have a large first-class restaurant occupying an entire floor.

***

Fall is the hardest season of the year for the woman shopper. She has spent her money usually in vacations, and there are innumerable bargains to be found upon which she should spend all the money she is saving for Winter clothes—remnants and various articles of Summer wear that she can get at a quarter less than she can at another season. A Summer bargain which will be useful this Winter for a party gown for the young girl is really a bargain. It is a net robe, trimmed and ready to make up. It is white, of a good quality of net, with ruffles and ruchings of the net put on around the skirt in undulating lines or deep scallops. It is very pretty, and costs only $7.50.

***

Corsets are among the things which are selling at low prices. Why any woman should wish to wear anything heavier than a light-weight corset, worn, as that garment is, over the vital organs, where less warmth is required than on other parts of the body, it is hard to tell, but they do, and consequently the shops sell off their end-of-the-Summer stock at very low prices. On Saturday in one store tape girdles were selling at 49 cents, a pretty little batiste girdle, ribbon edged top and bottom, $1.25; corsets for 69 cents, and other corsets in longer models and valued all the way up to $2.50 for the same price. More expensive corsets, costing regularly from $3 to $10, were on sale at $2. These were both in fancy colors and white.

***

A very good quality of white, pale gray, and mode shade gloves sell at 79 cents. They were $1.

***

Gingham and seersucker skirts, some of them in the pretty light colors which can be worn and look well under light gowns, are 98 cents; they were $1.50. There are some pretty and serviceable alpaca skirts, with a plaiting around the lower edge, a well-made skirt comfortably light in weight. They were $2.65; an excellent skirt for the money.

***

Here is a corset cover for the slender woman. It is made on a little different lines from the regular cover, having no opening, and its slips on over the head and is drawn in at the waist with a tape. It has several narrow ruffles across the front. The neck and sleeves are finished with a ruffle of the material, a not over-fine cotton. The corset cover costs 75 cents, which is reasonable enough.

***

The average woman needs a soft towel for her face if she would keep the skin smooth and fine. One of the best of these is in the soft flax dew-bleached linen of Irish make, and in what is known as the baby's towel. It is a small towel, sixteen by something over thirty, double hemstitched, and costs 50 cents. Such a towel is a delight. One that is good enough, however, costs half the money. It is not of the same quality of linen, of course, but it is also soft to the skin. It is a small bird's-eye linen towel, also double hemstitched. It costs 25 cents. These are towels which are good for the cold-cream face bath, which is necessary when one comes in from the cold and does not find it advisable to bathe with water. The amount of grime which a little towel like that will remove will surprise any woman who has not tried it.

***

Very pretty lawn waists which have been selling for $6 can now be bought for $3. They are fine in quality, beautifully but simply made, with narrow tucks down the front. They come in white and pale blue.

***

There are white muslin waists trimmed with lace edgings and insertions which have been sold for over $6 and are now selling for $3 and a fraction. They are good value.

Baby Drowned in a Park Lake.

WORCESTER, Mass., Sept. 4.—Earl Woodaman, aged twenty-seven months, while at play with two small brothers in University Park, fell into shallow water, to-day, and drowned. The cries of his brothers brought none of the many pleasure seekers in the park to his assistance until he had been in the water seven minutes, and he was taken out dead.

DR. HERMANN BAAR DEAD.

Hebrew Orphan Asylum's Monument to His Memory.

Dr. Hermann Baar, for twenty-three years Superintendent of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street and Amsterdam Avenue, and who made the institution a model of its kind, died yesterday morning at his residence, 2,094 Fifth Avenue, after a lingering illness. Death was due to a complication of diseases.

Born in Stadthagen, Germany, seventy-eight years ago, Dr. Baar was educated in the local schools and took his degree of Ph. D. in the University of Jena. From the first he had intended to devote his life to teaching and his first work was in the famous Jacobson Schule in Seesen, Germany, where he scored his first success. His methods were far in advance of those employed at that time, and others were quick to recognize his talent. A call from a Jewish congregation in Liverpool caused him to resign as school teacher, and for ten years he remained in England.

In 1867, owing to illness, he was forced to resign, and sailing for this country settled in Washington, where he established a Jewish congregation. From Washington he went to New Orleans and in 1876 received a call to act as Superintendent of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, then a small institution with about two hundred children in Seventy-seventh Street near Third Avenue. Upon taking charge of the institution which became his life work he at once established reforms and applied his own methods with such good results that the institution prospered in every respect. Outgrowing its old quarters, it moved to the present home, One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street and Amsterdam Avenue, in 1884. At the time of Dr. Baar's resignation in 1899, owing to poor health, there were nine hundred children in the asylum.

Since that time Dr. Baar has given his time to literary work. He was the author of several books on the education and training of children, was a frequent contributor to The American Hebrew, and at the time of his death had just completed the third volume of a Bible history for children. The death of his wife six months ago was a serious blow and since that time Dr. Baar has been in declining health. Two sons, Julius and Victor, and a daughter, May, survive him. The funeral will be held at the Orphan Asylum on Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Sept. 4.—Darkness ended to-day's game with Pittsburg at the end of the twelfth inning, with the score a tie. Leever was batted hard at the outset, but was invincible after the third inning Harper had one bad inning, the seventh, when four hits and an error gave the visitors three tallies. Huggins's two errors on easy chances gave Pittsburg the tieing run in the ninth inning. The score:

KRAMER WINS TWO RACES.

Champion Cyclist First in N. C. A. Quarter-Mile Championship.

Frank L. Kramer, the American champion cyclist, won the quarter mile National Cycling Association championship at the Vailsburg track yesterday.

In one of the semi-final heats Kramer, Fenn, and the Bedell brothers started together, and as it was only once around the track an early lead was almost equivalent to a victory. With John Bedell leading and his brother second, with Fenn and Kramer close behind, John Bedell started to sprint, and before Fenn and Kramer were aware of it John Bedell had a lead of eighty feet. At this period of the race Fenn sprinted and pulled Kramer up, but the champion was unable to take the lead, though he qualified for the final by getting second place. Fenn, Kramer's team mate, was shut out of the final.

Kramer and Fenn won the five-mile team pursuit race, in which four teams started. After riding five laps Fenn and Kramer passed Dorlon and Cadwell, but it took four and a half miles before they caught Jacobson and Bardgett. The Bedell brothers were not passed, but as Kramer and Fenn had gained about 200 yards at the finish of the five miles, they were declared the winners.

Burton Downing, after winning the half-mile open amateur event, was disqualified by the referee for foul riding. Lee claimed that Downing ran into him on the last turn, and the referee allowed the protest. Carl Lemberg, who finished second, was awarded first prize. H. E. Chappey won the mile handicap from the eighty-yard mark. Summary:

Half-mile Novice.—Won by W. Charlton; Brooklyn; H. M. Kuehr, New York, second; Louis Lipp, Newark, third. Time—1:08 3-5.

Noted Athletes for Tailtin Games.

At Celtic Park to-day the 251st celebration of the Tailtin Games, Ireland's ancient athletic festival, will be held under the auspices of the Greater New York Irish Athletic Association. In the athletic events, which will begin at 2 P. M., will be seen many of the prominent athletes of the East. Among the sprinters will be Lawson Robertson, National champion; Myer Prinstein, metropolitan champion; F. Castleman of Colgate University, National hurdle champion; W. R. Knakal, formerly of Columbia University, 220-yard junior champion; H. Christoffers, St. George A. C.; George E. Hall and M. J. Crogan, Greater New York Irish A. A.

The distance events, the three-fourth-mile run and the two-mile A. A. U. championship steeplechase, have attracted entries from John J. Daly, the Irish cross-country champion; John Joyce, American champion; George Bonhag, two-mile indoor champion; Harvey Cohn, one-mile metropolitan champion, and Charles Bacon, one-half mile metropolitan champion. The steeplechase was expected to be the race of the day, and will probably be a close contest between Daly, the Irish champion, Joyce and Bonhag of the Greater New York Irish A. A., and Sheppard, the crack distance runner of Brown University Preparatory School, Philadelphia. The stars in the weight events will be John Flanagan, holder of the world's records for the 16-pound weight and 16-pound hammer; Martin Sheridan, who made a new world's record of 132 feet for the discus throw at St. Louis, and S. P. Gillies, New West Side A. C., junior champion hammer thrower. After the athletic events a game of Gaelic football, the first of a series for the trophy offered by ex-Sheriff Dunn, will be played between the County Roscommon and Kilkenny teams.

Pastime Athletic Club's Games.

Quite a number of entries have already been received for the twenty-seventh annual games of the Pastime Athletic Club, which will be held on Sunday, Sept. 18, at Pastime Oval, Seventieth Street and the East River. The programme includes a 100-yard run, 300-yard run, 1,000-yard run, one-mile-and-a-half-run, putting the 12-pound shot, all handicap; 600-yard run, for novices, and all-around weight-throwing competition, consisting of putting the 16-pound shot, throwing the 16-pound hammer, throwing the discus, and throwing the 56-pound weight for distance. A game of pushball will also be played between two local clubs. The prizes will be given in each of the athletic events, the first being a solid gold die medal, the second solid gold sleeve links, and the third a solid gold scarfpin. Entries will be received up to Sept. 12 by John J. McHugh, 412 East Fiftieth Street, and J. E. Sullivan, 15 Warren Street.

Field Day for Scots at Maspeth.

The forty-eighth annual Scottish games of the New York Caledonian Club, which will be held to-day at Washington Park, Maspeth, are expected to develop into the best display of Scottish athletics held in this country for many years. There will be twenty-six events contested, after which members of the club will give an exhibition of football as it is played in Scotland. At 9:30 o'clock this morning the members of the Caledonian Club, in full Highland costume and headed by the bicycle section of the organization in uniform, will parade from the clubhouse to Thirty-fourth Street Ferry, and at Washington Park the New York Scottish Highlanders, under the command of Capt. James H. Cockburn, will give an exhibition drill.

Livingston Wins Cricket Championship.

With but one more game to be played in the championship series of the Metropolitan League, the question of supremacy is already decided, for the remaining contest, between Manhattan and Paterson, cannot affect the position of the leaders. Livingston, with a record of but one defeat, is the champion club of the year, and it is a notable fact that its players lead the individual averages both in batting and bowling.

Previous league records have suffered at the hands of the Livingstons, for C. P. Hurditch, with an aggregate of 565 runs, easily surpassed F. J. Prendergast's record of 468 in 1903, and F. F. Kelly's 61 wickets beat M. R. Cobb's record of 1893 by one wicket.

STAR YOUNGSTERS AILING

Artful, Tanya, and Sysonby Doubtful for Great Eastern Handicap.

BIG STAKES FOR THE WEEK

The $25,000 Annual Champion Will Depend on the Three-Year-Olds for Its Chief Interest.

The strain of racing and training that early in the season thinned the ranks of the handicap stars and shelved for a part of the time the best of the three-year-olds, has reached the two-year-olds now, and with Tanya, Artful, and Sysonby on the doubtful list, owners of the lesser lights engaged in the Great Eastern Handicap, oldest and most famous of the big handicaps for two-year-olds, are taking a new interest in the possibilities of that event. The weights for the twenty-second running of the Great Eastern, six furlongs down the Futurity course, are due Wednesday morning, the race to be run Saturday, and there is not the least doubt that the three horses named, with the addition of Tradition, will figure at the head of the list, but of the quartet Tradition is the only one that horsemen count on now as a sure starter.

Sysonby passed his regular workdays after the Futurity so often that it was no surprise to trainers when his name was omitted from the roster of starters for the Flatbush Stakes Saturday, and though there is nothing seriously wrong with the Keene colt, it is improbable that he can be got to the post at his best for the Great Eastern after the let-up he has had. Tanya worked for the Flatbush between races two days before the event was run, went to her stable, and then failed to run, the Duryea establishment having to depend on the green filly Sandria, which pulled up slightly lame after the contest. Whether there is anything amiss with Tanya has not yet developed, though she has had a long season and a hard one, in that she has had to carry high weights since her early Spring victories.

Artful struck herself in her winning race for the Great Filly Stakes, and is in temporary retirement, though it is thought that with a little rest she will be perfectly restored. The three horses make an important part of the Great Eastern entries, and it will be hard on their stables if they are unable to run for the race, especially so in the case of Artful and Sysonby, both of which are two-year-olds that have been campaigned easily, neither ever having had a hard race until the Futurity was run. Tradition, on the other hand, came out of her victory for the Flatbush in good condition, and while it is certain that the race will put her up close to the top weight, if not at the top, she is counted on as a starter, and owners of the other horses already are figuring that she is the one they must beat.

The stress of an extraordinary year of hard-fought battles in all the great races for the older division has had its effect on the big list of horses eligible for the twenty-five-thousand-dollar Annual Champion Stakes, at two miles and a quarter, which also will run on Saturday, the closing day of the Sheepshead Bay meeting, and from all promise the contest, aside from its great value, will depend on the three-year-olds for its interest. Of the older horses eligible, only Major Daingerfield and Africander—seem to have any possible chance. If only the best of the three-year-olds go to the post, however, a splendid contest may be given, for Ort Wells, holder of the mile-and-a-quarter record; Ort Wells, the largest winner of his age for the season; Stalwart, winner of the sensational race for the Century Stakes on Saturday, and Held and Bryn Mawr all are engaged, and will meet at even weights, all having earned the full penalty provided by the conditions of the race, which will run in at 115 pounds each. The Annual Champion will be the first race over an old-fashioned cup course this season, but will be followed a week later by the race for the Brighton Cup, of $11,000, also at two miles and a quarter.

With the big stakes of the present week at Sheepshead Bay and the more valuable events at Brighton Beach the week following, there is a fair chance that there may be a shift in the positions of the leading winning stables of the year. James R. Keene's establishment still is first on the list, but the addition of the Futurity to the F. R. Duryea winnings put the latter establishment close up. E. R. Thomas and John A. Drake are the next largest winners of the year in the East, but there is hardly a chance that either of them can win stakes enough in what is left of the turf year to equal the Keene and Duryea winnings.

Vanderbilt Horse Wins in France.

PARIS, Sept. 4.—W. K. Vanderbilt's Marigold won the Prix de Versailles (distance 10½ furlongs) at Longchamps to-day.

Ten Eyck, Veteran Sculler, Wins.

Special to The New York Times.

ALEXANDRIA BAY, N. Y., Sept. 4.—The water carnival at Alexandria Bay was closed last night with a fine display of fireworks. The event which aroused the most interest among many people attending the carnival was the single scull race in the afternoon between James A. Ten Eyck, coach of the Syracuse University crew; the Henley brothers, B. T. and W. K., of Syracuse, and Fred Warner of Oneida Lake. At the crack of the pistol all four oarsmen started with a fast stroke. The superior oarsmanship of Ten Eyck was manifest, and he quickly forged ahead of his rivals and held the lead to the finish. The Henleys had an exciting race for second place, but W. K. finally crossed the line about two lengths ahead. Warner dropped behind, and finished many lengths behind the shell of Ben Henley.

H. T. Noyes of this city has purchased from T. M. R. Melkleham the sloop yacht Sibyl, forty-two feet over all, through Stanley M. Seaman of New York. Mr. Seaman has also chartered the sloops Sasqua to G. F. Schmidt of this city and the Carrie to Dr. Bugbee of St. Luke's Hospital.

WESTERN PACER, WON.

Free Advice Beat Johnny Agan in Speedway Brushes.

Pacers furnished excellent sport on the upper stretch of the Harlem River Speedway yesterday morning, the attractive event being two heats between the Western horse Free Advice, 2:10¼, driven by his owner, James Murphy of Chicago, and the bay pacer Johnny Agan, 2:05¼, owned and driven by Charles Welland. Many attempts had been made this season to start the pair together, but all failed until yesterday, when Mr. Welland agreed to step his pacer two heats, although he announced that Johnny Agan was not in shape for fast work. Free Advice, however, was keyed up to pace a half mile under his mark, and when he got the word to start, went to the front and gained a lead of an open length, which he held to the first quarter post. Entering the stretch Johnny Agan showed a remarkable burst of speed, and was fast overhauling Free Advice when the line was crossed, the latter winning by a length. In the second heat Johnny Agan made a much better showing and raced head-and-head with his opponent to the quarter pole. From then on it was nip and tuck, but in the last stride Free Advice was a winner by a head.

Nathan Straus made his first appearance on the road this Fall behind his spotted trotter Malacca, 2:18¾, and lost and won a brush in company with Isaac Fleming's new trotter, Antonio Junior.

Maud Sherman, a new candidate for pacing honors, driven by Elmer Stevens, was outfooted by Johnny Agan and Better Luck, and the old trotting favorite, Freeland, 2:17¾, driven by David Goodman, stepped home in front of Nightawk, 2:22¾, driven by L. W. Boynton. David B., 2:06¾, the old Grand Circuit trotter, was stopped a lively heat by his owner, J. W. Cornish, in company with the pacing team, Rob Roy and Isaac Davenport.

SIR THOMAS HOPEFUL.

Urging Designer Watson to Plan Another Cup Challenger.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—In an interview tonight, Sir Thomas Lipton appeared still to entertain some hope of inducing George L. Watson to change his mind and design a new challenger for the America's Cup, which the designer yesterday decided not to do, giving ill-health as the reason.

Sir Thomas said that difficulty had arisen owing to the fact that Mr. Watson was unable to undertake the journey to the United States. He said he told the designer that he would be satisfied with any deputy he would nominate to accompany the boat, but Mr. Watson said he would never design a boat unless he should be able to accompany it himself.

GOOD AUTO SPORT PROMISED.

Interesting Card Arranged for Circuit Meet at Empire City Track.

Announcement of the programme for the regular circuit automobile meet at the Empire City track on Sept. 24 shows that besides the special match races to be arranged there will be five regular events. One will be at five miles for the "Old Glory" Cup, open to American touring cars with regular equipment and carrying four people, minimum weight for men, 150 pounds, and for women, 125 pounds. The operator is required to crank the machine, and then get in the car and cover the distance.

For the International Cup there will be a ten-mile race among the winners of the trial heats. The heats will be at five miles, one race for each nationality. There will be a separate heat for American cars, for French cars, for Italian cars, for German cars, and for English cars. The winners will meet in the grand final. The third race will be ten miles for the Knickerbocker Cup, for cars weighing not over 2,000 pounds to 1,432 pounds. The Empire Handicap at five miles will be renewed. This race is open to all machines.

For the small cars there will be the Yonkers Cup for a five-mile race, open to cars costing $1,000 or less, the machines to go with their regular equipment. Cups will be given for second driver to finish in each of the races. Entries will close on Sept. 19 with Alfred Reeves, Secretary, 390 Washington Street.

Auto Meet for Narragansett Park.

The Rhode Island Automobile Club proposes to make its meet at Narragansett Park, Providence, on next Saturday, one of the most interesting and successful ever held in New England. According to the number of entries thus far received from all parts of the country the management feels assured that there will be an unusually large field of starters. Earl Kiser will drive the Winton Bullet against the Peerless car at the meet, and the five and ten-mile race promises to bring together at least four of the fastest automobiles in America. George C. Cannon and Louis Ross will contest for the honors in the steam class. Efforts are being made to arrange races between the cars of E. M. Shanley, Jr., E. R. Thomas, Harry Harkness, and W. G. Brokaw.

Power Boat Race for Challenge Cup.

The committee in charge of the race to be held at the Columbia Yacht Club for the American Power Boat Association's Challenge Cup, which has been challenged for by the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, has completed the preliminary arrangements. The committee is composed of F. A. Hill of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, E. J. Stone, representing the Columbia Yacht Club, and H. De B. Parsons of the American Yacht Club. The indications are that there will be excellent time made. Mr. Loxier is looking after the alterations to the Shooting Star, and when seen in the water again there is promise of considerably more speed.

The Columbia Yacht Club has received a challenge from the Atlantic Yacht Club, entering a new boat, which is being constructed at Boston. But little has been made public regarding this boat, but the builders promise fast time. While Nat Herreshoff has not officially entered his boat, Swift Sure, it is thought that he will do so from the Rhode Island Yacht Club. The last day for entering boats will be Sept. 12.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—The Times Financial Supplement to-morrow will say:

"The week has given further justification for the hope that a fairly general spell of active business may be expected.

"The terrain in the wheat market has again appreciably relaxed; shipping seems to find better employment; the cotton trade looks confidently to more adequate supplies; other textile trades are brisker; coal and iron point to some revival, and, above all, the money market promises fairly easy conditions for the near future.

"The grain trade has been less excited. The average Gazette price of English wheat is now practically the same as a year ago. Opinions as to the American crop results are divergent, as during the previous two or three weeks, but evidence is accumulating that much of the recent crop scare was of a highly artificial character.

"Whatever the outcome of the crops, it would appear that for some little time to come there will be ample supplies to handle, as there are now over 3,000,000 quarters of breadstuffs afloat to the United Kingdom and the Continent against only about 2,000,000 at the same time last year and the year before. Our imports during the past crop year reached more than 27,810,000 quarters, the largest quantity ever received in this country. It is estimated that the United Kingdom will need an average weekly supply of wheat and flour during the crop year just started of about 510,000 quarters.

"In cotton trade has been rather hampered by the uncertainty of the American crop, and many wild statements about the ravages of insects, especially in Texas. Toward the close of the week, however, the crop scare was set at rest by the official monthly crop reports from the Washington authorities. It will be well, however, not to build on a sensational fall in values of raw material for some time to come.

"The woolen and worsted trade continues to give signs of encouragement. There is nothing moving in raw material pending the auction at Antwerp and in London, which will be opened in a few weeks, but there is almost a consensus of opinion that prices will be very strong and probably again higher, in view of the small supplies available.

"The iron and steel trades on the whole are better, although there are some important exceptions. Barrow, for example, complains of great depression, especially in rails, which suffer from German and Belgian competition, and even at £4 a ton cannot be moved."

BALTIMORE FIRE STILL BURNS.

After Seven Months Embers, Smouldering, Break Into Flames.

The fire of Feb. 7 has not yet been extinguished. To be sure it isn't threatening the life of any one now, and it isn't menacing property in any serious sense, but, curiously enough, there are at least three places in the neighborhood of Union Dock and Pratt Street where the blaze has smoldered continuously since that memorable conflagration in which so much of business Baltimore was laid in ashes.

In one place, the ruins of the establishment of N. Frank & Sons, junk dealers, opposite to the lumber yard of Mr. William G. Michael, 518 Union Dock, fire has been smoldering in smoke bags. Wednesday some workmen employed by the Baltimore Sand Contracting Company, under Mr. Albert Laun, foreman, took a mass of bricks which have covered the bags away, and the rubbish immediately burst into flame, which rose to the height of four or five feet. Mr. Michael's woodmill is directly opposite, and his engineer, fearing that the blaze might spread to the frame building and thence to the lumber yard, got the workmen to extinguish the fire by piling bricks on it.

In another place, where a house formerly occupied by J. Bolgiano & Sons, seed merchants, stood, at Pratt Street, near McElderry's wharf, some seeds have been smoldering since the fire and when the same laborers uncovered these seeds several days ago the bricks were so hot that the men were forced to abandon work here for a time.

Again, at the corner of Pratt Street and McElderry's wharf, formerly occupied by John R. Hudgins, wholesale feed merchants, a thin cloud of smoke was curling from a pile of bricks. Thursday afternoon, Sept. 1, Sergt. Lancaster of the Central District told a reporter for The Sun that three months ago it had been necessary to call out the Fire Department to extinguish the flames which arose from these ruins. Sergt. Lancaster has been on duty in the neighborhood since the fire, and he says that this place has never ceased to smoke.

Union Dock, which is just west of Falls Avenue, was the scene of the final struggle of the fire, and thousands of dollars worth of property was laid in ashes there. For several days and nights it and the whole water front presented a lurid picture at night as the flames licked upward undisturbed in a place where no further damage could be done, sometimes the sky being over heaps of bricks and lumber which rose in pyramidlike shape. This was continued for a month or more. Lately buildings have been erected in the district. The ground has been cleared and the signs of the calamity are rapidly disappearing.

Union Dock, however, is lined on both sides with lumber yards, where piles of dried lumber lay at the mercy of flames, and one wonders that the fires are permitted to remain in such close proximity. In the three cases mentioned the fires have been surrounded by piles of bricks, which would be depended upon to prevent their spread, and therefore little attention has been paid to them.—Baltimore Sun.

Those periodical fires in the Louisiana and Texas oil fields are worthy of investigation. They seem to happen with regularity just when an oversupply of petroleum might be inconvenient elsewhere.—Dayton (Ohio) Journal.

GRAIN RECEIPTS DECREASE.

Falling Off In Live Stock Arriving at Interior Markets.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—Statistical internal commerce returns received by the Department of Commerce and Labor and issued by the Bureau of Statistics show at twelve primary grain markets 30,844,305 bushels of grain reported as arriving in July, against 42,655,464 bushels in July, 1903, being a decrease of 27.7 per cent. For seven months the difference was proportionately much less, the higher prices of the closing months of the crop year having helped more nearly to balance the receipts of this year with those of 1903. To July 31, 1904, receipts of grain aggregated 299,308,088 bushels, and 326,001,825 bushels in 1903, or a decrease of 8.2 per cent.

Live stock receipts at five interior markets during July show the effects of the packing house strike in the reduction from 2,620,046 head in July, 1903, to 1,554,451 head in July, 1904. Carload receipts at Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, and St. Joseph fell off from 52,752 cars in July, 1903, to 30,741 cars in 1904. For seven months ended with July, the total receipts of stock at five markets were 18,210,346 head, compared with 17,742,707 head in 1903, and 17,232,114 head in 1902. Consumption of hogs alone at four markets during the first six months of the year averaged 1,048,250 head per month, compared with 469,322 head in July, being a decrease of 55.2 per cent.

Trunk line movements of flour, grain, and provisions for thirty weeks ended with July 30 have all been larger in volume than the corresponding movements in 1902 and 1903. Shipments of flour from Chicago and Chicago points amounted to 4,621,893 barrels this year, compared with 2,663,903 barrels last year and 3,063,423 barrels in the preceding year. Grain shipments increased to 58,273,000 bushels, in contrast with 53,630,000 bushels in 1903 and 41,664,000 bushels in 1902. Provision shipments also show a gain, with 770,238 tons to the same date this year, 723,803 tons last year, and 740,392 tons in 1902.

Grain receipts at the Atlantic seaboard during July were larger than those of either May or June, amounting to 12,813,753 bushels. In July, 1903, the corresponding total was 18,492,370 bushels. Among these five ports of Portland, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, Boston alone shows an increase in receipts for July this year over those of July, 1903. For seven months, however, none of the ports show a record for this year equal to that of the preceding year, the totals being 94,082,609 bushels to July 31, 1904, and 151,513,374 bushels in 1903.

SNAKES IN THE HIGHLAND.

Only Two Poisonous Ones There or in This Section.

The presence of snakes in the region of the Highlands of the Hudson is not a discovery, but it is not always that intelligent accounts of them can be had from scientific observers. During July and August Mr. Allen S. Williams, a naturalist of New York City, who has been studying serpents and their habits for many years, and who has lectured to thousands of people, using live specimens of snakes for illustration and demonstration, and who has been engaged by the New York City Department of Education to lecture in its system of Free Lectures for the People during the coming Winter, has been in camp, accompanied by his wife and son, in the Clove between Storm King and Crow's Nest. The Clove has long had a local reputation as being a haunt of copperhead snakes, or as they are commonly called locally, "pilots."

To a representative of the Cornwall Local, Mr. Williams said: "Last Spring I noticed in THE NEW YORK TIMES communications from several correspondents discussing the presence of poisonous snakes in the Highlands region. Although it was too early in the season to look for specimens, I spent a week in the vicinity of Cornwall examining the ground, especially in the vicinity of Storm King, and the indications were strong that the ground was a habitat of the copperhead snake. In the warm Summer months I had ocular evidence that this silent and deadly serpent was plentiful in the talus or debris at the foot of the mountain. I also gathered a few facts and some credible information from residents who were quite willing to tell what they knew or believed they knew about snakes.

"Mr. A. A. Slater of the Hudson House, at Cornwall Landing, told me about a tramp who was bitten by a 'pilot' in the Clove, and he and others told me about a hermit wood chopper of the mountains, Joseph Hüise, who was bitten by a rattlesnake, and whose case is famous in the annals of the snake lore of Cornwall.

"Being always glad to diffuse useful information, I will say that there are only two kinds of poisonous snakes now to be found on this continent north of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi. These are the banded rattlesnake, Crotalus horidus, and the copperhead, Agkistrodon contortrix. Why they are locally termed 'pilots' I do not know. The snake which is known to naturalists as a pilot—although they take no account of common names—is the mountain blacksnake or Coluber obsoletus, which is larger than and quite different from the common blacksnake or blue racer, the Bascanium constrictor. Several specimens of copperheads have been killed in the Clove this Summer. It might disturb some families to find two snakes in their tent in the morning, but mine is used to it.

"An interesting development was the killing in the Clove by C. H. Edwards of a robust specimen of the banded rattlesnake. This was a surprise, as I believed that none remained on the Eastern slope of these hills, although to the westward, in the near vicinity of Cornwall, the rattler has by no means yielded to civilization. Once seen, the poisonous snake should not be forgotten and should be easily identified and distinguished from the harmless kinds. The rattler and copperhead are both of the Crotalus family, and both are short, stumpy, and have broad, triangular heads and very small necks. The colubrine or harmless snakes are long, slender, graceful, and swift. The poisonous cannot run fast and are easily caught or killed.

"The subject of the treatment of the bites of poisonous snakes is vast and most interesting. Great strides have been made in the discovery and preparation of serums in recent years, but the trouble is they are not yet generally known or available. The best emergency treatment for the bite of a poisonous snake is to get one or several ligatures between the wound and the heart immediately, open up the wound, and squeeze or suck the venom out. Whisky is not an antidote to snake poison, but as the venom depresses the heart and the nerve action, a stimulant is needed when this effect becomes evident, and although strychnia is best—a twentieth of a grain—it should be administered by a physician, and whisky or brandy may be given, but only to the extent of a stimulant. Making the victim drunk or filling him with liquor is merely an exhibition of the ignorance which prevails about snakes and their bites. Rattlers and copperheads should be killed. As for every other kind of snakes in the great region I have mentioned, they cannot hurt any one and to kill them is needless cruelty. They are a great benefit to the farmer, but how they are is another story."—Cornwall Local.

Tree Planting on Texas Plains.

The Fort Worth and Denver Railroad is doing a good many good things for the Panhandle country. Not the least promising of these is its effort to promote the growth of forest trees upon the plains. The prospective benefits are several. The trees will furnish firewood and fence posts, and it is believed they will promote a more even distribution of rainfall, lower the temperature of the sometime hot winds, and protect the crops from such winds. More than 15,000 trees were planted in 1903, very nearly all of them being of the black locust species. The benefits are not altogether prospective. One of the tree planters, A. Prinsterewald of Mobeetie, reports that for three years past he has been getting fence posts from seedlings planted seven years ago; that during this time he has got sufficient posts to keep his fences in repair and to build fourteen miles of new fence. It looks very much like this tree-planting propaganda would result in a beneficial revolution in the Panhandle country, greatly increasing its agricultural possibilities.—Galveston (Texas) News.

The Weekly Resume Affords Some Cheerful Records.

Almost a Unanimous Rise In Both Stocks and Bonds, with a Large Volume and Good Tone.

Last week's business was among the best of the year judged by its volume and the cheerful tone accompanying a very general rise. Thirty-six stocks moved a point or more, and only two declined. Ninety-five stocks moved a point or more and only fifteen fell. The volume of the bond business ($27,790,000) was exceeded in the third week of January, but otherwise is the largest for years. The inference of large investment business is scarcely warranted, however, since the trading was dominated so largely by the highly speculative issues. Of Consolidated Tobacco 4s 10,627 were sold, or nearly a third of the business in all bonds. Their rise was 5%, and although it was not fully explained good judges asserted there was a meritorious basis for the movement. Steel 5s ranked next in activity, 3,813 being sold at an advance of 1%, despite the shading of prices and disputes among the trade pools. Wabash Bs rose 3¾ upon sales of 2,006, and the Rock Island issues together rose two to three points upon sales of 1,659 bonds. Union Pacific convertibles were active, but lost a fraction.

A contrast with the bond market was afforded by the stock dealings, which included many shares of the strictly investment class which are seldom dealt in, and almost never for speculative purposes. The temper of the market, however, is best deduced as usual from the dozen active properties, which together contributed 1,990,933 shares of the total 3,104,940. This is about double last year's dispirited business, but falls below 1902. Among the dozen there was but one decline, Metropolitan's—and it must be admitted to be justified by a report which shows a large and increasing deficit upon the eve of new and severe competition for a volume of business which will not be increased by an increase in the number of companies to divide it. Reading was both the most active and strongest stock, rising 5 points, contrary to trade indications, and upon an accumulative movement which attracted many buyers who will be easy sellers. Steel preferred was second in both activity and strength, rising 2%, and also contrary to trade indications, but with a lively sense of benefits to come when price cutting and pool quarreling shall be over. Other changes were all advances, but so moderate as to attract little attention. Indeed, a rise of one-eighth in Southern Pacific might indicate something like suspended animation accompanying an approximate level of value and price pending developments.

A MAN'S WILL.

Should He, Though Very Wealthy, Be Permitted to Make It as He Wills?

The disposition made by will within a week of two great fortunes, one the largest in Philadelphia, and the other usually held to be one of the ten largest in the city, will inevitably raise discussion as to the wide freedom allowed by statute and common law to a testator.

The power to draw a will is neither a constitutional nor a natural right. It is exclusively the product of law. No country leaves it more free than the United States. In all European countries a will under which a man leaves all his property to one descendant is prohibited by law. Under the Code Napoleon, and this is the general rule of European law, the utmost share of his property over which a man has complete testamentary control is one-half. He can alienate that. The rest he must leave to his children, and he must divide it among them under a ratio imposed by law, from which he can vary only under narrow limits.

Louisiana has preserved this limitation. A will leaving all an estate to one descendant would not stand under the statutes of that State. Some other States in the Union impose similar limitations, but most leave a man free to do as he will with his own at death. In this State the only limitation imposed is that the wife's dower right, which at common law attaches only to real estate, now attaches also to personal property, so that any wife can, if she choose, take one-third of the estate if less be left to her by the will, or one-half if there is no child, her ownership of that much of the personal property being absolute and of the realty for life.

In England theoretically and legally a man's control over his property is as complete as it is in American States, recent statutes having abolished the special privileges in regard to realty enjoyed by the eldest son, but custom in these matters is stronger than law. A tradition in existence for centuries establishes the habit in England, a habit so strong that it has more than the force of a statute, that the bulk of a large property shall be entailed to the eldest son. Where the eldest son comes of age during his father's lifetime, it is nearly always the case in large properties that a settlement is made, which could be made just as well here as far as the law is concerned, by which the son accepts a life interest in all he inherits with the expectation that a deed of settlement with his eldest son will in due time convey the property in the same line of descent and division, the eldest son receiving nearly all and the others a mere pittance. It is in England equally rare, (outside of the novel,) that an eldest son is disinherited or that an estate is divided among a number of children equally.

The courts in this country, powerfully influenced by a public opinion, which prefers a tolerably equal division of property between the children and wife, (if one survives,) have generally regarded with a friendly eye attempts to break wills in which some one descendant or kin received a disproportionate share. All the various decisions and the large amount of judge-made law under which various wills of this character have been broken really represent a public feeling in behalf of a general division of any property left by will, as strong in this country as is the sentiment in England in favor of keeping the property together.

The law of most of our States not only leaves a testator without restrictions, but taxation is relatively light as compared with the English practice in levying duties upon estates which pass through probate. The community here has wisely felt that it was more just and more equitable to tax property while a man was living and not to levy an impost too onerous on its devolution. This policy has been concomitant with and in a sense rewarded by the very liberal public bequests made by those possessing large fortunes in this country.

Most large American fortunes are marked by great gifts of this order. Should such gifts disappear, should will after will leaving a great fortune pass without any recognition of just public claims, a movement will undoubtedly arise in this country, as it did in England, for heavier inheritance taxes. In England both the estates whose wills have just been announced in this city would have paid an estate duty of 8 per cent. on all property left, whether inherited by the next of kin, by collateral heirs, or devised. Every estate over $5,000,000 in Great Britain passing by death has for ten years past paid this heavy tax, and the personalty is liable for 3 per cent a year from the date of death until this rate is paid. This levy, one-twelfth of the total value, is applied to every object, to plotures, and jewelry, as well as to stocks, bonds, and realty.—Philadelphia Press.

Chicago Geologists Would Bore a Big Hole in the Earth.

Our distinguished geologists of the University of Chicago, Prof. Chamberlain and Prof. Salisbury, have inspired the great inventor Charles Algernon Parsons to urge a project, which, under the auspices of a less able man, would seem to be the scheme of a visionary or crank.

Mr. Parsons's ability in the direction of steam navigation and the application of electricity to practical uses has long been acknowledged, and he has just been honored by the British Association for the Advancement of Science with the gift of a special gold medal in recognition of his notable services.

In his recent address before the association Mr. Parsons stated his belief in the geological theories of the Chicago professors regarding the formation of the earth. These scientists reject the theory so long in vogue that the earth was originally a gaseous cloud which slowly condensed, forming a solid external crust, leaving a molten mass below the surface. They are convinced that the earth was formed by the slow accretion of cold meteoric fragments in space.

Mr. Parsons is not satisfied with theory, however plausible. He wishes to put it to the test. He wishes to know what is under the outside crust. He wants to dig down twelve miles to see what could be found. The bore would be rather expensive, costing some $25,000,000, but who knows what precious treasures might come to light, what germs never known before, what new formations, what possible elixirs, what new form of contribution to human happiness?

All that is wanted to carry out Mr. Parsons's project is the cash, and even that might be forthcoming if Rockefeller, Carnegie, or Schwab were disposed to furnish the means. If Governments were inclined to unite in scientific enterprises as they are disposed to combat each other in war the funds could be readily secured and the enterprise carried out.

Science is justly grudging the money that goes to waste in war while unnumbered possibilities for good are awaiting development. As soon as civilized beings are really civilized there may be a prospect of getting the things worth having.—Chicago Chronicle.

THE GREAT MARKET FOR Guaranteed Mortgages

This company organized and established the business and during the past twelve years has furnished $140,000,000 of guaranteed mortgages to all classes of investors without the loss of a dollar to any one of them.

It has grown stronger with every additional risk taken and steadily increased its surplus from accumulated earnings, the only way in which an insurance company can keep strong.

It recognizes the fact that wise provisions in a policy protect the insured and that too sweeping contracts of guarantee are the worst a policy holder can have, in his own interest. He does not wish the company insuring him embarrassed by reckless promises to some one else, but wishes it to be safe and sound when he needs to have it respond to him.

MARBLE UNIONS JOIN AGITATION FOR PEACE

To Discuss Terms at Conference with Employers.

ALLIANCE MAY SURRENDER

Believed Now That Trades Organization May Waive Demand for Recognition in the Settlement.

The unions in the marble industry are the latest to start an agitation for the settlement of the building trades' tie-up. Some of the marble workers are on strike while others are at work, and there is general confusion in the situation.

In order to bring about some kind of an understanding a meeting of representatives of the unions and the employing marble men will be held to-morrow night. According to the delegates of the marble workers, if the trouble is not settled at that time or some means of settlement decided on, a general war will be declared against the employers.

In the meantime the talk of a settlement continues. It was said yesterday that as the Building Trades Employers' Association is willing to deal with individual unions in the Building Trades Alliance without recognizing the Alliance, the latter, in order to settle the trouble and head off a threatened revolt among its members who want to go back to work, may not ask for formal recognition. In former years, when the old Board of Building Trades was in power, trade associations of employers made agreements with unions every year without any reference to the board.

There is a general impression that some definite steps toward a settlement must be set on foot this week as there are complaints on both sides that the trouble has lasted long enough. Though there is a clause in contracts which protects the contractors in case of strikes, there is no lockout clause, and unless there is an understanding between the owners and the employers that the latter will not be held responsible for the time lost the employer are liable for damages if the owners choo to take the matter to the courts.

Regarding the peace plan of President Nason of the Alliance, who said yesterday that it would be taken up in earnest after to-day, and that a conference will likely be called this week to try to put it into effect.

MURDER SUSPECT IN TERROR.

Begged Police on his Knees in Mulberry Bend Park to Let Him Go.

Dominick Vigorito, a saloon keeper at the corner of Baxter and Bayard Streets, was arrested last night by Detectives Caddell and Gallagher of the Elizabeth Street Station, and locked up on a charge of murder. Early in the morning Guglilmo Cummono, a scissors grinder, of 82 Mulberry Street, was beaten and thrown out of the saloon, and died later in the day at the Hudson Street Hospital. His head was so badly battered that his skull was fractured, and he did not come to his senses again. One arrest was made, and the man, Michael Barchilons, held for examination in the Centre Street Court.

The detectives heard later that the saloon keeper himself had beaten the scissors grinder with a "black jack," and thrown him into the street, where he again struck him. On his bended knees Vigorito, in Mulberry Bend Park, after his arrest last night, implored the detectives to let him go. He was very nervous in the police station, and asked whether he would have to confront a Judge in court.

WANTS ENGLISH ELLIS ISLAND.

Sir Howard Vincent Thinks His Country Should Copy American System.

Col. Sir C. E. Howard Vincent, one of the members of Parliament who arrived here on Saturday en route to the Congress of the International Parliamentary Union at St. Louis, spent yesterday in an inspection of Ellis Island, for the purpose of obtaining ideas which he will attempt to have incorporated in a revised immigration system which he is planning for England. Sir Howard Vincent introduced a bill in Parliament some time ago for the regulation of immigration, but it never became a law. In it he provided for the exclusion of all undesirable immigrants, but he failed to state what were undesirable.

There were several thousand immigrants on hand when he reached Ellis Island, representing almost every race and creed in the world. He went from cellar to garret, and saw every branch of the system at work. He was particularly interested in the detained immigrants, and closely questioned the guides concerning the reasons for the detention of each one.

"This is the most wonderful system I have ever seen working," he said. "It is simply wonderful. I do not see how it is that you can handle that class of people and still keep the place so very clean. I think that an exact copy of your system is the thing that England wants.

"We feel the need of strict immigration rules as we have never felt it before. For our own protection we must frame some laws that will protect us from the ravages of the people who are flocking to us from Russia. Then, too, we are getting undesirable people from the South of Europe. Many of the same class come to this country, but you deport them. We have not a chance to do that. England has no room for them, and we must do something to keep them out."

THREE INJURED BY TROLLEYS.

Succession of Afternoon Accidents in Williamsburg—All Sent to Hospitals.

Two men and a woman were painfully injured yesterday afternoon in Williamsburg by trolley cars. They were George Fuhrer, twenty-eight years old, of 198 Hamburg Avenue; Patrick Tobin, thirty-one years old, of 39 Kent Avenue, and Mrs. Isabelle Lewis, forty-one years old, of 630 Berry Street. Fuhrer was driving along Johnson Avenue with a light runabout, and when near Humboldt Street the vehicle was struck by a trolley car of the Hamburg Avenue line going to Canarsie. Fuhrer was thrown to the street and rendered unconscious, while the horse was stopped by a passerby. A call was sent to St. Catharine's Hospital for an ambulance. Ambulance Surgeon Richmond found that Fuhrer was suffering from internal injuries and removed him to the hospital.

Patrick Tobin was crossing the street at Hewes Street and Kent Avenue. He was about to board the Greenpoint Avenue car when the fender struck him and he was thrown to the street. His right leg was broken and he was taken to the Eastern District Hospital.

Mrs. Isabelle Lewis, while stepping from a Grand Street and Newtown car at Kent Avenue and South Fifth Street, was thrown violently to the street, receiving probably internal injuries. She was removed to the Eastern District Hospital.

TWO "TRUSTIES" ESCAPE.

One Caught After Long Swim—Other Eludes the Police.

John Saunders and a man named Eisenmuller, "trusty" prisoners in the House of Refuge on Randall's Island, eluded the keepers yesterday morning long enough to jump into the water and get out of reach before their absence was discovered. Then they swam three-quarters of a mile across the Bronx Kills, landing at One Hundred and Thirty-second Street.

Policeman Schuing was attracted by a crowd chasing the two men, still dripping from their swim, at Willis Avenue and One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Street. He joined the pursuit, and at last drove Saunders to bay in a hallway. Eisenmuller was too fleet-footed, although more incumbered with clothing than his companion, and got away from the policeman and crowd.

The house where Saunders had taken refuge was thoroughly searched from top to bottom, and the nearly naked trusty was at last discovered, smeared with coal dust, in a coal bin in the cellar. An old pair of trousers and an old shirt were found for him by one of the tenants in the house, and, bareheaded, barefooted, wet, and downcast at the failure of his escape, he was taken to the Morrisania Court. There Magistrate Hogan turned him over to Thomas H. Fitzgerald, one of the keepers of the House of Refuge, who appeared to claim the youth.

The police are now looking for Eisenmuller.

LITTLE TRAVELER MISSING.

Police Asked to Find Port Jervis Girl in This City.

Police Headquarters was asked to send out a general alarm yesterday for Alice Castelaine, eight years old. The girl, it is said, started for this city from her home in Port Jervis on Saturday afternoon, and has not been seen by her relatives. Susie M. Castelaine, an elder sister, lives at 55 West Twelfth Street, and the child was to visit her. Early yesterday morning two women appeared at the Twelfth Street house with the child, and not finding Miss Castelaine at home took her away again, simply remarking that they lived in Grove Street and had met the little girl on the train.

Miss Castelaine said yesterday that she waited in the Jersey City Station for her sister on Saturday evening, and when the little girl did not appear went to remain over night with friends in Brooklyn.

Yesterday on learning that the women with the girl had said they were going to Grove Street, Miss Castelaine started a house-to-house canvass, but could not find her sister.

Wong opened the door again, but when he emerged, he says, Larkaisen attacked him. The case went before Magistrate Cornell in the Yorkville Court yesterday. He decided for the open door, but discharged Larkaisen, who had been arraigned on Wong's complaint.

BICYCLE HIT FUNERAL COACH.

Collision on New Bridge Knocked Rider Unconscious—His Condition Critical.

While Harry Rudelen, sixteen years old, of 40 Attorney Street, Manhattan, was riding a bicycle across the new Williamsburg Bridge yesterday afternoon going to Williamsburg the bicycle collided with a coach returning from a funeral. Rudelen was thrown from the wheel and struck the pavement on his head.

He was rendered unconscious, and when Dr. Short of the Eastern District Hospital responded he removed Rudelen to the hospital, where his condition is said to be critical.

Dr. Fowler Slipped Into the People's M. E. Church Like Ordinary Member.

Fowler, who has just arrived here from Buffalo to reside for the next quadrennium, slipped into the People's Sixty-first Street Methodist Episcopal Church yesterday morning just like an ordinary member of the congregation. One of the pastors, the Rev. George A. Simons, was preaching, and for a time no one recognized the Bishop.

Near the end of the service a church member discovered Bishop Fowler, and then he was invited to conduct the communion service. After the benediction the Bishop held an informal reception.

FOUR SHOT AFTER CARD QUARREL FOR FIVE CENTS

Eight-Year-Old Girl in Harlem Street One of the Victims.

POLICE CALLED DOUBLE QUICK

Man Who Tripped Up Fugitive Seriously Wounded—Prisoner, Caught After Roof Chase, May Die.

Following a quarrel yesterday in Harlem's "Little Italy," that grew out of an alleged indebtedness of 5 cents, four persons were shot, one so seriously that he may die in the Harlem Hospital.

After a chase of several blocks, in which a big crowd followed, the police arrested Antonio Caro of 344 East One Hundred and Tenth Street, and charged with felonious assault in doing the shooting.

The police say they learned that on Saturday night Caro and Antonio De Lago of 344 East One Hundred and Tenth Street played cards and drank beer together in the little yard in the rear of De Lago's home. They played for several hours and when they quit Caro said that De Lago owed him 5 cents, as the result of the game. De Lago denied this and refused to pay the nickel.

Caro, who lives on the ground floor of the One Hundred and Tenth Street tenement, climbed up yesterday afternoon to the top floor where De Lago lives, and made a second demand for the 5 cents. A quarrel followed and De Lago pushed Caro out of the doorway. Caro struck De Lago and then started to run down stairs. De Lago chased him down and into the street, where Caro, it is charged, turned and fired at De Lago, who fell to the sidewalk with a breast wound, but got up and turned to run away.

Caro is said to have fired a second shot then, which went wild, but struck eight-year-old Rosa Depindo of 233 East One Hundred and Eighth Street, one of scores of youngsters playing in the street. The little girl was slightly wounded in the hip. Joseph Fierito of 240 East One Hundred and Eighth Street, who says he saw both shots fired, led the chase that started after Caro when he started to run through One Hundred and Tenth Street, toward Second Avenue, to escape the big crowd that gathered. Caro found himself being closely pressed, so turned and fired into the crowd that followed, the bullet striking Fierito in the right leg.

Gianno Roggo of 2,134 First Avenue was coming along and met the fleeing Caro. He saw the revolver and heard the cries of those behind, and as Caro came along shoved out his foot and tripped him. Caro stumbled, almost fell, but righted himself and turned quickly, firing a shot at Roggo, which took effect in his abdomen.

In the meantime the police reserves from the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station had been called out, and half a dozen policemen joined in the chase after Caro. This led to Second Avenue and up to One Hundred and Twelfth Street, where the hunted man ran into 245 and to the roof. For several minutes the police and crowd hunted Caro, but did not find him. He crossed over the roofs to 249, went down stairs, and darted into the street, trying to elude his pursuers.

Some one recognized him and a shout of "there he is" went up. The chase then only lasted as far as First Avenue, where Policemen Enright, Dimond, O'Shea, and Nehill gathered around Caro and arrested him.

Drs. Jacobs and Dinnick of the Harlem Hospital ambulance staff were called and looked after the injured. All but De Lago and Roggo left the hospital after being cared for. De Lago, it is said, may die, while Roggo will recover.

RUNNING FIRE WOUNDS THREE.

Unknown Carriage Party Lashes Italian Street Fighters—Two Dying.

In a running fire of bullets three men were shot, two of them seriously, last night in Prince Street, near Mott Street. The two men, who are in St. Vincent's Hospital, and who the surgeons say cannot recover, are Joseph Falano of 109 Mulberry Street and Alfred Setteri of 101 Macdougal Street.

Shortly before 9 o'clock last night a bugy in which three men were driving passed down Elm Street, and through Broome Street in an easterly direction toward Mott. Turning into Prince Street the occupants, the police say, found a group of three men engaged in a fist fight in the street, and a crowd of Italians were gathered about the fighters.

The police say the men in the carriage drove very close to where the fighters were, and one of the men in the buggy, wielding a whip, struck savagely at the odd man in the fight, and a man who, the police say, is Carino Malinfrone, a glove maker, of 32 Spring Street, fired a pistol shot into the group of men in the carriage, and afterward, according to the police, at his two combatants.

The men in the buggy and several in the crowd drew revolvers, and a number of shots were fired. The men in the buggy escaped almost miraculously, and drove off at break-neck speed. One of the men in the carriage was hit. None of the three is known.

The crowd of Italians set off in pursuit of the buggy and its occupants, and when the two wounded men fell in the street, Patrolman Keys of the Mulberry Street Station took Falano, who had been shot in the right side and over the right eye, to the station house. Friends of Setteri carried him to a drug store at Mott and Prince Streets, where he broke down and wept bitterly when Father O'Brien of St. Patrick's Church, in Mulberry Street, entered the drug store to administer the sacrament.

Setteri, who four months ago, the police say, was shot in a fight in a fire at 190 Grand Street, and who has been out of St. Vincent's Hospital but two months, was found to be suffering from pistol wounds under the chin, on the nose, and in the left shoulder. His wife was sent for, and reached the drug store shortly after the priest. A hurry call had in the meantime been sent to St. Vincent's Hospital and Dr. Shanahan responded. The police say that, despite Setteri's condition, he stood on the floor and said:

"Well, a man's got to die some time. But take me to the hospital. Don't let me die here."

The police arrested Carino Malinfrone on the scene after the shooting, and Setteri told Detective Casey of the Mulberry Street Station that two men fired at him, one of these being the man Malinfrone. He was taken to the Mulberry Street Station and locked up.

LION TRAINER IN HOSPITAL.

Blood Poisoning May Necessitate Amputation of Bonavita's Arm.

Capt. Jack Bonavita, the trainer who was badly mangled by the lion Baltimore in the Bostock arena at Dreamland, Coney Island, five weeks ago, was removed from the Pabst Loop oHtel at Coney Island to the Brooklyn Hospital yesterday afternoon. Blood poison has set in, and it will require the utmost medical skill and the most careful nursing to save his right hand and arm if, indeed, he is to escape with his life.

The move was determined upon yesterday afternoon after a long consultation in which several physicians took part. The doctors wished to amputate the arm without delay, but Bonavita begged for a postponement as long as there was the slightest chance for saving it. His urgings were reinforced by the instructions of Mr. Bostock, who was at the bedside, and who told the physicians to spare neither time nor expense in their efforts. A number of Bonavita's friends called at the hotel, and remained until he had been carried away.

REPENTED TOO LATE.

Man Who Drank Acid Changed His Mind at Death's-Door.

Morris Goldberg, a young clothing salesman of 787 East One Hundred and Seventy-first Street, drank carbolic acid late Saturday night in an unfinished empty building at Rivington and Orchard Streets, and lay down to die. When the acid burned his mouth and throat he repented, and staggered out to the sidewalk, crying to passersby to get a doctor, that he had drunk carbolic acid, because he wanted to kill himself, but was sorry he had done it and wanted to live. He was hurried to a physician's office, but in spite of the doctor's efforts, he died there.

Isaac Stern, a friend of Goldberg, said yesterday that the young man was to have been married in three weeks, but was apparently very melancholy all the time.

ACCUSED OF POISONING.

Mrs. Gray Denies That She Gave Anything to Sick Woman.

Mrs. Josephine Gray, a dressmaker of 229 West Thirty-fifth Street, was placed under arrest by the police of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station last night, on complaint of Mrs. Nancy Burton of 185 Eighth Avenue, who charges that the Gray woman attempted to poison her daughter, Mrs. May Bell, a manicure.

Mrs. Bell is in the New York Hospital, and the surgeons there say her condition is precarious. Mrs. Gray denies that she administered morphine or anything else to the sick woman.

Hanged Himself in Park.

Policeman Silleman of the Bronx Park Station found a man, who had been seen sleeping in the parks recently, hanging to a tree yesterday afternoon about 150 feet from the station house. His feet were just clear of the ground. The man was about forty-five years old and weighed 200 pounds. In his pockets were found a pocketbook containing 25 cents, a pipe, a knife, several keys, and a New York Central time table on which the name "Gruner" and the word "York" had been written in pencil.

FOUGHT IN THE RED ROOM.

Waldorf-Astoria Traditions Shattered by Row Over a Shirt.

Hallboys and attachés of the Waldorf-Astoria tiptoed softly and with bowed heads yesterday as they passed the historic Red Room, for, regardless of the traditions of the house, two persons had been so rash as to desecrate the sacred precincts by engaging in a fist fight within its confines.

One of the fighters was Michael Ridesky, a window cleaner, who as he worked displayed a remarkable shirt with a color scheme of black and white. He had no thought of attracting the attention of Michael Fay, who was passing through the corridors in the course of his multifarious duties as a night watchman.

"Ah, ha, I have found you!" said Fay, as he sighted the shirt and made for its wearer.

"Have nawthin'," said Ridesky. "Watcher talkin' about?"

"The shirt! the shirt!" cried Fay, excitedly. "That's the shirt that was stolen from my room, at 944 Eighth Avenue, and I will regain it, regardless of the consequences."

"If you say I stole that shirt, you can take dhis!" said Ridesky, as he swung a pail of water in the direction of Fay. The latter dodged and then went at the window cleaner. Before anybody could intervene Fay and Ridesky were well mixed up in a fight.

House Detective Joseph Smith finally appeared on the scene, and with much difficulty and with the aid of waiters, clerks, bellboys, and others disentangled the fighting men, and then placed Ridesky under arrest on Fay's charge of petit larceny.

TITUS IN THE TENDERLOIN.

Temporary Shift Started Rumor That He Had Succeeded Walsh.

Inspector Titus has been sent to take charge of the Fourth Inspection District, which includes the Tenderloin, during a four or five days' leave of absence granted to Inspector Walsh.

During Walsh's absence on other occasions Inspector W. McLaughlin of the Third District has looked after the Tenderloin. The appearance of Titus in the Tenderloin gave rise of rumors of Walsh being transferred to another inspection district and Titus permanently succeeding him. There has been friction between Capt. Cottrell of the Tenderloin Station and Inspector Walsh.

ELEVATED MEN WILL SEE BELMONT AGAIN

Interborough President Consents to New Conference

POLICE GUARD TERMINALS

Controller Handles Taken from Motormen as a Precaution—Company Has 500 Substitutes Ready.

Representatives of the elevated employes will meet August Belmont and other officers of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, when it is expected that the question of a strike will be settled one way or the other. Not until late yesterday afternoon did the employes receive a reply from Mr. Belmont that another conference would be granted. A committee waited around all the morning for Mr. Belmont, but did not see him. At first they were told that as the peace proposals advanced by the company had been rejected, there was nothing left to confer about. It is understood that the labor representatives only succeeded in having this refusal withdrawn after making what was considered more of a plea than a demand.

Meanwhile the Interborough Company is taking no chances as to a peaceful outcome of the negotiations. Three hundred policemen, besides those held in reserve at all station houses, were on duty at the elevated terminals in Harlem last night, and as fast as the motormen came in to go off duty the controller handles were taken away from them. The company had in mind the fact that in the big Brooklyn Rapid Transit strike in 1895 the motormen tied up the lines by taking the controller handles away. The men grumbled a good deal at the state of affairs last night, and declared that it was no use to deprive them of the controller handles, for they knew other ways to diable the cars.

For some reason which no one seemed to know there were more talk and rumors of strike last night than at any time since the trouble began.

Shortly before midnight Chief Stone of the Engineers, when told that police reserves were on duty expecting the strike to begin to-day, said:

"There will be no strike to-morrow or the next day, as things look now. Where does all this strike talk come from? Certainly not from us."

President William L. Jencks of the local Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers said:

"All depends on the result of to-morrow's conference with Mr. Belmont. We ought to know then finally what to look forward to—a settlement or —"

Another officer said that by to-night the whole plan for the future would be known.

"With a conference committee favoring strike action if a compromise is not effected," said he, "the outlook is critical. The sentiment among the men in case a strike is declared is that the company will be to blame. The engineers want a nine-hour day at $3.50 a day in the subway and nothing else. The question of seniority and priority they waive."

For reasons which police authorities declined to state the whole reserve force of the department was on duty last night. On every Labor Day it is customary to hold an extra number of men in reserve, but they are usually dismissed at an early hour. Late last night two platoons were still on duty at each station house. Capt. Cottrell who was in command at Headquarters, refused to reveal the purpose of the order, but it is known that officers of the Interborough Company had a conference several days ago with Commissioner McAdoo about plans for protection should a strike be ordered.

The Interborough continues the work of breaking in new men day and night. It was estimated last night that the company had 500 men fairly well trained that it could place at work at once in case of an emergency on the elevated. These men are all being trained in the subway under Superintendent Merritt. Mr. Merritt said last night that the subway could be thrown open in three days if permission were obtained from the Rapid Transit Commission.

Men Anxious for a Reply.

The leaders of the organizations of employes gathered early yesterday at the Broadway Central Hotel and waited for a reply to the second demands sent to Mr. Belmont on Sunday. Those present were Grand Chief W. S. Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Vice Grand Master Charles Wilson of the Brotherhood of Firemen, Chief W. D. Mahon of the Amalgamated, and the local officers.

The committee appeared to be anxious, and, receiving no satisfactory reply to telephone messages, sent two men to Mr. Bryan's offices, at 10 Dey Street. They returned with a sealed message. There was at once an excited discussion in the committee room and a rush to telephones. Then a second committee, consisting of Pinney, Jencks, and Pepper, hastened to Mr. Bryan's office and left a message for Mr. Belmont. The communication from the Interborough was simply that it stood "pat" on its proposal of last week and that there was nothing to confer about. Then it was said that the committee had sent a request the terms of which were much more moderate than the previous one.

After the second committee returned the chiefs could do nothing but await a reply from Mr. Belmont. A messenger from the Interborough offices arrived at the hotel a few minutes before 5 o'clock and was sent straight to room 300, the headquarters of the committee. All the absentees were

SUBWAY FIRE DRAWS CROWD.

Dense Smoke Hampered the Firemen—Police Reserves Out.

A large crowd was drawn to the entrance to the subway at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Lenox Avenue last night by a dense cloud of smoke which issued from the tunnel at that point.

A portion of the temporary wooden structure in the subway became ignited through defective insulation of the electric wires, and the flames soon spread to the debris in the tunnel nearby. John Kelffiin, the watchman, discovered the fire and turned in an alarm.

When the firemen came they found it exceedingly difficult to fight the flames because the dense smoke made it impossible for them to enter, and they had to pour water into the tunnel from the street.

It took nearly three-quarters of an hour to extinguish the flames, and it finally became necessary to call out the reserves from the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station before the crowd could be dispersed. As the tunnel proper is fireproof, the damage was merely nominal.

NEGRO MURDER CLUB SPREADS.

In Florida Now—One Assassination Committed and More Planned.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Sept. 5.—During the taking of testimony before the Coroner's Jury in the case of N. W. Epps, a planter, who was shot to death Saturday night near Bradfordville, Isum Edwards, Jr., the negro who did the shooting, acknowledged that a "Before Day Club" had been organized in the county, and that a number of the white men had been picked out to suffer death.

The negro Edwards implicated a number of other negroes, and to-night there are eight negroes in the county jail at Live Oak. They were carried there to-day on a special train.

It is reported that emblems of death were found on the trees in several plantations in that section of the country.

It is supposed they were placed there by members of the "Before Day Club."

This is the first appearance of the "Before Day Club" in Florida, so far as is known, but a woman was murdered there by a negro on Friday and the cause of the murder is not known.

The previous appearances of the "Before Day Club" have been in Alabama and Georgia. The murders committed by the two negroes who were lynched at Statesborough were the work of this organization, and about a week ago Alabama members of the society attempted to murder a family at Salem.

WOOER'S TRICK FAILED.

Missed Last Boat from Liberty Island, but Girl Wouldn't Marry.

An hour or more after the last boat had left Liberty Island on Sunday night, Lieut. Breese found a young man and a young woman, who later said they were from East Orange, sitting on the grass near the sea wall. The young man was telling the young woman that there must be a chaplain on the island, and that they could be married. The girl tearfully refused.

The Lieutenant stepped in then. He soon acquired the suspicion that the young man was not very sorry that he and his companion had missed the last boat. The young man then confessed.

He said that the girl's mother did not like him, and that he "had to do something to get the girl's consent." He said that she "wouldn't elope in the ordinary manner," so he had adopted the plan of missing the boat, thinking that then she would consent to being married by the chaplain.

There is no chaplain at Liberty Island. The Lieutenant thought for a moment, and then called a guard and had the young man removed to the barracks, where he was allowed to spend the night with the enlisted men. The girl was taken in charge by the wife of one of the officers.

As the couple disappeared in the crowd at the Battery yesterday morning, the Lieutenant said, "Plucky kid, that; I'll bet he gets her yet in spite of her mother."

ESCAPED DRESSED AS CAPTAIN.

Governors Island Prisoner Had All the Soldiers Saluting Him.

Taking advantage of the fact that the guard at Governors Island is new and unacquainted with the prisoners in Castle Williams, Frank Reese, one of the trusties, donned the uniform of Capt. Horton of Major Gen. Corbin's staff yesterday morning and escaped. Both the police and a posse from the island searched for him yesterday without result.

Reese had been in several scrapes before he deserted from the army, and on his arrest he was court-martialled and dishonorably discharged. He still had a short time to serve, and behaved himself so well that he became a trusty and was assigned to the job of keeping the quarters of Capt. Horton in order. Capt. Horton is now with Gen. Corbin at the army manoeuvres.

While Reese was working about the Captain's house yesterday morning he broke in and got a new uniform which Capt. Horton had bought to take to the Philippines on his return. Dressing himself in the uniform, Reese shaved off his mustache, and was mistaken for a bona fide Captain. Out of the house he marched and down to the ferry landing, where he waited for the boat to New York. Privates and non-commissioned officers saluted him, and he even passed some of his old prison comrades without being recognized. On the boat he sat in the compartment reserved for officers, and chatted pleasantly with the wife and daughter of an officer stationed at Fort Hamilton.

JOKER SHOOTS YOUNG WOMAN.

Shooting Gallery Man Thought the Rifle Was Empty.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Sept. 5.—Miss Kathrine Cassidy of 436 North Seventeenth Street, Newark, was accidentally shot this afternoon by James Lewis of Baltimore, who runs a shooting gallery on "The Pike" in Shooting Park, Vailsburg. The bullet passed through Miss Cassidy's right breast.

With some friends, the young woman was passing through the park, and paused in front of Lewis's place to talk to the proprietor. Lewis seized a rifle, and, believing it to be unloaded, playfully pointed it at Miss Cassidy. She defied him to shoot her, and hardly had she spoken the words before the sound of a shot rang out and she fell to the ground. Lewis was locked up to await the result of the girl's injuries. It is not believed that she is fatally injured.

BLOODSHED FEARED AT BULL RUN MANOEUVRES

Steps Taken to Prevent Clash of White and Black Troops.

MEN SEARCHED FOR BULLETS

Feeling Running High—Connecticut Negroes Threatened by Southern Soldiers—Campaign Begun.

Special to The New York Times.

CORPS HEADQUARTERS, GAINESVILLE, Va., Sept. 5.—Notwithstanding the activities of the day and despite the fact that there is no hostility between Northern and Southern troops, considerable friction and no little excitement have developed on account of hard feelings between colored militiamen and the Southern troops. So acute has the trouble become that one regiment, the Second South Carolina, in the Fourth Brigade of Gen. Bell's Browns, attempted to retain ball and cartridge for use in contingencies where they thought that they might have to cast in their lot with the colored men.

"By God, Sir," said an officer of the First Maryland, in the Third Brigade of the Browns, "if those nigger troops come in contact with me, I'll have my men load with ball and cartridge."

An officer of the Texas regiment just arrived agreed with him fully and gave some details of the way they handled offending negroes in Corsicana, Texas.

There is only one body of colored troops in camp, the First Separate Company of Connecticut, who are at Manassas under Gen. Russell Frost in the Fourth Brigade of Gen. Grant's forces. This colored company is made up chiefly of negroes who act as waiters and servants at Yale.

At the manoeuvres at Fort Riley last year there was a clash between the colored and white troops engaged in the manoeuvres there and quick work was necessary to prevent serious trouble, as the Texas regiment, which had made threats when it found itself close to the colored troops, already had bayonets drawn prepared for emergencies.

Even this afternoon a junior officer of one of the Georgia regiments, mounted, was saluted by a squad of the colored company as he rode by, but he straightened up in his saddle and passed on without returning the salute required by regulation.

By reason of the friction and to avoid a possible row efforts are being made to have the colored company assigned to camp duty during the war game.

There is little danger, however, from ball cartridge, as particularly stringent rules have been promulgated forbidding its use. As each regiment detrains it is at once inspected to see if any of the forbidden ammunition is on hand.

On account of the present feeling, however, another inspection has been ordered, and one high officer expressed the opinion that some ball cartridges will be found. This last inspection, however, is being carried out so stringently and thoroughly that it is hardly possible that any real bullets will be found when the troops go into action to-morrow.

BULL RUN CAMPAIGN BEGUN.

Chances Favor the Enemy in the First Problem.

Special to The New York Times.

CORPS HEADQUARTERS, Gainesville, Va., Sept. 6, (Tuesday.)—Diplomatic relations were broken off at midnight, and the war of the Browns and Blues is now on. The Blue Army, under Gen. Grant, is now free to begin its advance.

Late last night word was passed among the officers that Gen. Bell expected to establish contact with the Blue army before daybreak, and that the theoretical bullets will fly at Groveton, just where Sigel struck Jackson, at daybreak, on the Warrenton Pike in the second battle of Bull Run.

Orders for a rush to positions were given in both manoeuvre camps exactly at midnight. The Blue Army, under Gen. Grant, was put under way to attack the Brown Army, under Gen. Bell.

The orders of Gen. Bell sent his forces toward his adversary at double quick. It is his desire to reach a position near the centre of the manoeuvre field and stop the attacking force, whose duty it is to force a passage through Thoroughfare Gap. Gen. Corbin will join Gen. Grant and witness the operation of his army. The day following he will be with Gen. Bell.

While the armies were preparing for their contest to-night in manoeuvre camps Nos. 1 and 2, corps headquarters presented a scene quite in contrast to warfare. Gen. Corbin and his distinguished guests gathered in the mess tent for dinner at 7 o'clock.

A CONGRESSMAN ATTACKED.

A toast to the President was drunk standing, and a toast to Spain was responded to by Col. Monteverde, the Spanish Military Attaché, who is an observer of the manoeuvres. Col. Raspopoff, the Russian observer, raised his glass to the President. Gov. Warfield of Maryland spoke for his State.

Ex-Speaker Manderson of Nebraska touched on the strictures reported to have been made by Representative Livingston of Georgia on the "full-dress" features of the dinner in Gen. Corbin's camp. He invited an investigation by Congress and hoped the ladies present, Mrs. Corbin, Mrs. Grant, and Miss Patten, would be called as witnesses.

Any member of either house of Congress, he said, who would not vote for the proper training of the army, that it might be efficient as such, was not worthy a place in Congress.

Gen. F. V. Greene of New York and Brig. Gen. Riggs of Massachusetts also responded to toasts.

In preparation for the outbreak of hostilities, the great majority of Grant's troops were out yesterday, and both camps were thoroughly outposted. Beginning at 1:30 yesterday morning the outposts were relieved every four hours, and Lieut. Cornelius Vanderbilt had his turn with his men early in the day.

GRANT'S CAVALRY OUT.

The entire cavalry force of Gen. Grant's army left Manassas camp at 11 o'clock yesterday morning and were distributed in outposts all the way from the camp to the front. Eight troops of the Fifteenth Cavalry, Squadron A of New York, and Troop C of Brooklyn, four troops of the Fifth Cavalry, and a troop of the Connecticut cavalry were stationed about the woods and guarding the roads to Thoroughfare, while a troop of the regulars remained in reserve to protect the rear. The infantry regulars and militia in both camps were kept similarly busy.

At Camp Manassas yesterday morning the Fourteenth of Brooklyn had a regimental drill, after which they were ordered to scout and reconnoitre, leaving Capt. Bruckman of Company E Officer of the Guard. Strangely enough, the Fourteenth is encamped on almost the same spot that it occupied during the two battles of Bull Run. With it is Capt. Cardona, now the armorer of the regiment, who fought with the Fourteenth in both battles. Capt. Cardona went through the civil war with the regiment and took part in the twenty-two fights in which it was engaged.

JAPAN NOT REPRESENTED.

Neglects Opportunity to Learn Art of War at Bull Run.

Special to The New York Times.

CORPS HEADQUARTERS, GAINESVILLE, Va., Sept. 5.—All the foreign military attachés who are to watch the manoeuvres beginning here to-morrow are at the headquarters camp, and will remain until after the grand review on Saturday. A circumstance that is occasioning much comment is the fact that there is no Japanese representative here.

The invitation to send an attaché was sent by the Government to the Japanese Legation at Washington, and a similar invitation was sent to all the other embassies and legations at the capital which have military attachés. For some reason which has not been disclosed the Japanese Minister has not accepted the invitation. The Russian attaché, who arrived to-day, is Col. Raspokoff.

There are two British attachés, Col. Foster and Major Williams. The others are Col. Monte Verde, who will explain to the Spanish Government how American troops work on the field: Col. Allamira, for Mexico; Col. Aziz Bey, Turkey; Major von Etzel, Germany. The attachés wear the uniforms of their own regiments, and the display of foreign gold lace adds more color to the generally bright scene about headquarters.

GOV. DAVIS RE-ELECTED.

Republicans Hoped to Cut Down Arkansas Majority, but Failed.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 5.—An election of State officers was held throughout Arkansas to-day. Gov. Jefferson Davis, the Democratic nominee, was opposed by Harry H. Myers, Republican. Gov. Davis's re-election was conceded, but the Republicans worked hard to reduce the Democratic majority.

Early returns indicate the re-election of Gov. Davis by the usual large majority. The Democrats easily elected their entire State ticket, and the interest centred in the vote in large towns, where the regular Democrats were opposed, in many instances, by independents.

Owing to the increased vote the Democratic managers are claiming that Davis's plurality may exceed the figures of two years ago, which were 48,103.

MANAGER McGRAW HURT.

Baseball Crowd Trampled on Him After Admirers Dropped Him.

John J. McGraw, Manager of the New York National League baseball team was injured rather severely by the team's supporters at the Polo Grounds yesterday. His injury, though, is not so serious as was at first reported.

While the New York men were at the bat in the ninth inning the crowd of nearly forty thousand people showed unusual excitement. The score was a tie, and when Browne batted to the right field for two bases it appeared as if every "rooter" was shouting. Then Mertes went to the bat, and, sending the ball to centre field, scored the winning run.

The occupants of the grand stand and open seats around the field at once surged on the field, making for McGraw and Mertes. A few of the manager's admirers picked him up with the intention of carrying him off the field on their shoulders. The pressure of the immense crowd behind, however, caused the men to drop McGraw, and the excited throng simply walked over the prostrate manager, and it was some time before he was extricated from his perilous position.

McGraw was unable to arise, and after being carried to the players' bench a call was sent for an ambulance from the J. Hood Wright Memorial Hospital. After a careful examination by the surgeons at that institution it was found that the only injury was a sprain below the knee. He was subsequently taken to his home at 109 West Eighty-eighth Street.

At the hospital last night it was said that McGraw would be able to walk again in two or three days. Until he is able to assume the management of the New York team again, Gilbert will probably take charge of the players in the absence of Acting Captain McGann, who has been indefinitely suspended by President Pulliam for misconduct in a recent game at Cincinnati.

First reports of McGraw's injury were that one of his legs had been broken.

KILLED AT BASEBALL GAME.

Son of Ruskin University's President Struck on Temple by Batted Ball.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—Wendell Miller, twelve years old, son of George M. Miller, President of Ruskin University at Glen Ellyn, Ill., was killed this afternoon by a batted ball while watching a baseball game.

Miller was sitting in the grandstand when the ball struck him on the temple. He died in three minutes.

DIED AFTER TENNIS GAME.

William Cowdrey's Exertions Caused Fatal Dilation of Heart.

NEW ROCHELLE, Sept. 5.—William Cowdrey, twenty-two years old, who was a member of a well-known family here and was connected with a broker's office in New York, dropped dead this evening on the grounds of the Siwanoy Tennis Club. He had been playing with Victor Mapes and George Carleton, and had been on the court steadily for almost two hours.

At the end of play he walked to where Mr. Mapes was standing and started to speak, but then placed an arm on his shoulder and for a minute or so leaned heavily on Mr. Mapes. He walked away a minute later, but fell dead after a few steps. Acute dilation of the heart, due to the long spell of activity, to which he was not used, caused death.

Japanese Said to Have Annihilated Rear Guard and Taken 200 Guns—Kuropatkin Estimates Casualties at 16,000.

Developments of Japanese strategy have put the entire Russian Army under Gen. Kuropatkin in peril of annihilation or capture and have caused the Russians to begin preparations for the evacuation of Mukden.

Kuropatkin, retreating from Liao-Yang, has faced a succession of surprises. His plan to crush Gen. Kuroki before the other Japanese armies could cross the Tai-Tse failed because a Japanese column of which he had no information was discovered further north than he thought Kuroki had penetrated.

Hastening north to prevent this column from cutting the railroad, Kuropatkin has discovered that still another column from the eastward is pushing directly on Mukden. He has sent a force of cavalry to oppose it. Such threatening developments have been found at Sing-min-Tung, west of Mukden, that he has been compelled to send a division in that direction.

His retreat, meanwhile, has permitted Marshal Oyama, with Nodzu's and Oku's armies, to swarm across the Tai-Tse and harass him in the rear and on the right flank. With Mukden abandoned, a retreat to Harbin, 400 miles northward, will be necessary.

In this desperate race Kuropatkin is hampered by the transport of his wounded, who are clogging the railway cars.

MUKDEN RUSSIA'S LAST HOPE.

Its Loss Means the Abandonment of All Southern Manchuria.

MUKDEN, Sept. 5.—Preparations for the evacuation of Mukden are proceeding.

The Japanese advance is within thirty miles.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 6.—It is impossible at this hour to obtain any statement from the authorities regarding the reported preparations for the abandonment of Mukden.

This is the first intimation that such a course is contemplated. If it turns out to be true it means the abandonment of the whole of Southern Manchuria and the winding up of the present campaign.

In fact, should Mukden be evacuated there would be no point short of Harbin for wintering the army of a quarter of a million with its many wounded.

On the other hand, the evacuation of Mukden would give Field Marshal Oyama commodious Winter quarters and the practical control of two lines of railway. The Kinchou-Simmintin line, tapping rich Chinese territory, stops little short of Mukden, with which it is connected by a good wagon road.

The report of the prospective evacuation of Mukden, if well founded, would indicate that the crippling effect of the Liao-Yang fight on Kuropatkin's army is more serious than has as yet been intimated.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—The Daily Mail this morning prints a dispatch from Sing-min-tung, dated Sept. 5, giving a report that Gen. Kuropatkin's retreat has been cut off.

The dispatch goes on to say that the Russian troops had advanced in strong force to the southeast of Mukden as far as Maping Hill to oppose any possible attack in the direction of their advance.

A Chinese official who arrived from Mukden Sunday says that the Russian troops are leaving for the north, that there are 18,000 men ten miles to the east of the city, that the officers and men have become dispirited, and that much sickness prevails.

The correspondent of The Times with Gen. Kuroki on the Tai-Tse River, in a dispatch, dated Sept. 3, says:

"Kuroki's flanking movement has progressed by a succession of desperate night attacks. He is now within five miles of the railway and ten miles north of Liao-Yang. The Russians are holding their positions tenaciously."

YEN-TAI, Sept. 4.—(Delayed.)—Desultory fighting occurred yesterday in the vicinity of Mukden.

RACING TO HEAD RUSSIANS OFF.

Japanese Converging from East and West—Reports from Kuropatkin.

ST. PETERSBURG, Tuesday, Sept. 6.—The war situation to date is:

The whole Russian army, or at least the main portion of it, is already above Yen-Tai station and is pushing on toward Mukden.

The whole of Field Marshal Oyama's army has crossed the Tai-Tse River and part of it is hanging on to Kuropatkin's flank.

A strong flanking column on the east is pushing rapidly north in the effort to head off the Russians.

Against this column Kuropatkin has sent out a strong cavalry division to the northeast, which it is believed is already in position to check the Japanese flankers, while to the westward Kuropatkin is moving a division toward Sing-min-tung, thirty miles west of Mukden, to meet any interference that may be attempted from the direction of Yin-Kow or Niu-Chwang.

The Rear Guard Engaged.

Oyama's advance is reported to be engaging the Russian rear, but it is not expected to develop anything more serious than a series of rearguard actions tending to harass Kuropatkin's retreat, notwithstanding a report circulated last night that the rearguard had been almost annihilated and that the main army was in danger of being surrounded.

The Japanese have thrown a strong flanking column across the Tai-Tse River at Beni-Tzu, about thirty miles northeast of Liao-Yang, which is hurrying to get in between the Russian army and Mukden. It is against this movement that Kuropatkin has dispatched Lieut. Gen. Rennenkampff with a strong Cossack division, which it is believed is already blocking the eastern high road.

Kuropatkin has three roads over which he is marching toward Mukden, besides the double-tracked railway. The latter is chiefly occupied in the transportation of guns and of equipment, of which there is a great amount. The soldiers are marching in light order, and most of the wounded have already been dispatched north by rail.

Gen. Kuropatkin in a telegram to the General Staff filed at 1 P. M. Sept. 5 north of Yen-Tai says the Japanese on Sunday engaged his rearguard south of Yen-Tai, the fight continuing until Monday. The telegram details the precautions taken to checkmate the Japanese flankers.

Estimates Russian Losses at 16,000.

Kuropatkin estimates his losses up to and including Sept. 4 at 16,000. This is considered to be a very conservative figure. The loss to the Japanese probably will be double this number, owing to their position as attackers.

Kuropatkin says nothing regarding the loss of guns, but it is probable that some of the heavier emplaced guns at Liao-Yang had to be abandoned. In fact, it was reported here yesterday that he had been obliged to abandon 200 guns. Some of them, it was added, were damaged in the fighting and the rest were disabled by order of the Russian Commander in Chief.

There is no truth in the report that Kuropatkin has been wounded or that Lieut. Gen. Linevitch is moving to his support. Gen. Linevitch is still at Vladivostok.

Telegraphing to the Emperor under yesterday's date, Gen. Kuropatkin said:

"The retreat of our troops from Liao-Yang on the right bank of the Tai-Tse River on the night of Sept. 4 was carried out in good order.

"The enemy's insignificant attempts at pursuit were stopped by our rearguard.

"During Sept. 4 the Japanese strengthened their forces operating against our left flank, extending their line from the Yen-Tai mines northward.

"Japanese, also on Sept. 4, crossed from Liao-Yang and its environs."

Nation Bitterly Disappointed.

The feeling of national grief and disappointment caused by Gen. Kuropatkin's unsuccessful attempt to make a stand at Liao-Yang, deep and bitter as it is, is somewhat tempered by the fact that the Russian Commander in Chief had removed the bulk of his stores northward before the battle, leaving a mere shell at Liao-Yang, and that he succeeded in extricating Gen. Stakelberg's corps from the clutches of the Japanese.

The military authorities figure that Oyama had a numerical superiority of 60,000 men in the operations against Kuropatkin.

All Kuropatkin's hopes and plans for victory, they say, were dashed by the wonderful celerity with which Oyama's right [under Kuroki] pushed northward after crossing the Tai-Tse River. Here Kuropatkin's information evidently was faulty in believing that he had before him the whole of the Japanese forces which had crossed over to the right bank.

Was About to Strike Kuroki.

He had already completed a preliminary bombardment of Kuroki's force Friday and was about to strike him when he discovered that another Japanese column had crossed the river further up stream and had worked around still further northward. The latter column was marching with great rapidity westward to cut the railroad and close the door on the Russian retreat to Mukden.

Gen. Orloff's division, which suffered so severely, had just arrived from European Russia. Although this division was thrown into confusion and lost a frightful number of men, the temporary check it was able to give the Japanese probably saved the railroad for Kuropatkin.

In the meantime Kuroki, freed from Kuropatkin, marched hastily westward to intercept Gen. Stakelberg, who was crossing the river from the left bank. It was then that Kuropatkin thought Stakelberg's corps was lost, and so reported to the War Office. But Kuroki was too late. Stakelberg not only succeeded in getting his corps across, but marched at high speed to Yen-Tai, actually arriving in time to come to the support of the hard-pressed Orloff.

The military expert of the Novoe Vremya says the chief question of the moment is whether Kuropatkin will succeed in collecting all his forces from Liao-Yang and effecting a retirement to Mukden in view of the flanking position taken up by the Japanese.

"Our main hope," the paper says, "lies in the probable exhaustion of the Japanese after the bloody and unprecedentedly long and severe fighting which practically continued day and night from Aug. 24 to Sept. 3."

CHANCES AGAINST RUSSIANS.

English Military Expert Thinks They Will Meet Many Surprises.

LONDON TIMES-NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—In commenting on the situation north of Liao-Yang, the military correspondent of The Times says he thinks that although Gen. Kuropatkin has the start of his pursuers he is not yet out of the woods. Many of his regiments have been reduced to half their strength, while those of Japan have been nursed and are likely to be in better shape.

The correspondent doubts if Gen. Linevitch can come with relief from Vladivostok, and says he has not 40,000 men, and if he had they could not arrive in time to be of any service.

The Russian rear guard the correspondent regards as probably doomed, since if Kuropatkin has left Yen-Tai it means that he could not afford to wait for the rear guard to join him.

"The pursuit," says the correspondent, "will be conducted with the utmost energy by Russia's alert and dangerous foes, and may well provide many surprises."

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—The race of Gen. Kuropatkin for Mukden enthralls the British press and public, and military and other critics scarcely dare venture a definite surmise as to its result. The best opinion, however guarded, inclines to the belief that Kuropatkin will get through with a respectable remnant of his great army, thus robbing the Japanese of the complete fruits of their sweeping victory, but it is realised that the Russians will not be out of the woods for several days.

The latest report is that Gen. Kuropatkin is once more in danger of being cut off, and it is believed here to be likely that this report will be repeated several times before the issue of the sanguinary struggle is decided.

English military critics base such opinions as they have upon the tremendous topographical difficulties Gen. Kuroki must overcome before intercepting Kuropatkin, who, they hold, has shown ability to take advantage of every phase in the strategy of retreat. If Kuroki now succeeds, after failing in the initial attempt, he will have accomplished, in English eyes, an almost superhuman achievement.

Mukden's Capture Expected.

Here it is almost taken for granted that a Japanese occupation of Mukden must quickly ensue. No serious English critic supposed that Kuropatkin will dream of making such another fatal attempt to stem the Japanese advance as he did at Liao-Yang. If the Russians can reach Harbin they will, according to English opinion, be lucky.

Before that becomes a question of moment, however, it is expected that danperate engagements must be fought, and the Japanese are expected to risk even heavier casualties than they sustained at Liao-Yang in the final endeavor to annihilate Gen. Kuropatkin, either on the way to Mukden or in the neighborhood of Mukden itself.

General praise is again accorded the Russian commander for his temporary extrication and to the Russian troops for their splendid discipline in defeat. They say that if the genius of Kuropatkin and the morale of his men had not been so strikingly brought out in recent dispatches, there would be scarcely an English paper to-day that would not declare the fate of Gen. Kuropatkin's entire force already sealed.

Railroad of Little Use.

Spencer Wilkinson, in The Morning Post, points out that if Gen. Kuropatkin endeavored to retreat in single column, his transport and force would be so large that his First Army Corps would have been marching three days before the Second could start to follow it. The railroad is of little use to him, Mr. Wilkinson asserts, and he says that Kuropatkin must be retreating in a series of parallel columns, each not larger than one army corps, and behind these the rearguard.

"If Kuropatkin can move his army over the thirty miles that separate Yen-Tai and Mukden," Mr. Wilkinson says, "he will break the record for such performances. The Japanese columns will have little difficulty in coming up with his rearguard and engaging it whenever they please."

The Standard says: "For the first time in centuries Europe has gone down before Asia, and Oriental troops have vanquished in fair fighting a Western army." Yet the paper goes on to reiterate that the crowning triumph for the moment is denied the Japanese, though Kuropatkin, despite his "extraordinary achievement," is still exposed to disaster.

The Daily Telegraph, after declaring that Kuropatkin's operations and the defense of Port Arthur "stand out as two fine achievements which have done the most to maintain the prestige of Russian arms throughout a campaign which otherwise has formed a story of unfathomable incompetence and uninterrupted disaster," adds that the critical moment of the retreat is only likely to be reached when Gen. Kuropatkin arrives at the Hun River, some miles south of Mukden.

"Once across this serious obstacle," it continues, "the Russian forces will be in sufficient safety, though the passage of the river may be made a terribly expensive operation. If the Russian Army gets to Mukden in any considerable force Japan will have reached the limit of her advantages, and although we are convinced that she will maintain what she has conquered, she will have to face the utmost test in a defensive struggle before the truce of exhaustion is forced upon the combatants."

AWFUL SUFFERING OF WOUNDED.

Battling Armies Sweep Over Them as They Lie on the Ground.

YEN-TAI, Sept. 3.—(Delayed by the Censor.)—A Russian correspondent of The Associated Press, who has just arrived here from Liao-Yang, gives some details of the final assaults on that place. He says: "At the time of the Japanese bombardment of the railroad station the ambulances were parked in the rear of the station, from where it was impossible to move them. A shrapnel shell, which burst over the station, wounded two nurses, one of whom has since died.

"The hottest fighting was on Aug. 30 and 31, when the repeated assaults of the enemy were all repulsed.

"The Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Regiments of the Ninth Division and the Twenty-third Regiment of the Eastern Division were particularly hard pressed and were several times reinforced. Ammunition could not be brought quick enough, and the men at times actually stoned their assailants.

"Many companies had all of their officers killed or wounded and the men fought under non-commissioned officers.

"Many of the Japanese wounded fell into the Russian trenches and could not possibly be removed when the retreat commenced, and had to be abandoned. Others more unfortunate fell between the lines, and we could not bring them in. The Japanese could not remove them, and they lay most of the day and night exposed in the line of fire.

"Their cries and groans, which were heartrending, could be distinctly heard. Our skirmishers fell on many of them while pursuing the retreating Japanese, and when they could gave water to them, but had to leave them to be run over by the succeeding waves of the Japanese attacks.

"There was a lull in the fighting on Aug. 31. Gen. Marozovsky, who was on the firing line the whole time, sat down with a Cossack picket in the shelter of the trees for a cup of tea and a biscuit. The Japanese artillery suddenly swept the woods with their fire and a shell burst, wounding the General in the leg and tearing off his orderly's arm."

TERRIBLE FIRE OF JAPANESE.

Two Companies of Russians Wiped Out at One Spot.

YEN-TAI, Sept. 4.—(Delayed.)—The Russians evacuated their positions around Liao-Yang during the night of Sept. 3, crossing the Tai-Tse River and burning the bridges behind them. In the meantime a strong force was holding Gen. Kuroki back from Yen-Tai.

During the combined attack on Liao-Yang, which commenced Aug. 30, by Gen. Oku attacking from the southeast and Gen. Nodzu from the southwest, the shell fire was terrific, in one instance fifty-six shells bursting at the same time.

The Japanese made a fine infantry attack. They succeeded in reaching the Russian trenches, but were repulsed with heavy loss. The Japanese shrapnel, as a rule, burst too high. On the whole, the day went well for the Russians. The Japanese were driven from the villages along the railroad.

Retiring Russians Enfiladed.

On Aug. 31 the shelling commenced at daylight from all sides, but the Russian infantry pressed forward. Late that afternoon the news came that Kuroki was threatening the railroad at Yen-Tai and the Russians commenced to retire, enabling the Japanese to bring up two batteries and enfilade the Russian force along the railroad.

During the night the transport moved into Liao-Yang.

On Sept. 1 the Russians retreated from their main positions, which formed a circle around the city, while the transport crossed the river.

At 2 o'clock the Japanese succeeded in placing two guns in position and shelled the railroad station, causing many casualties. At the same time the Japanese infantry attacked the inner Russian position, but were repulsed.

In the evening the Japanese brought up heavy guns and used Shimose powder to shell the Russian town. The Russians held the position till the night of Sept. 3, when they retired across the river.

On Sept. 2 a strong Russian force was moved east from Yen-Tai to hold Kuroki back. Kuroki attacked it and was repulsed, being driven from his positions on the left.

Terrific Shrapnel Fire.

The Japanese poured in a terrific shrapnel fire, at one spot annihilating two Russian companies.

In the evening the Russian artillery, which had been reinforced, shelled the Japanese position, and Kuroki pushed his right forward and got within twelve miles of the railroad at Yen-Tai. Later he was driven back to his original position.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 5.—A dispatch to the Official Messenger, filed at Mukden on Sunday, says:

"The bombardment of Liao-Yang, which commenced last Thursday, continued Friday and Saturday. On those days the forts surrounding the town withstood the heavy fire of artillery and a brilliant assault by the Japanese infantry. All the attacks were repulsed, mines playing an important part in the discomfiture of the assailants.

"Nevertheless, the Liao-Yang fortifications finally were evacuated and the remainder of reserve supplies destroyed by fire.

"During the three days' bombardment the railway station and suburbs of the Chinese town suffered the most. The latter was abandoned by its inhabitants after the town was ablaze in many places.

"To the east, in the neighborhood of Yen-Tai station and the coal mines, there was hot fighting on Friday and Saturday. Both sides, according to latest information, were quiet. On Saturday trains from Mukden went south as far as Yen-Tai."

TOKIO CELEBRATES THE VICTORY

Army Chiefs Banqueted and the City Illuminated.

TOKIO, Sept. 5.—Field Marshal Yamagata, Chief of the General Staff, and Lieut. Gen. Tearouchi, Minister of War, were the hosts at a banquet given to-night in honor of the Liao-Yang victory. The guests included the imperial Princes, the members of the Cabinet, and the elder statesmen, the staff officers of the Army and Navy Departments, and chiefs of bureaus.

Tokio is illuminated again, and the principal streets of the city, where a series of lantern processions are taking place, are thronged with people.

A mass of official reports on the battle of Liao-Yang reached the imperial headquarters to-day, but they will not be given out until it is possible to put them in order and make from them a concise and detailed story. In the meantime headquarters is refraining from giving anything to the public.

It is generally known that Kuropatkin succeeded by means of a desperate rearguard action and strong and well-handled flank movements in withdrawing the great bulk of the Russian Army, and that he cut bridges to hamper the Japanese pursuit.

Critical interest centres in the operation of the Japanese right wing which occurred late Friday night and early Saturday morning. Gen. Kuroki then swung a column to the westward.

Among the Japanese officers reported killed are Lieut. Tearouchi, a son of Lieut. Gen. Tearouchi, and Lieuts. Fukushima and Muratta, also sons of Generals.

Official figures of the Japanese losses and a list of the trophies captured are expected to reach Tokio to-morrow.

CZAR MAY GO TO THE WAR.

His Train Prepared for Long Trip—To Mobilize Two Army Corps.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 5.—The report that the Emperor will go to the front is again revived, and seems to have foundation. It is known that the imperial train has been fitted out for a long journey.

The Emperor has undergone a great strain during the past week. His main fear during the last few days has been that Kuropatkin would be cut off. Like his subjects, the Emperor has taken Kuropatkin's defeat greatly to heart, but the preservation of the army organiation has been a great relief, and his answer to the battle of Liao-Yang will be the mobilization of two more army corps. So far as can be learned, the Emperor shows no disposition to blame Kuropatkin.

The new mobilization decided upon is expected to be announced in the latter part of this week. It will include the Eighth Army Corps, stationed at Odessa.

The retreat of Kuropatkin has evidently thrown everything into confusion at the front, and the reports received are meagre and incomplete.

All classes of the population are awaiting with intense eagerness the receipt of details of the battle and estimates and particulars of the losses. Crowds hang around the bulletin boards. The wives and families of many of the lower classes of the people spend most of their time in the churches, praying that their loved ones may be spared.

The accounts of the battle published in the newspapers here are very incomplete. Some of the papers evidently have not yet awakened to the full force of the disaster. But without exception they try to put a brave face on the situation. There is not the slightest suggestion of yielding. The cry of the papers is that the war must go on until Russia is victorious, if not this year then next year.

Kuropatkin's defeat only caused a drop of ¼ point in Russian Fours on the local Bourse.

WIRELESS RECORDS BROKEN.

Messages Sent 105 Miles Overland Between St. Louis and Springfield.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 5.—Wireless messages were sent to-day from the tower near the Jerusalem exhibit at the World's Fair, 105 miles, to Springfield, Ill., the greatest distance that wireless messages have ever traveled in the United States.

Messages of congratulation were exchanged by President D. R. Francis and Gov. Richard Yates, Mayor Devereaux of Springfield and Mayor Wells of St. Louis, Col. Charles F. Mills and Thomas G. Gregory, Secretary of State James A. Rose and H. M. Dunlop, President of the Illinois World's Fair Commission, and Frederick A. Busse and Walter Williams of the Missouri Commission.

The operator at the fair, F. E. Butler, did not even know where the receiving station at Springfield was. He was simply told to send a message to Springfield, and he shot it off the tower. It was caught at Springfield and the answer came back. After that messages flew back and forth rapidly.

Herbert Kelcey Plays in Trenton.

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 5.—Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon began their season in "Taps" to-night at the Taylor Opera House before a large audience. Clara, the only woman in the play, was impersonated by Effie Shannon, Mr. Kelcey playing the old disciplinarian with excellent effect. The cast further contains Albert Sackett, Paul Evereton, Robert Lorraine, and Charles Swickard, who made the adaptation from the German. Sam S. and Lee Shubert were among those present.

PORT ARTHUR USING GREAT NAVAL GUNS

Besiegers' Positions Shelled From a Mountain.

JAPANESE ARE REINFORCED

Division Arrives Under Lieut. Gen. Tatema—Heaps of Dead Left in Continuous Assaults.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—The Che-Foo correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says the Russians have mounted two 12-inch naval guns on Parapoloschne Mountains, close to the City of Port Arthur, from which they are shelling the Japanese positions.

The correspondent says that the Eighth Japanese Division, under Lieut. Gen. Tatema, the eminent strategist, has arrived at Dalny to reinforce the besiegers.

[A division numbers between 15,000 and 20,000 men.]

CHE-FOO, Sept. 5.—The second general assault on Port Arthur assumed crushing proportions Aug. 27 and continued unabated until the morning of Aug. 31, when the Japanese retired everywhere except from Pali-Chuang, which they have apparently firmly secured. This information comes from a Chinese messenger sent to Port Arthur by The Associated Press, and it confirms previous fragmentary advices.

The messenger adds that Itzshan was reattacked Aug. 30 with great fury, but the Japanese were unable to secure a position. Another Chinese who departed from Port Arthur Sept. 2 says that a fierce assault was made on the left flank at 3 o'clock in the morning of that day. The assault lasted until 6 A. M., when the Japanese retired. The bombardment then recommenced, the Japanese firing chiefly from Suishi-Ying and Pali-Chuang, the Russians from Antszshan.

The Japanese losses, according to the Russian estimate, were 8,000 during the four days from Aug. 27 to Aug. 31. The Russian losses are placed at 3,000. During the assault shells from the field guns and rifle bullets fell in the city. The Russian ships in the harbor participated occasionally in the firing.

A reliable authority in touch with events at Port Arthur declares that a week ago the garrison numbered approximately 15,000. Accepting the Chinese report of the recent losses, the efficient men now number 12,000.

The past week's advices confirm previous deductions that the Japanese are bending their fiercest energy to secure an ingress along the railroad. Itzshan, Rhlungshan, Palungshan, Antszshan, and other positions frequently mentioned, sustaining the most desperate and repeated assaults and bombardments, all directly or indirectly block the plan of the Japanese.

Following the terrific bombardment of the fortress for the five days ending Sept. 1, heaps of Japanese bodies, it is said, were removed by the Chinese under orders given by the Port Arthur authorities.

The Japanese now expect two months or possibly more fighting, it is said, before the fortress is taken. They give the garrison no rest. Assaults no sooner cease than the artillery increases its thunder.

The garrison is said to be greatly worn and weary, but determined to continue resistance, always hoping that Gen. Kuropatkin will soon gain sufficient strength to come to their relief. The Russians in Che-Foo fear that the recent Japanese victory at Liao-Yang will have a depressing effect on the Port Arthur garrison when they learn of it. When this information will reach them is uncertain, as the Japanese blockade is very tight.

BATTLESHIP JUST RAN AWAY.

Foreign Naval Officers Find the Czarevitch Was Well Able to Fight.

TSING-TAU, Sept. 5.—A correspondent of The Associated Press accompanied several Italian naval officers upon an inspection to-day of the Russian battleship Czarevitch, which was in the fight with Admiral Togo's fleet off Port Arthur on Aug. 10, after which she sought refuge at this port, where she was subsequently dismantled.

At first sight the Czarevitch seemed a total wreck, but on further examination this appearance was found to be due to the immense quantity of debris which had not been cleared away.

The smokestacks of the battleship are riddled. In one of them is a hole seventeen feet by twelve. The bridge is completely wrecked. The large guns were struck repeatedly but they were not damaged. The Japanese projectiles made two holes below the Czarevitch's water line, but these were easily stopped up. The finely paneled woodwork in the officers' quarters was badly splintered. No fires started on board the Russian battleship during the engagement.

The general opinion of those who made a close inspection was that the Czarevitch was far from incapacitated and that she was capable of inflicting heavy damage upon the enemy had she remained in the fight. She had plenty of amunition and coal on board. Her electric steering gear was shot away, but the hand and steam gears, with power for the latter, were not damaged.

Russian naval officers when questioned regarding the reported courtmartial of Rear Admiral Prince Ouktomsky for having disobeyed the order not to return to Port Arthur, said that the last order he signalled in the battle of Aug. 10 was:

"Remember the order of the Emperor; do not return to Port Arthur."

SHANGHAI, Sept. 5.—The crews of the Russian cruiser Askold and the torpedo boat destroyer Grozovol, which took refuge here after the naval battle off Port Arthur Aug. 10, and which subsequently were dismantled, will remain in China until the close of the war. They will be divided and sent to Tientsin, Chefoo, Hankow, and Foochow, the treaty ports where there are Russian consulates.

It has now been learned that the Askold had an unusual supply of ammunition on board when she came into this port. This amounted to 180 rounds for each of her large guns and a plentiful supply for her small guns.

BALTIC SQUADRON MAY NOT GO.

To Remain in European Waters If Port Arthur Falls.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 5.—It is reported that the Baltic Squadron will sail a week from date by way of the Mediterranean, but that it will not proceed to the Far East if Port Arthur falls.

PRESSING RUSSIA TO ANSWER.

United States Asks for Release of Ships' Cargoes.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 5.—Foreign Minister Lamsdorff is being pressed by Ambassador McCormick for an answer to the representations of the United States in regard to the cargoes of the Portland and Asiatic Line steamer Arabia and the British steamer Calchas, both captured by the Vladivostok Squadron, the latter while bound from Puget Sound for Japan. It is understood that the United States now goes to the extent of asking for the release of the cargoes.

The Foreign Office, however, is unable to give a definite response to the representations made pending the decision of the Commission which is examining the question of contraband of war. The Commission is not making much progress, owing to the position taken by the Grand Duke Alexander Mikhailovich, head of the Department of Mercantile Marine, and Grand Duke Alexis, the High Admiral, who are standing out against the American and British view of foodstuffs as conditional contraband.

They argue that if the contention is allowed it would be idle to attempt to stop contraband bound for Japan, as every pound of foodstuff, &c., which does not come under the head of absolute contraband, would be consigned to private firms or persons in Japan or else be sent to an intermediary port for transhipment. Count Lamsdorff and Prof. de Martens, (Professer of International Law at the University of St. Petersburg,) who is President of the Commission, are trying to overcome the objections of the Grand Dukes.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—At the State Department confirmation is obtained of the statement that this Government is asking for the release of the cargoes of the Arabia and Calchas.

The Calchas, though a British vessel, had an American cargo aboard. The State Department all along has contended that foodstuffs not directly consigned to the forces of a belligerent are not contraband of war, and has pressed this view on the Russian Government.

There are no recent developments in the case of the cargoes of the two steamers mentioned, and in view of the indecision of the Russian commission engaged in examining the question of contraband immediate action is not expected. The disposition of the high Russian officials, as viewed in Washington, seems to be to treat the matter of foodstuffs being contraband from the standpoint of policy rather than from the well-defined rules of international law.

CZAR RAISES JEWS' HOPES.

M. Leven, President of the Alliance Israelite, Discusses His Ukase.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 5.—M. N. Leven, President of the Alliance Israelite, with whom I had a conversation to-day on the subject of the reforms which the Czar has proclaimed for the amelioration of the condition of the Russian Jews, said the new regulations were little more than a hint of a better disposition.

They touched, as it were, only the hem of the garment of misery with which the Russian Jews had been invested by the cruel decrees of May, 1882, since intensified by Gen. Ignatieff. They were welcome, however, as the first step in the direction of a more comprehensive amelioration which the Czar seems to promise.

The majority of the disabilities affecting the Jews still subsist. One of the new dispensations, that affecting Jews who have served in the army, is not quite clear. If all Jews who have completed their military service or distinguished themselves as soldiers at any time are to be allowed to reside without restriction in any part of Russia this is a very appreciable gain; but if it only applies to men who have served in the present war it will be a very unfair adjustment, and as the right is not transmissible to their children it will help to dislocate families.

M. Leven says that the new scheme of reform is much less prompted by the Czar's joy at the birth of a son than by reports recently furnished by a certain number of Governors of provinces, who depicted the misery of the Jews in its true colors, which are of the blackest, and urged that the same common law rights should be given to the Jews as to other Russian subjects.

By The Associated Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 5.—The Imperial ukase extending the rights of residence and to engage in commercial and industrial pursuits to the higher class of educated Jews meets with favor both in the pro and anti Jewish press.

The Novosti, as spokesman of the Jews, hails it, together with the speech of Prince John Obolensky, Governor General of Finland, declaring that it is the purpose of Russia not to destroy Finnish rights, as meeting in a tranquillising spirit two burning questions—the treatment of the Jews and the frontier problem. It says the ukase ends the intricate and vexatious restrictions against the Jews introduced by Gen. Ignatieff when Minister of the Interior in 1882, and concludes with expressing the hope that it will be followed by the removal of the restrictions which have cut off the Jews from higher education.

The Novoe Vremya, anti-Jewish, in calling attention to the opening words of the ukase, "Having found it just to introduce certain changes prior to a general revision of the laws affecting Jews," says it shows the privileges now conferred are but the commencement of the removal of various restrictions on the Jewish race, and expresses the hope that the Jews in their turn will demonstrate their ability to gradually assimilate themselves with the native population and not make the privileges conferred on them the means of oppressing the common people, adding:

"Persons who enjoy authority among the Jews should exert all their influence in converting their co-religionists into worthy citizens."

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Capt. W. H. Brownson, Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy, has completed a thorough investigation of naval educational methods in Great Britain and will sail Saturday for New York.

He said this afternoon that it was gratifying to find that Great Britain was adopting the American system of education, especially as that system had previously been criticised by the British service and had even been condemned by some American retired officers.

NATHAN STRAUS ROUSES SICKLES'S LOVE OF WAR

Expression of a Hope of Universal Peace the Provocative.

GENERAL CALLS WAR ORDAINED

Nation Unwilling to Fight Loses Respect He Declares at Monument Ceremony.

The cornerstone of the monument to be erected in Salem Fields Cemetery, Cypress Hills, L. I., in honor of Jews who lost their lives in the defense of the Union during the civil war, was laid yesterday. Nathan Straus, Chairman of the Citizens' Auxiliary Committee of the Hebrew Union Veteran Association, which is erecting the monument, presided over the exercises.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Straus referred to "a time when war will be reckoned a survival of barbarism." This brought a protest from Gen. Sickles, who lost a leg at Gettysburg. The General declared that "we have had wars since the world began, and always will have wars." His words were greeted with bursts of applause.

"We have gathered here," said Mr. Straus, "to do honor to the valiant Jewish soldiers who laid down their lives in their country's service. His detractors have taunted the Jew with being a man without a country. This monument for which we lay the cornerstone to-day will be a perpetual reminder that the fire of American patriotism has burned nowhere more brightly than in Jewish hearts.

"But, ready as we shall always be to bear arms in our country's service, when the die of war has been cast and the call has gone forth to rally round the flag, our influence as citizens will be steadily exerted to keep this Nation out of needless strife. I think I have your sympathy and approval in visiting with sweeping condemnation all who seek to embroil the country in foreign quarrels or who follow a line of policy that leads to bloodshed. I hold that with the people, and the people alone, should rest the issue of peace or war. I deny the right of any ruler or any Government to sacrifice human lives in pursuit of ambitions in which the people have no share.

"In erecting a monument to the victims of war, let our protest be all the more emphatic against submitting differences between our country and another to the brutal ordeal of combat. Surely there must come a time in the progress of our civilization when war will be reckoned a survival of barbarism, when it will be possible in all national quarrels to invoke the rule of right instead of might."

The gathering was little prepared for Gen. Sickles's answer to Mr. Straus's denunciation of war. He said he was not well enough to get on his feet and address the assemblage, and so would remain seated while he spoke.

"Although we are assembled in a cemetery," continued Gen. Sickles, "this is not a funereal occasion. Their death was a glorious one. No death is more glorious than death for one's country. I know many of us think with our Chairman, Mr. Straus, that wars are dreadful things, but we have had wars since the world began, and we shall always have wars.

"In the Providence of God war was ordained, and the human race will always fight for what it loves. This Nation was founded through a war with England. Would England and George III. have agreed to arbitration and let us found an independent Government? No, we have liberty because our fathers fought seven years for independence, and we will always have to fight to maintain our freedom. So it was with our civil war, that caused four years of awful sacrifice in blood, in lives, and in treasure, and therefore we are all the more resolved to preserve our Union.

"I hope the time will never come when we shall cease to be a martial people and be unwilling to take up arms in defense of our country. In the day we are unwilling to fight for our liberties we shall surely lose the respect of the world. As it is, the world acknowledges that we are one of the strongest and greatest nations on the globe."

Ferdinand Levy, who laid the cornerstone, said that with all Gen. Sickles's praise of war, Nathan Straus had done more to save the lives of the children of New York than the greatest warrior that had ever lived.

"Yes," Gen. Sickles interposed, "he has saved them to fight for their country." [Laughter.]

President Fornes of the Board of Aldermen, Gen. Horatio C. King, Commissioner Jacob W. Mack, and the Rev. Dr. Silverman also spoke. The Hebrew Union Veteran Association was present in uniform.

MARSEILLES STRIKE ALARMING.

Outlook Causes Apprehension in French Government Circles.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 5.—Real alarm is felt in Government circles as to the probable outcome of the strike at Marseilles, where the situation is becoming hourly more critical.

M. Charles Roux, President of the Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, told his colleagues this afternoon at a meeting of the Suez Canal Directors, that serious street disturbances were sure to break out in Marseilles before the end of the week, and that there was no knowing how the trouble would end.

His prediction made a profound impression.

A Question for Intending Piano Purchasers

"Which shall I buy—a piano that can be played in one way only, or a piano that can be played in TWO ways?"

THERE are to-day two recognized ways of playing the piano: First, with the human fingers. Second, by means of the Pianola.

The Pianola Piano is a new type of piano which combines both methods in a single compact instrument. The Pianola instead of being, as heretofore, an outside attachment, has been built into the piano itself. Thus there is nothing to move up in front of the key-board. To change from hand-playing to Pianola-playing requires only a second or two. When used for hand-playing there is scarcely an indication that the instrument is not the usual model of upright piano. No one who aims to keep abreast of the times should fail to see this most remarkable of modern musical inventions. The Pianola Piano is now being demonstrated on the main floor at Aeolian Hall. All are invited to call.

Prices $500 to $1,000. Catalog sent upon request.

summoned, and twenty minutes later the conference broke up. Secretary Johnson would only say that as the result of a message just received from Mr. Belmont another conference would be held at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon at 120 Broadway. Vice Grand Master Wilson of the Brotherhood of Firemen, said:

"We desire to have a clearer interpretation placed upon certain propositions made by the company, as there are some points that are not clear in the communication sent to us by the Interborough. In a situation like this it is of vital importance that no misconstruction be placed on terms to be considered. Phraseology is of the greatest importance. One of the questions that we are not entirely clear on is in relation to overtime pay. So we have asked another conference with Mr. Belmont and a time for it has been arranged. I cannot predict the result or foreshadow what action we may take."

President Belmont in the morning saw officers of the Interborough at his home in Thirty-ninth Street, and in the afternoon he was at the Park Row Building, and later at the Western Union Building offices, where he conferred with Vice President Bryan, Superintendent Hedley, and Alfred Skitt. When he left, Mr. Belmont said that the Interborough Company had no statement to make.

Company Rushes Preparations.

The activity around the company's bureaus at 10 and 16 Dey Street, in the Western Union Building, where applications for motormen are being received, continue. The busiest man of all was James Farley, the Plattsburg strike breaker, who with F. H. Ward, his assistant, had offices near Mr. Bryan. Both mobilizing headquarters were under police guard, and thronged until far into the night. Each man applying at 10 Dey Street had a postal card bearing the instruction:

"Call at No. 10 Dey Street, nine o'clock Monday morning, one flight up. Bring this with you. Yours truly, James Farley."

At 16 Dey Street, Superintendent Morrison was engaged in examining men sent by Farley or Superintendent Hedley, and at Mr. Hedley's offices was a throng of eligible applicants who received notices to report for duty to H. Kelleher at the subway division at Ninety-sixth Street and Broadway, or a card for examination at 16 Dey Street. One of the strike breakers said that they had a regular organization, and that the men within call received $2.50 a day and expenses, whether called upon to serve in a strike crisis or not. Many of the applicants for jobs are men employed on the surface lines.

General Manager E. P. Bryan declined yesterday to discuss the situation. Superintendent Hedley said:

"If you have been sitting up nights waiting for a strike you may as well go home to bed."

He evaded a question as to a report that non-union crews were to be placed on all the elevated trains, so that they would be ready in case a strike was suddenly called. He said that the work of training men as an emergency precaution was progressing satisfactorily.

Eugene V. Debs, the labor leader, will be in the city to-day. Members of the trainmen's, engineers', and firemen's organizations said that he would not figure in the situation. Charles J. Johnson, who will be a local representative at the National Convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen in Buffalo, on Sept. 20, said last night:

"In case of a strike I am sure it will be of short duration. The trend of public opinion would show in twenty-four hours. We are alive to the fact that we must win promptly or not at all. Public opinion will be a factor. But if we strike not a stone will be left unturned to tie up every traffic transit interest in this city."

500 Emergency Men for Elevated.

It was said yesterday that the Interborough Company had 500 more men on its payrolls than will be needed in the subway. An officer of the company said that already 300 of them were far enough advanced to be placed in charge of trains on the elevated. The other 200, he said, would be employed as guards and ticket agents. As for switchmen, it was said thirty-five experienced men had been employed.

For the purpose of making a test of what could be done in case of an emergency, trains were operated all day long in the tunnel, running between Ninety-sixth Street and the City Hall. The trains were made up of ten cars, each equipped with an experienced motorman. Mr. Merritt, who had charge of the work, when asked whether all the men hired yesterday were employed for a possible emergency, refused to reply.

One of the newly employed men said that all the men would report for work at 7 o'clock this morning, and were now on the payroll. About 200 of them were held in the tunnel on "reserve duty," whatever that may mean. While on reserve duty they were kept busy operating trains and familiarizing themselves with the work. They were told to remain on duty for twelve hours. This means that they will continue to run subway trains until 7 o'clock this morning. In the meantime the work of taking in more men went on all night. The men came after 7 o'clock at the rate of fifty an hour.

Men's $3.25 Kneipp linen underwear, $1.50.

POSITIVELY the last sale of the season of the world famous Kneipp linen mesh underwear for men at less than half regular prices—$3.25 and $3.50—starts to-day, when we will place on sale 1,680 Fall-weight garments at the sensationally low price of $1.50. It's your last opportunity to purchase the underwear famed for its health-giving properties at less than half regular prices. Physicians, athletes and health advocates throughout the world wear and recommend Kneipp linen mesh underwear. The linen mesh allows the pores of the skin to remain open. It is not clingy, but distributes perspiration perfectly, keeping the body healthy and comfortable at all times. Main Floor.

Every garment is made in Denmark from Irish linen yarns. In this particular lot, however, there is a tiny lisle thread and the makers refused to allow a single garment to go into the regular stock, as they require every garment in regular stocks to be of pure linen, although they admit that this lisle thread does not in the least impair the wearing or health-giving qualities.

Women's Wraps
From Abroad

Last week we received a very fine collection of foreign Coats and Capes for women. There has been so much uncertainty as to authentic styles, in the minds of American manufacturers, that considerable interest has been shown in these garments by people in the trade as well as the women directly interested. These coats will give definite direction to our own designers, and women who are interested in matters of fashion will be glad to secure these first original garments, particularly as they are sold at very reasonable prices.

The collection includes Havelocks, Dolmans, Capes and the new Inverness Cape Coats, in lengths from 30 to 42 inches. Some have loose, others partly fitted backs. Sleeves are quite large, in harmony with the large sleeves of the new Autumn dresses. The materials are mostly Scotch and English mixtures of very dignified and impressive character. Many of the fabrics are double-faced. The new olive mixtures in meltons and coverts are of the smart things of the season. Many of the coats show trimmings of leather in the piping and inlaid collars and cuffs.

There is a very large and interesting variety in the collection, which presents all the radical new style changes so far shown. Prices $13.50 to $50. Second floor, Broadway.

This September China Sale
Brings Vast Stocks of Fresh New Goods

This WANAMAKER trade event is a tremendous success. It is caused by several different and sufficient reasons. There never was, and there is not today, an approximate imitation of it. It is distinctive by several characteristics that appeal to women of good tastes who would not sacrifice their artistic ideas for small economies.

The chiefest feature of the sale is the fact that it is almost entirely given to fine new wares that have been made to our order, in the choicest patterns and decorations that we could select.

The very largeness of the movement brings such variety as is to be found in no other store. It is the largest and most unusual showing of the newest and most beautiful wares, imported and domestic, sold at one-half under price. Equally choice and beautiful as the best wares that could be found at the full price. This morning this fine display, in all its fullness, awaits your selection.

TRYING TO FIX BLAME FOR TENEMENT FIRE

Inquest on Attorney Street Disaster to be Held Soon.

DEATH LIST GROWS TO FIFTEEN

Fire Chief Croker Says Fire Escapes Were Not Anchored Properly—Rubbish Found on Balconies.

The investigations that are to be made to fix, if possible, the responsibility for the disastrous tenement fire at 164 Attorney Street on Sunday morning, will begin in earnest this morning. As yesterday was a holiday very little progress was made, the officials who are to conduct the investigations being out of town. Coroner Scholer, who has charge of the case, has written letters to Superintendent Hopper of the Building Department and Tenement House Commissioner Crain, requesting that they begin a thorough investigation to-day and report the result to him at the very earliest opportunity for use at the inquest, which is to be held in about ten days.

Yesterday afternoon a seven-year-old boy, Solomon Kutner, died in Bellevue, bringing the total number of fatalities as a direct result of the fire to fifteen. Fireman Adamosky, who is in Gouverneur Hospital, and Pecha Zwirm, one of the tenants of the ill-fated building, who is in Bellevue, are not expected to live. The little boy, whose body was sent unidentified to the Morgue on Sunday, was identified yesterday as Morris Kutner, an elder brother of Solomon. The rest of the injured in the hospitals were reported as doing well.

Early yesterday morning Coroner Scholer, Chief Croker of the Fire Department, and several subordinates of the Building Department visited the scene of the fire and made a thorough inspection of the place.

"It is not for me," said Chief Croker, "to place the blame, but there is not the slightest doubt that somebody is to blame for allowing people to live in such a place. I examined the fire escapes and, to make sure of what I was about, I removed a piece of the inside paneling in one of the rooms to see whether or not the escapes were anchored inside the walls as required by law. I discovered that, instead of being anchored, they were simply stuck in, so to speak. Had they been properly and legally constructed none of my men would have been hurt, for the thing would have undoubtedly held together.

"However, I must say that the Building Department is not responsible for the fire escapes. That is up to the Tenement House Commission. The keeping of them free from incumbrances, so as to make egress and ingress easy, is the duty of the Fire and Police Departments. We can order them cleared, but the minute we turn our backs they are blocked again. If the police would issue the order I am sure they would be kept reasonably free of incumbrances. It is easy to see why it is impossible for the firemen to keep a vigilant watch on them. This throwing of rubbish and the placing of mattresses and pillows on fire escapes is a very dangerous thing, for I remember several instances where the flames have been carried several stories by the ignition of rubbish and combustible materials on the fire escape balconies."

Inspector Schmittberger, who is in command of the district in which the fire occurred, has the same opinion as Chief Croker about the placing of rubbish on and the using of fire-escape balconies for sleeping purposes. Yesterday he took measures to put a stop to it throughout his district.

Leon Sobel of 68 Edgecombe Avenue, the owner; Morris Levine of 115 Cannon Street, the lessee, and Henry Breiterman of 315 East Seventy-ninth Street, who, according to the Coroner, was the foreman in charge of the alterations that were being made on the house, all of whom were arrested on Sunday night, charged with criminal negligence, were arraigned before Magistrate Whitman, in the Essex Market Court yesterday morning. They were remanded to the custody of Coroner Scholer, who held Sobel in $5,000 bail, Levine in $3,000, and Breiterman in $1,000, to await the result of the inquest. All three furnished bail.

Later in the day Coroner Scholer said that he hoped in a few days to be ready to hold the hearing. He said that he had examined the fire escapes and found them literally littered with rubbish. He also commented on the fact that the fire escape balconies were "stuck into" instead of anchored to the walls. He said he would not discuss the prosecution of any persons who might possibly be held in the case. That was the duty of the District Attorney, he said, no representative of whose office, he added, had appeared at the hearing in the Essex Market Court yesterday. The Coroner said that this was because the day was a legal holiday.

Henry Breiterman was very indignant that he had been held in the case. He declared that he had nothing to do with the work, since Sobel did all his own building.

The funerals of several of the victims of the fire were held in the chapel in the Bellevue Morgue yesterday. It was said that Mr. Sobel sent word to friends of the stricken families that he would be glad to bury any of the dead whose survivors were too poor to defray the necessary expense. It was also said that he offered to give financial assistance to any of the survivors in need of help. A committee on the east side raised about $600 for the stricken families yesterday.

MAN AND WIFE ROUT POSSE.

Wild Flight of Two Missourians Through Nebraska.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Sept. 5.—Accompanied by his wife John G. Rhodes of Springfield, Mo., has eluded a posse of 200 angry farmers of Custer County, this State, for the past three days. At the town of Overton last Thursday Rhodes stole a team and buggy belonging to W. A. Crandall, who started in pursuit the following morning.

Rhodes and his wife were overtaken just as they were entering Big Canyon. As the pursuers approached they abandoned the team and took refuge in a sunflower patch from which they opened fire on the posse with a shotgun and revolver. No one was injured, but the fugitives succeeded in escaping from the covering and took a team and wagon from a boy driving along.

The posse followed in pursuit, growing in numbers all the time. In the course of a half mile Rhodes and wife twice traded teams with farmers passing by, each time taking a faster team than they gave.

KILLS MAN IN HIS VINEYARD.

Farmer Andre Fires on Thief Who Is Picking Grapes.

VINELAND, N. J., Sept. 5.—Philip Andre, a farmer of this place, shot and instantly killed Joseph Faulice, an Italian, early this morning. Andre had recently been troubled by thieves, who robbed his vineyard, and for the past week had kept a watch. Last night Andre heard a noise and grabbed his gun. The man, who proved to be Faulice, passed close to the farmer and then began gathering grapes. Andre raised his gun and fired, the entire charge striking the Italian in the head. After the shooting Andre informed the Coroner and the police of his act and was taken into custody.

Expert Blacksmith Hurt on Car.

NEW ROCHELLE, Sept. 5.—Two trolley cars on the Union Railway Line collided early this morning at the point where the Larchmont line turns off. The only passenger hurt was Patrick McInerny, a blacksmith. His nose was broken, his face was bruised, several of his teeth were knocked out, and his back was sprained. He is widely known to owners of fine horses as an expert.

UNIQUE PARADE WITH SCROLLS.

Moving of Jewish Congregation to New Home Attracts Crowd.

The east side yesterday saw a parade the duplicate of which, it is said, had never occurred before in this country. It was the occasion of the removal of the scrolls from the Synagogue of the Congregation Adath Jeschurin of Jasty, at 131 Hester Street, to the new synagogue of the congregation at 50-60 Rivington Street.

The parade went through nearly all of the streets that lie between Hester and Rivington Streets. Three hundred policemen under command of Inspector Schmittberger escorted the marchers to see that no disorder occurred in the ranks of the thousands of onlookers, but there was not the slightest sign of disorder in the entire four hours that the ceremony took up.

The parade was led by a band, which was immediately followed by an open carriage drawn by two magnificent horses. In the carriage were two young men of the congregation, each holding a staff, from which waved the white and blue flag of Zion. Each of two other young men held a gorgeous cushion, on which rested a key of solid gold. Next were eight coaches, in each of which were four members of the congregation, each member carrying two scrolls. Then came a thousand members of the congregation on foot, walking in fours.

Another band led a second division, in which were carriages containing the President and three Vice Presidents of the congregation, and then twenty coaches, in which were seated the members of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the congregation.

Arriving in front of the new synagogue, speeches were made on the stoop by President L. Berkowitz and A. Markowitz, one of the Vice Presidents, who presented the golden keys to Mr. Weisman, another officer of the congregation. The paraders then sang "The Star-Spangled Banner." Then the outer gate and the door were unlocked with the keys, and the members of the congregation filed into their new house of worship.

The services within were simple. A speech was made by Rabbi Conovitz congratulating the members on the beauty and the comfort of the new synagogue. The meeting ended with the singing of "Home, Sweet Home." The crowd which followed the carriages and the marchers numbered 10,000, according to the police.

SEVERAL SEE WOMAN SUICIDE.

Apparently Recognize Girl Who Killed Herself in Park.

Mystery surrounds the identity of a young woman whose body is now lying in the Morgue. The body has been viewed in the past few days by several persons, all of whom seem to have recognized her, but who refused to make the identification public or to give their own names.

The young woman was found on Friday lying on the ground in Central Park. She was removed to the Presbyterian Hospital, where she died shortly after. She had taken poison from a bottle which was found beside her. In her hand was a note which read: "J. R.—Don't forget what you have done to me. M. K."

Last night two women and a man, who, judging from appearances are well to do, visited the Morgue and looked at the body. The women were overcome and the man was visibly agitated. They refused to give their names, and left the Morgue at once. A few hours later a man thirty years old walked into the Morgue and looked at the body.

When he saw it he put his hands to his face and sobbed bitterly. "That's all," he said to the keeper, and he left the building. He took a cab and drove over to and up Fifth Avenue.

He had not been away an hour when two more women, both well dressed, visited the Morgue and asked to be allowed to see the same body. They seemed to be mother and daughter. They looked on the face of the dead woman for a moment, and then each looked into the eyes of the other, as if to say that the dead woman was the one for whom they looked.

They asked the keeper how long bodies were kept at the Morgue, and said that to-day some one would call and identify the woman. They said that they did not wish to have their names mentioned at all.

SIMEON FORD'S AUTO HELD UP.

Port Chester Police with Stop Watches Bag Fourteen Speeders.

PORT CHESTER, Sept. 5.—The police measured a strip just one-eighth of a mile long on the Boston Post Road on Saturday. Yesterday and to-day they operated stop watches at each end of the section and caught fourteen automobiles exceeding the speed limit. Justice Wilcox fined each of the offenders $10 and gave warning that the next time the fines would be heavier. He also announced that they must be careful in all parts of the town, as the police would shift their place of working.

All but two of the chauffeurs caught were local men. Col. A. A. Pope's son was caught with one of his father's machines. That machine did the measured course in sixteen seconds. James Hunt, the runner of Simeon Ford's machine, a foreign-built affair, made the best time recorded by the police, as he went the distance in a shade better than fifteen seconds, and it looked as if it would be impossible to stop him, but he slowed down and stopped when signaled to do so. Neither he nor Mr. Pope disputed the police claim, and paid their fines without protest.

DOCKERY ACTS ON BULLFIGHTS

Governor Sends Attorney General to Stop Them—Sheriff May Lose His Job.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 5.—Two more bull fights were held in the arena, just outside the city limits where the first performance was given, yesterday afternoon. This was done in spite of vigorous protests from Gov. Dockery, who had ordered Sheriff Hencken of St. Louis County to prevent the exhibition.

This morning, on reading an account of yesterday's performance, the Governor telegraphed both the Sheriff and the Prosecuting Attorney demanding an explanation. The Prosecuting Attorney is absent from the State, and the Sheriff was too busy to answer, so Gov. Dockery has dispatched Attorney General Crow to the scene to take such legal steps as are necessary to prevent repetitions of the offense.

It is reported that the Attorney General will seek an injunction, and that an effort may be made to oust Sheriff Hencken from office.

KAISER'S SURGEON HERE.

Prof. Orth to be Entertained by Pupils and the President.

Prof. Johannis Orth and Mrs. Orth were passengers on the steamship Zeeland, which arrived here yesterday from Antwerp. Prof. Orth comes here purely on pleasure. He will be entertained by President Roosevelt at the White House, and by medical men in almost every large city in the country. Prof. Orth was called to the University of Berlin by the faculty of that institution to take the chair left vacant by the death of Prof. Virchow. He is considered one of the most eminent pathologists in Europe. He was the chief physician in the operations performed some time ago on Emperor William's throat.

Prof. Orth was met by Prof. Thomas Cullen of Johns Hopkins University, and Dr. Paul M. Pilcher of Brooklyn, two of his former pupils. Before the professor returns to Germany a dinner will be given in his honor by some of his former pupils, of whom there are a great many in America.

Kept Wedding Secret a Year.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Sept. 5.—Isabella Wade and Lewis R. Conklin, both members of well-known families, announced to-day that they had been married a year ago at Jersey City by the Rev. Addison Moore. They had kept the wedding a secret. Mr. Conklin's mother died after the ceremony without knowing that her son was married.

FRIENDS OF PARKER DECLARE FOR CULLEN

Hill's Slate May Be Broken, If He Won't Recede.

NO PREFERENCE FOR WERNER

Republican Judge's Willingness to Run Against Judge Gray Two Years Ago Urged Against Him.

Friends of Judge Parker declared last night that there would be absolutely no question over the Democratic State Convention's indorsing the candidacy of Judge Edgar M. Cullen of Brooklyn for Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, if the Republican Convention, which meets a week ahead of the Democratic gathering, places the Cullen and Werner ticket in nomination. As to the indorsement of Judge Werner, however, it is said that Judge Parker will not take any stand to sway the judgment of the leaders one way or another.

Information to this effect was brought to town yesterday by one of Judge Parker's closest friends. Nearly a week ago it was announced that appeals had been made to Judge Parker to advise against the Hill plan to decline to indorse the Cullen and Werner ticket if the Republicans place it in the field, as appears most likely. It was urged upon him that to ignore the Republican Convention's action in naming Cullen, a Democrat, for Chief Judge, and Werner, a Republican, for Associate Judge, would be to allow the Democratic managers to fall into a political trap which had been set for them by Governor-Chairman Odell and to give the Republican campaign managers campaign material on the subject of a partisan judiciary. That these appeals found response in the mind of Judge Parker was the assertion made last night by the persons who made the appeals to the Presidential candidate.

According to the information they gave out Judge Parker has let his friends and managers know that he would regard the non-indorsement of Judge Cullen's nomination by the Republicans as a grave political error. Because of this stand the Democratic managers and Parker friends said they thought it more than likely the pressure on Senator Hill before the State Convention meets would be so great that Hill would have to recede from his plan to nominate Justice D. Cady Herrick for Chief Judge and Attorney General John Cunneen for Associate Judge.

In addition, however, it was strongly stated that if Senator Hill would not recede from his position during the conferences preliminary to the holding of the State Convention friends of Parker would be more than likely anyway to go ahead and defeat the Hill slate.

Among all the Democratic managers there is considerable feeling against Judge Werner personally. Many Democrats feel that Judge Werner's action two years ago in becoming a candidate for the Court of Appeals against Judge John Clinton Gray, when the latter had been nominated for a second term on the bench, and when traditions generally demanded a unanimous election, removed him from the non-partisan judicial class.

MAY START SHEPARD BOOM.

Anti-McCarren Men to Decide Whether to Ignore Caucus.

Brooklyn opponents of Senator McCarren declared last night that there was a movement on foot to pledge the fifteen anti-McCarren delegates to the State Convention to support Edward M. Shepard for the Democratic nomination for Governor. There will be a conference of the leaders of the five anti-McCarren districts to-night for the purpose of laying out a plan of action, and there is a possibility of launching the Shepard boom then.

This step is being considered in order to kill off the candidacy of Controller Grout, who has the backing of Senator McCarren, and there is more than a suggestion that the action, if taken, will be at the instigation of Charles F. Murphy and Tammany Hall.

When McCarren carried sixteen out of the twenty-one Kings County districts at the primaries it was believed he would control the entire county delegation of sixty-three votes in the State Convention, under the unit rule. Among the anti-McCarren district leaders, however, there is a disposition to decline to enter the county caucus, and thus be free to vote as they please and still preserve their regularity. This was done by the three Kehoe delegates from the Ninth District of Kings County before the State Convention in Albany last Spring, and as a result Kehoe held his three delegates in line with Tammany against the Hill-McCarren programme of instructing the State delegation to St. Louis for the nomination of Judge Parker.

At to-night's conference of the five anti-McCarren district leaders it will be decided whether or not the delegates from these five districts shall enter the caucus. In political circles last night it was freely suggested that Tammany men wanted to see Shepard nominated for Governor anyway, and that this method of getting Mr. Shepard's name before the convention had been decided upon as being the best to dissociate Mr. Shepard and Tammany.

One of the party managers at State Headquarters said last night that he believed Tammany was for Shepard, and that the only reason the Tammany men have been booming George M. Palmer of Schoharie for the nomination during the last few days was to kill off the up-State boom for John B. Stanchfield. He said that the Palmer strength, whatever it amounted to in the convention, might easily be thrown by Tammany to Mr. Shepard, giving Mr. Palmer in return the nomination for Lieutenant Governor or Attorney General.

In addition to the kindly feelings that exist in Tammany Hall toward Mr. Shepard, attention is also called to the fact that Mr. Shepard is especially popular at National Headquarters, where one of his best friends, and a close associate in the affairs of the old Shepard Democracy in Brooklyn, George Foster Peabody, is Treasurer of the National Committee. Also, Mr. Shepard has been doing important service for the Parker and Davis ticket through his speech making in Vermont and Maine.

SHOT WIFE AND HIMSELF.

Schmidt Bought Revolver and Told Her He Would Do It.

Gorge Schmidt tried to kill his life yesterday afternoon in their apartments at 886 Broadway, Williamsburg, and then attempted suicide by shooting himself. Both were removed to the German Hospital, where it was said last night that Schmidt had little chance of recovery. The wife will recover.

Schmidt purchased a revolver on Saturday and told his wife that he was going to kill her and himself. Believing that her husband's mind was affected, Mrs. Schmidt had arranged to have him removed to a hospital to-day.

Schmidt quarreled with her all day yesterday, and late in the afternoon drew the revolver and told his wife her time had come. He fired three shots, the first striking a corset steel, the second entering the breast over the heart, and the third entering the left arm. When Policeman Woessner reached the apartments he found Schmidt staggering about the kitchen with a bullet wound in the abdomen.

ODELL SUMMONS LEADERS.

Despite His Open Convention Idea, Higgins Is Boomed.

There will be a gathering of State officials at the Fifth Avenue Hotel to-morrow, notice having been given that Governor-Chairman Odell desires to consult about the political situation. As Gov. Odell continues to assert that he will have no candidate for the nomination for Governor, the only inference which the Fifth Avenue Hotel politicians are able to draw from the prospective conference is that the Governor intends to do some missionary work with his subordinates in the hope that he will be able to convert them to his belief in the party wisdom of an open convention.

The general expectation was, however, that they would prove altogether intractable and depart declaring that the convention's work was cut out for it, so far, at least, as the Governorship was concerned, and that there was nothing to do but nominate Lieut. Gov. Higgins. Such has been the disposition of nearly all the Governor's friends, with whom he has thus far labored to bring around to the open-convention idea. Judging by the ill success he has had in that direction, his hold upon the organization would seem to be weakening, in the opinion of some close political observers.

The worst set-back yet received by the friends of the Governor who are urging Higgins, despite the embarrassment their declarations make for the Governor because of his being committed to an open convention, was given by the Lieutenant Governor's statement in Syracuse that his name would not be presented to the convention as a "factional candidate under any circumstances."

The interpretation of that announcement which the Platt men who are urging Woodruff gave was that "Higgins was afraid of the tag." They said that Higgins would rather lose the nomination than have it come to him as a gift from "The Tapeworm Club," because of his belief that so labeled he could not possibly win. If that continues to be his disposition, they were inclined to think that he probably would lose it, for the Platt men will be for Woodruff. What is more, they promise to stick.

It was said last night that the comments Gov. Odell had heard on the meeting of "The Tapeworm Club" at Shell Island last Saturday and the announcement of the club's intentions with respect to the State Convention had been of a character to give him apprehension. There was one way, it was said, in which the Governor could outgeneral the Platt men, and that would be by bringing about a deadlock in the convention, and then spring some man of his choosing as a compromise candidate. This could be done by a distribution of the votes which the Governor-Chairman and his friends will control.

The Assembly district conventions to select delegates to the State Convention will be held Thursday. Some of Mr. Woodruff's friends, notably Lemuel E. Quigg, have been busy among the Manhattan Republicans during the past few days, in the hope of having Woodruff delegates elected from some of the city districts. It is understood that they have had some satisfying assurances, but they have been handicapped by the fact that the word has been quietly passed to the Republican district leaders to send uninstructed delegations.

ROOSEVELT THE LIVELIEST.

So Says Depew—He Compares Hill and Patti Farewells.

The Republican campaign was opened yesterday in Queens Borough by Senator Depew and ex-Senator Thurston of Nebraska, who spoke at an outdoor meeting held in West End Park, Jamaica.

Senator Thurston ended his address with a song to illustrate a story he told.

Senator Depew was warmly greeted when introduced. He began by saying:

"I've been out to some country fairs recently. They have politicians at those fairs for several reasons, one of which is that it helps swell the gate receipts. It is good for the politicians, too, for it brings them in touch with the people. At one fair Gov. Hill was present one day, and I the next. I found that he was making the circuit, delivering his last dying address, because next January he is going to go down into the political sod—down, down, never to rise. But I've seen so many last appearances—I've been to five last Patti appearances, and others of similar sincerity. Gov. Hill is one of the shrewdest and ablest Democrats this State has ever produced. He sees the handwriting on the wall, and he likes to lead the procession.

"Two New Yorkers are running for President, both good friends of mine. One has sat on the bench for many years. The other has led the liveliest life ever lived in this country ever since he was weaned. One was known only in this State before he was mentioned for the nomination, while the other is the best known man in the world. The question is, is the unknown quantity the better man of the two? What are Judge Parker's views? No one has to ask what Theodore Roosevelt's views are. Editors of certain papers are disputing what Judge Parker meant in his letter of acceptance. They cannot agree what he means. When four trained editors can't find out from his letter what he means, how can plain people like us be expected to determine?

"Roosevelt leaves one in no doubt what he means. He isn't like the politician who takes you to the middle of a ten-acre lot and whispers in your ear, then returns and swears he didn't say it. He is different from any public man I ever knew, and I've been in politics going on ten years. I use the number ten now that I'm married. I find my wife likes it."

CORTELYOU SEES PRESIDENT.

Chairman at Oyster Bay to Talk Over Campaign Details.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Sept. 5.—National Chairman George B. Cortelyou was in conference with President Roosevelt at Sagamore Hill to-night. Mr. Cortelyou arrived here at 5:43 o'clock from New York, and went direct to the President's home. He said he had come to Oyster Bay to take up with the President some details of the campaign, and would remain at Sagamore Hill until to-morrow morning, when he expects to return to New York.

Francis E. Leupp, who some time ago was commissioned by the President to make an investigation into certain Indian affairs, made a verbal report of his work to Mr. Roosevelt to-day.

The President passed the day quietly. In the afternoon he and his sons went for a long row on the bay.

C. H. Mackay Heads Roslyn Republican Club.

ROSLYN, L. I., Sept. 5.—Clarence H. Mackay to-day accepted the Presidency of the Roslyn Republican Campaign Club, to which he was elected at a meeting of the club which was held at the Mansion House on Saturday night. One hundred members have been enrolled so far. Justice of the Peace William C. Remsen has been elected Secretary.

PARKER'S O. K. ON DOCUMENTS.

Democratic Campaign Literature Submitted to Him for Approval.

ESOPUS, N. Y., Sept. 5.—Documents to be issued under the auspices of the Democratic National Committee will soon be in circulation, and a large number of these will be stamped with the approval of Judge Parker.

George F. Parker, who is in charge of the literary bureau at National Headquarters, a place he also filled in the Cleveland campaign in 1892, spent a few hours to-day at Rosemont going over with the candidate much of the literature to be put out.

VISITING ENGINEERS RIDE THROUGH SUBWAY

Make a Fair Load for Regular Train of Eight Cars.

ARE FAVORABLY IMPRESSED

Educational Features of the Tunnel Discovered—No Distractions for the Reader and the Talker.

The foreign electrical engineers on their way to St. Louis, their wives, and some New York friends and their wives, rode through the subway from the City Hall to Fifty-ninth Street yesterday. They made a complete load for a train of eight cars—eighty to a car. It was to all intents and purposes a regular train such as all New York will be using soon.

One discovery made is that there is apt to be more talking in the subway than on the elevated. This was exemplified in the trip of yesterday. There is not enough variety in the stations and pillars to take up one's attention. The fact that reading is likely to be one of the chief diversions in the subway was made evident from the fact that several of the engineers kept open the books which they carried. There is illumination enough, even with most of the lights in the tunnel itself not yet going. The cars themselves are brilliantly illumined.

That the women passengers felt perfectly at ease in the subway cars was made evident from the fact that quartets of them who occupied the familiar seats facing one another kept up a continual chatter all the way up from the City Hall to Fifty-ninth Street.

It was observed by most of the passengers who live in the city that the narrow and crowded feeling which was expected is not present. The width of the stations seems to obviate that. The great width of the stations at Bleecker, at Twenty-third Street, at Forty-second Street, and of course at the circle at Fifty-ninth Street was particularly observed. Those who have ridden in the London underground road said that the air in the subway here was particularly pure. In spite of this expressed opinion others who rode in the subway yesterday thought the air close and stuffy. The officials of the road met this statement with a smile of confidence, explaining that at every station save the one at City Hall where the passengers of yesterday got in, and that at the circle, was as yet boarded up, boarded up almost airtight, and that, were these places open, a trouble which was noticed and spoken of on a previous trip would be observed, namely, that the tunnel was too cool. Several of those who had taken the trip on a previous occasion took light overcoats along, but kept them hanging on their arms.

The train moved along practically noiselessly—with less noise, certainly, than do the elevated cars.

The work in the tunnel seems to the ordinary observer to be almost complete save for the decorative part of it. Many of the posts remain unpainted. Just at this time some finishing touches are being made on the platform at Forty-second Street, and L. B. Stillwell, electrical director of the Subway Construction Company, thought at first yesterday that the trip would have to be ended at that point, but when the train arrived there it halted merely for a minute and went on to Fifty-ninth Street.

The motive power used in propelling the train yesterday through the third rail was equal to about 2,000 horse power. Alexander McKenzie, who has served an apprenticeship on the Manhattan "L," handled the motor, and Edward E. Cadwell was the conductor. There was a full crew.

The engineers who were pressed for an opinion as to what they thought of the subway said that they had hardly seen enough of it to express an opinion of its general construction. What they had seen of it, they said, impressed them favorably.

Upon leaving the subway at Fifty-ninth Street, the engineers walked to the Interborough power house at Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Streets and Eleventh Avenue. The engineers seemed to take more interest in the plant than they had in the tunnel itself. They said that it was greater in the size of the units than anything in Europe, and less likely to breakdowns than they knew of. They were greatly impressed with the whole plant.

After leaving this power house the visitors were taken to the King's Bridge power house. On the way they looked at the fireboat Abram S. Hewitt in operation. They were then taken by boat to the power houses of the Metropolitan Road, at Seventy-fourth Street, and to the new Edison electric light plant at Thirty-eighth Street.

In the evening a banquet was given to the visiting engineers at the Waldorf-Astoria by the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. President Fornes of the Aldermen welcomed the visitors. The other speakers were Bion J. Arnold, Robert Kaye Gray, Prof. Moise Ascoll, Wilhelm von Siemens, Prof. Elihu Thomson, Prof. John Perry, C. A. Coffin, President of the General Electric Company, and John W. Lieb, Jr.

WOULD SHOW COST OF LIVING.

Taggart Sends Blank Schedules to All Democratic Editors.

Believing that the increased cost of living under a Republican Administration constitutes one of the strongest arguments which can be presented to the voters, the Democratic National Committee has adopted a plan to make this argument local and concrete.

The editor is requested to retain one copy of the schedule and publish the comparisons which it shows, with such comments as he may see fit, and return the other copy to the National Committee.

The schedule contains a list of all articles of food, clothing, and furnishings likely to be used in the average household. Opposite each article is a column in which to set down the price charged for the article in August or September, 1898, and the price charged for the same article in the same months of the present year.

A third column is for the name and address of the merchant or dealer quoting the prices. In his letter of instructions to the editors as to how the information is to be compiled Chairman Taggart says: "It will usually appear that the high prices now in force yield less profit to the retail dealers than the lower prices of six years ago, and this fact may well be given prominence."

AHEARN'S DISTRICT FETE.

5,000 Men March Behind the Manhattan Borough President.

Five thousand followers of Borough President John F. Ahearn, Tammany leader in the Fourth Assembly District, turned out yesterday to make the annual outing of the John F. Ahearn Association one of the greatest affairs of the kind ever held on the east side.

The crowd gathered by 9 o'clock in front of the club rooms of the Ahearn Association at 290 East Broadway, and then, after a march through the district, embarked at Pier 49, East River, for Witzel's Point View Grove, at College Point. The Sixty-ninth Regiment Band, Raskin's Band, and the New Era Band were in the parade, as also was the Seventy-first Regiment Fife and Drum Corps. Borough President Ahearn marched near the head of the line, with several other district leaders and city office holders as an escort. On the arrival at the Grove breakfast was served, and then until 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon the day was given over to baseball and other sports. Charles F. Murphy was one of President Ahearn's guests.

When the steamer reached the foot of Market Street in the evening, the lines reformed, the bands started up, and there was a general parade again through the district, accompanied by a fireworks display all along the line. Lanterns and bunting decorated many of the buildings, in many cases lanterns being strung from side to side from the trees along East Broadway.

FIRE SWEEPS ROCKAWAY BEACH

Got Big Headway Before Firemen Arrived—Several Cottages Destroyed.

That section of Rockaway Beach, known as West Arverne, was nearly wiped out by fire shortly after noon yesterday, and at one time many handsome residences at Arverne were threatened.

The fire started in the rear of the Summer residence of Moe Levy, at 45 Dodge Avenue, and spread to the stable, which was consumed before the arrival of the Fire Department. The Levy cottage, three stories high, was completely destroyed, and a two-story frame cottage in the rear was also wrecked. The flames then jumped across the street to the three-story frame cottage of Alexander Unker. The flying sparks from the burning Unker cottage flew westward to 46 Division Avenue, which is in the rear. The flames spread along Division Avenue, and the flying embers ignited the framework of four other cottages.

The flames had a headway of fifteen minutes before an alarm was turned in, and considerable difficulty was experienced in getting to the plug of the fire hydrant nearest the flames. While working in the third story of the Levy cottage, a fireman named Young, a member of the Atlantic Engine Company, was overcome by smoke.

When the flames threatened to spread toward Arverne, Capt. Kreuscher sent several policemen to warn residents in that vicinity to be ready to vacate at a moment's notice. The loss was about $25,000.

New Yorker Dead in Two Feet of Water.

HUNTINGTON, L. I., Sept. 5.—William Grietelbach, twenty-one years of age, of 22 West Sixty-seventh Street, Manhattan, while crabbing in the millpond here yesterday, fell from a boat into two feet of water. His companions found that his head and shoulders had stuck in the mud, and when taken from the water he was dead, having been suffocated.

KILLED HIS 20-YEAR-OLD WIFE.

After Shooting Her, Drunken Farmhand Wept Over Her Body.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 5.—Jesse Baker, a farmhand living two miles from here, after indulging too freely during the Labor Day celebration, shot and instantly killed his twenty-year-old wife. He then shot at his wife's sister, but missed her. His mother-in-law, with Baker's child in her arms, tried to save her daughters, but Baker threw her and the child to the ground.

The shooting took place in the orchard of the family farm. Baker came from town and approached his wife with the announcement, "Myrtle, you must die." When last seen he was weeping over the body of his victim, and kissing her.

JAMAICA HOSPITAL OPEN.

St. Mary's Is One of the Finest on Long Island.

The new brick and stone pavilion of the St. Mary's Hospital at Shelton Avenue and Bay Street, Jamaica, was opened yesterday. Addresses were made by Vicar General McNamara and Deputy Police Commissioner Farrell. The new building, which has cost $75,000, is the finest hospital structure on Long Island outside of Brooklyn.

It is a three-story and basement structure, 116 by 34 feet, and will afford accommodation for seventy-five patients. The site allows for two more pavilions to be built and connected with the present building. The total capacity will then be 300.

Operation on Lion Tamer.

Surgeons yesterday amputated two fingers of Capt. "Jack" Bonavita, the animal tamer, who was injured by a lion at Coney Island five weeks ago. It is said that it may be necessary to amputate his hand.

THE RECIPROCITY WEDGE.

The Boston Chamber of Commerce has a Committee of One Hundred on Reciprocity. Some of its members are Democrats, for even in Boston business capacity is not the close monopoly of Republicans, but most of the members are Republicans, and these latter have issued a circular appeal to the voters of their party urging them to instruct their delegates to the Republican State Convention, which meets Oct. 6, to support the following resolution:

The Republicans of Massachusetts believe that measures should be taken for the enlargement of our trade with foreign countries, and especially with Canada and Newfoundland, by means of reciprocal treaties—a policy long recognized as sound Republican doctrine. Realizing, as President ROOSEVELT realized in his message to Congress in 1902, that no treaty can be made which may not affect injuriously some interest, even if it should conserve the greatest good of the greatest number of people, we favor reciprocal treaties "when," in the language of the President, "the minimum of damage done may be disregarded for the sake of the maximum of good accomplished."

It will be perceived that this resolution is in rank contradiction to the declaration of the National platform on the tariff. It urges reciprocity, even if some of the protected interests should be hurt. The National platform demanded that reciprocity should be deferred until it could be accomplished without injury to "any" protected interest—that is, until the Greek Kalends or some other date that cannot possibly arrive under the present arrangement of the solar system. The Boston business men and those of Massachusetts wish reciprocity as soon as they can get it, and they expect that those who have been enjoying unfair advantages from the present excessive tariff will have to give them up. They have also the ingenious hardihood to quote President ROOSEVELT in support of their demands, cruelly taking the language of his message to Congress in the Winter of 1902, when he was still in the fresh fervor of his admiration for the last words of President MCKINLEY, and before he had realized what a hard bargain the protectionists would drive with him in regard to the nomination. This action makes a most unusual situation, not without embarrassing elements for the President. It will be interesting to see how he will meet it in his formal letter of acceptance. In his speech at the time of his notification he stood with both feet on the National platform as to the tariff.

SIGNIFICANCE OF VERMONT.

Both sides are a little chary as to the interpretation they care to put on the returns from Vermont to-morrow. The Republican managers say that they do not expect a specially large plurality and will be quite content with 20,000. The Democrats say that they have made no particular exertions in the State, that they expect a light vote and no unusual figure for either party. As a matter of fact both parties have been working pretty hard in Vermont, and if there is a marked change the managers will be quick to recognize it.

The record of the past eight years is a little mixed. In 1896 the Republicans had a plurality of 40,000 on a light vote. In 1900 they had a plurality of less than 30,000 on about the same vote, and the same year their candidate for Governor won by 31,312 on a vote nearly 10,000 greater. The lowest plurality they have had on President in thirty years was in 1892, when Mr. CLEVELAND was elected, and the Republicans carried the State by only 21,669. That is at least a couple of thousand less than the average plurality for Governor for the last score of years. On the whole we should say that the Republican willingness to accept as satisfactory a plurality of 20,000 indicates some fear of the result. In every National election in which they have been successful since the close of the war they have commanded a higher plurality than that for Governor in September.

TRADE UNION BANKING.

The first Union Labor Bank has been incorporated as an Illinois State institution, and will establish itself in Chicago. It begins business with a capital of $200,000. What should be the characteristics of a Union Labor Bank different from any other bank is left to the imagination, but probably the incorporators have new views on this subject, and will proceed to carry them into application. The results will be instructive. Either they will follow the safe and sane methods of sound banking and succeed, or they will depart therefrom and put their capital and that of their depositors in jeopardy. If they elect the former course they will quickly alienate the sympathy of the leaders of union labor, who have held that the safeguards of legitimate banking were schemes devised by the rich to oppress the poor; if they depart from them far enough they are likely to have time for mature reflection in the cloistered recesses of Joliet, where more than one adventurous banker with original views of finance has retired for a somewhat protracted vacation.

Ventures of this character are in the highest degree educational, though it often happens that the price of tuition in the school of experience is high. However, the instruction is thorough. This is especially true of what may be learned of banking as a business by running a bank.

THE SINGLE-PHASE MOTOR.

Recent improvements in electrical apparatus applicable to the movement of surface cars, the value of which was established by tests on the Ballston extension of the Schenectady Railway, under the direction of the General Electric Company, have more than technical interest. They point to a rapid and profitable extension of the trolley system, and from this point of view have great interest for investors.

There are now in the United States about thirty thousand miles of electrically equipped surface railway, all operated by the direct current. The mechanism of the direct current is so far standardized as to make manufacturers reluctant to change, and by reason of this reluctance there are stretches of country between populous centres which cannot be developed owing to the fact that the promise of immediate business is not great enough to warrant the investment of capital needed to build railroads equipped for the direct current. An alternating-current equipment would be much cheaper, but it would require special rolling stock, since the motor mechanism of the direct current would not work if supplied with an alternating current. This would hitherto have meant a change of cars in passing from one system to the other, and the disadvantage of this would have more than offset the economy of the alternating-current installation. Hence, it has been figured out that with a less population than an average of 1,000 to the mile to be served, an electric road was not an attractive proposition from the banking point of view. It would have been different if the 66,000 electric surface cars in use at the present time could have been run further and further afield over extensions equipped with the less costly plant of the alternating system. This was long deemed impracticable, but the problem appears to have been solved by the single-phase motor referred to.

Assuming that the conclusions of the experts who have tested it are correct—which for the layman is a safe position—the importance of the single-phase motor will be appreciated when it is understood that an interurban passenger railroad may be equipped for the alternating current for an average cost 25 per cent. below that for the direct current, the saving being effected chiefly in conductors and rotary transformers. As the cost of the roads with the direct current installation averages about $80,000 per mile, it is not surprising that bankers hesitate to undertake the financing of such roads in thinly settled districts, on the hope of building up a traffic which is not "in sight." The great value of the single-phase motor is that a car equipped with it may be run with either the direct or the alternating current, and change from one to the other as it passes from the streets of a city into the open country or back again. The attainment of this result has been one of the objectives of electrical experimentation for years, and if reached in the device under consideration, which is said to work as well on a 200-volt alternating current as on a 600-volt direct current, its significance is certainly very great from the financial as well as the technical point of view, and with reference to steam as well as to street railways. The Railroad Gazette says of the experiments referred to above:

The operation of the Ballston compensated motor equipments will be watched by railway engineers with much interest, as their success will demonstrate the fitness of the alternating current motor for heavy suburban and interurban mixed service. The compensated motor, having demonstrated its fitness for traction work, opens up possibilities in converting main line steam roads which were closed to the direct-current motor and rotary converter combination on the score of first cost and cost of operation. The form of trolley suspension used on the Ballston line is capable of being operated at more than 2,000 volts, which, together with its excellent mechanical construction, helps to solve the question of current collection of heavy units at high speeds.

The result of this improvement should be to render practicable the construction of links in the broken chains of long-distance travel by electric roads. For example, only nineteen miles are now lacking in the continuity of trolley connection between New York City and Portland, Me. This is the gap between Kennebunk and York Beach. All the other connections are now in operation.

THE ARMY MANŒUVRES.

The manœuvres that began yesterday in Virginia will constitute the most extensive and important preparation for war in time of peace that has ever been witnessed in this country. Particularly they will constitute a test of the efficiency of the legislation to bring the militia of the country into closer touch with the regular army, the enactment of which was steadily urged and finally secured by Secretary ROOT. From the very beginning of his administration Mr. ROOT perceived and deplored the deficiencies in our system, if it could then have been called so, of National defense, and strove to remedy them. His efforts took shape in the General Staff bill and the Militia bill, which are likely to remain, so far as the reorganization of the army is concerned, the chief monuments of that administration.

It was Mr. ROOT's contention that the regular army could be in a great foreign war only a "first line" of defense, and that its main usefulness would in that case be to leaven as much as possible the lump of volunteer and amateur patriotism by which such a war would have at last to be fought. The civil war began early in 1861, but it was not until 1862 was well advanced that the United States acquired what could properly be called an army. Our unreadiness would have been fatal if we had had to do with a powerful enemy. Our salvation was due to the fact that our domestic enemy was equally unprepared. Our foreign wars have been fought exclusively by the regular army. The war of 1812 was on land inglorious to the point of disgrace, the regular army having at the beginning of it been reduced by "politics" to a lower moral level than it ever reached before or since. The Mexican war, thanks mainly, according to Gen. SCOTT, to the graduates of the Military Academy, and the war with Spain did the army the utmost credit. But our only great war was the civil war, and the effect of it upon the popular and the Congressional mind has been to encourage the delusion that a nation in arms could at once cope with a trained army. This delusion it is one of Mr. ROOT's signal merits that he set himself to explode. It still lingers, however, and the latest expression of it is the demand in the Democratic platform for a reduction of the army, although it is certain that, quite irrespective of the military needs of the Philippines, the actual army is inadequate whether for the increasingly pressing purposes of a National police, for a "first line" of defense, or for a phalanx which shall serve as school and model to the citizen soldiery.

The harmonious co-operation of the army with the organized militia is the object of the militia law which, by dint of Mr. ROOT's persistent urgency, has been enacted to supersede the absurd and obsolete law which had remained on the statute book for nearly a century. The greatest reform of all, the real nationalisation of the militia, was rendered impossible by the Constitution of the United States, which in this matter reflects the local jealousies and the jealousy of the Central Government which were so rife at the time of its adoption. The power granted to Congress "to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States," is in great part nullified by the addition "reserving to the States respectively the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress." Nothing could be more conducive to the efficiency of the militia of a State than to have an officer of the army in charge of its militia, an advantage which New York happens to possess by reason of the zeal and public spirit of Gen. ROE, but which should not be left to chance.

It would be very useful also if the umpires of joint manœuvres of the army and the National Guard were instructed, among other things, to report upon the efficiency of the officers of the Guard who come under their observation, and if these reports were accepted by the authorities of the Guard in the several States represented. Mr. ROOT's plan of an examination to be voluntarily taken by the officers of the militia went as far as the Constitution would warrant a Federal statute in going, and in fact it may be said that the Militia bill in general goes as far as it could go under the limitations of the Constitution toward securing such a co-operation as would be of the utmost benefit in time of war. It is the degree of co-operation actually attained under the new law that is to be tested during this week in Virginia.

MAJOR MARCHAND SPEAKS.

When, last April, Col. MARCHAND handed in his resignation to the French Minister of War (it was accepted with haste and conventional regrets) he prophetically remarked: "You shall hear from me again!" Speculation at once became rife as to the form of the threatened oral manifestation. His past was reviewed, but it offered no solution. MARCHAND, who had defied KITCHENER at Fashoda in 1898, who had toured across Siberia and returned with the interesting information that Russia was preparing to swallow Japan and that "Japanese Generals are still wanting in a knowledge of strategical movements," MARCHAND, who had been forbidden by the War Office to accept the Czar's polite invitation to join the staff of Gen. KUROPATKIN and had thrown up his commission on account of this refusal; MARCHAND the patriot, the darling of a France that had passed away and the "enfant terrible" of a Ministry which had hastened that passing—what did his words portend?

After four months of breathless suspense we know. MARCHAND has unbosomed himself in the columns of Le Figaro. For the first time he tells the world how he defied KITCHENER at Fashoda, and in those sudden, epigrammatic phrases which are the despair of foreigners. KITCHENER announced himself as the Sirdar of the Egyptian Army and MARCHAND as a Major in the French Army, who had been commanded to await orders at Fashoda; then they got down to business:

"I must plant the flag of his Highness the Khedive at Fashoda, Major."

"General, I am ready to hoist it myself on the village."

"On the fort, Major."

"I cannot allow that, General, for the French flag is there."

"But supposing my instructions prescribed the hoisting on the fort of his Highness the Khedive's flag?"

"I should be obliged to resist, General."

"Do you know, Major, that war between France and England might follow from this affair?"

To this question MARCHAND says he bowed, but made no reply. There is a dash of local color thrown in, and then the historian continues:

Gen. KITCHENER rose. He was very pale. I rose also. He cast his eye over his numerous flotilla, where his men, who mustered at least 2,000, were huddled together. Then he looked back toward our fort, on the summit of which bayonets could be seen glistening. After this mute inspection, the General, with a wide movement of his arm over his flotilla, and dropping his hand in the direction of our fort, said to me slowly: "Major, supremacy—"

"General, military supremacy can only be established by combat."

"You are right, Major, * * * but I must hoist the Khedive's flag. * * * You do not want it on the fort, then?"

"It is impossible, General. Place it over the village."

The conversation thus ominously begun ended in an informal whisky and soda. KITCHENER contained himself in patience, and a few hours later orders came from Paris, and the gallant MARCHAND, declining the Sirdar's offer of transportation down the Nile, continued his lonely journey eastward across the Dark Continent. "The French," once wrote VOLTAIRE, "are GOD's own actors." ("Les Français sont les comédiens du bon Dieu.") In this chosen troupe MARCHAND certainly plays exalted rôles.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—A Northerner visiting the South and looking for evidence that he is in a part of the country inhabited by people unlike his own neighbors will find little or none of it—at least as long as he remains a visitor—except in peculiarities of speech, and even these are very slight in the case of a majority of those with whom he is likely to be brought into what may be called personal contact. The jargon of the negroes, of course, does not count, and the talk of those whom he hears called "poor whites" and "crackers," while unlike that of equally ignorant persons at the North, is still of the same quality. The Southerner who makes annual trips to the North is an American almost indistinguishable from other Americans, so far as the pronunciation of any except a very few of his words is concerned, and he has abandoned even the peculiar intonations which form, after all, the real, the essential difference between Southern and Northern speech. The Southern women and children do retain the special intonation in almost every instance, and many of them seem to a Northerner to be—well, singing when one likes the speaker, and whining when one doesn't. The visitor cannot help noting, however, first of all and last, the enormous amount of time devoted by his Southern friends to calling each other "Sir," a title almost never exchanged in the North between equals, while "lady" and "gentleman" are used with a frequency that seems more than slightly ludicrous to an unaccustomed ear. In the North, too, "lady" is absurdly overworked, but it is in an entirely different way, and by a class entirely different from that which so tirelessly uses both these words, and the one as much as the other, in the South. There a speaker of either sex seems to have the same hesitation about calling him a "man" who is or may be also a "gentleman" that Northerners have about using "woman" when its employment is or will be taken as an implied denial of social status. But these are small matters—small indeed compared with the gentle voices and courteous manners that mark so much of Southern intercourse. The Southerners have time to put a "Sir" into every sentence, and if they choose to think it not quite respectful to call a man a man, without qualification, that is a matter of taste. If an error, it is one in the right direction.

—For dozens of reasons it is impossible not to regret that there seems to have been no foundation of fact for the report that the assassin of M. DE PLEHVE had been rescued from prison by daring friends in the disguise of high officials. The most safely avowable and easily defensible of the reasons for regretting that the tale, according to present advices, was false is that as a tale it was in such charming accord with the very best models of romantic literature, and so vastly superior to even the most famous of real escapes and rescues. Prisoners have indeed made their way out of dungeons in sensational and thrilling ways, and not a little heroism and ingenuity has been used in assisting their evasions, but we recall nothing of the sort in either history or fiction that had the beautiful simplicity combined with enormous difficulty which for a few hours was illustrated by the supposed happening in St. Petersburg. And even now one cannot see why SASSONEFF's friends, of whom, of course, there are many, and not a few of them men of both mental and material resources, did not try the plan that was reported as succeeding in a manner so sensational. To assist them they had the inestimable advantage that official circles could not have had the slightest fear that anybody would even dream of rescuing a prisoner of this stamp, and perfect confidence is almost always careless. One can more than half believe that the scheme said to have succeeded would have succeeded if it had been formed and carried out with sufficient care and courage. And what a glory it would have been for all concerned! Beside it who would have remembered the achievement at Venice of Mrs. GRANDIS's favorite hero, Casanova? Who would have kept alive the shabby fame of Baron Trenck or Jack Sheppard? But the thing which, untried, seems so easy was not attempted, and now it cannot be. It is a pity, a little for SASSONEFF's sake assassin as he is—but with so much of provocation—but chiefly for the sake of the story, which would have been a deathless joy and given a glittering purple patch of fantastic romance to a lamentably prosaic age.

—After many threats and despite fervid opposition, they have at last had a bull fight at the St. Louis Exposition—or a sort of a bullfight. For admirers of the "sport" as known in Spain it didn't amount to much, since no blood, bovine or equine, was shed, but the bull did charge, bellowing earnestly, and several men did have what passed, for inexpert spectators, at least, as narrow escapes from violent death. Indeed, it is interesting to note that the promoters of the affair, compelled as they were to reduce its barbarous features to a minimum, gave thought chiefly, if not only, to the animals concerned. The horses were eliminated and the bull they protected from everything except the irritation of his easily moved temper. The men, apparently, were allowed to take about the usual chances of the arena; possibly, as they were less well armed than custom dictates and were forbidden to use effectively such weapons as they had, the chances are that as a result of our National delicacy of mind the perils of these St. Louis bullfighters were greater than they would have encountered in the ring at Madrid. This is a phase of the subject that should be carefully considered by the anti-cruelty people—with whose purposes, by the way, we are in most perfect sympathy, even if we have occasionally criticised their methods. As it was, the St. Louis bull probably enjoyed the function, even if he was worried into a rage. The nature of bulls is to rage, on fitting occasion, and there is no reason to doubt that they know and highly appreciate the stern joys of battle. The spectators are said to have found pleasure in the spectacle—that is, they liked to sit in safety and see other men chased over or under a fence by an angry and dangerous animal. That, judged in cold blood and from a distance, must be called a pretty brutal form of amusement, but several people who would denounce it with energy know in their hearts that they could watch it with an interest not altogether painful.

—Within a week past the mules in the vicinity of Athens, Ga., have taken the trouble to disprove most conclusively the recent claim of a Colorado Colonel that the common fear of the heels of mules is unwarranted by facts. Near Athens, however it may be in the West, the mules kick, and they kick men. In the period mentioned one of them killed with a single blow, and instantly, JASON F. JACKSON, a prominent farmer; a second broke the jaw of a negro boy, besides inflicting other serious injuries; a third fractured the skull of a white boy, and a fourth hurt GEORGE BARKSDALE, another prominent farmer, so badly that he died after lingering in pain for several days. This is a wicked record—far too tragical for the humorous treatment which, despite his reputation, is almost always accorded to the mule and all his doings. The Colorado Colonel's experience, though long, was evidently exceptional. Mules do kick, and they kick men, and they kick to kill.

TWO CANDIDATES' ADVISERS.

A Comparison That Was Odious Because It Was Unfair.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In an article signed "Franklin W. Collins," published in The Tribune Aug. 22, a comparison is made between the "coterie of fireside friends, political discoverers, advisers, and promoters that hover about the Judge" as "contradistinguished from the close political friends and advisers of President Roosevelt."

Mr. Collins says "comparisons are odious, yes, odorous." I am glad he is frank enough to speak so plainly about his wonderful comparisons, for they are certainly odorous. He names as President Roosevelt's advisers John Hay, Judge Taft, William H. Moody, George B. Cortelyou, and Elihu Root.

If Mr. Collins had used "a fine-tooth comb" on the balance of the Republicans in the country he could not have selected a finer, a more honorable, set of men, though, being Republicans, all of them are not necessarily the President's advisers.

As Judge Parker's "discoverers and advisers" he names Messrs. D. B. Hill, W. F. Sheehan, Cord Meyer, Tom Taggart, Mr. McCarren, and William Devery.

Couldn't he have as well included Judge Gray, Col. Lamont, Mr. Nicoll, John G. Carlisle, and August Belmont, all very close to Judge Parker? In fact, wouldn't it have been better to have named the regular National Committee as the advisers, and not such as William Devery, who might vote for but will never advise the Judge.

Couldn't he have included in the list of Mr. Roosevelt's "advisers and close political" friends Mr. T. C. Platt and Mr. Addicks, and then have said a man is "known by the company he keeps." H. N. LEE.

A CANADIAN PRECEDENT.

And Its Application to an American Political Situation.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Nothing short of residence among Canadians in the Dominion can explain to any one the change of base in the recent appointment to the Governor Generalship of Canada. In yesterday's TIMES comes the announcement that "the British Government had decided to appoint the Duke, [Marlborough,] but the opposition to the selection in the Dominion, owing to the fact that the Duke has an American wife, was so strong that the decision was reconsidered."

Can provincialism be carried further?

Revolt, dear friends across the border! Why not? What manly man or self-respecting woman in the Dominion could be expected to do otherwise? Why, compared with the injustice of appointing a Governor General with an American wife, the Stamp act and the tax on tea are merely courteous favors! With such a precedent before us, we may do well to look out in our coming election. Perhaps before it is too late we may discover that there is English, Irish, or even French blood in the wives of one of our candidates. And, in the event of such a disclosure, who knows that the entire voice of the American people will not be raised in protest against such a hopeless disaster? E. H. B.

UNDERTAKERS' SIGNS.

A Protest Against Placing Them on Churches.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is a condition—rather a practice—obtaining in this city that jars the sensibilities of the stranger, and perhaps in a scarcely less degree those of many an older resident. The practice alluded to is that of placing undertakers' signs in positions of commanding prominence in front of practically if indeed not all the churches in Harlem, regardless of denominational distinction. One of these advertisements in particular attracts attention by reason of its being placed upon a shield surmounted by the cross, on each side of the church entrance.

These advertising signs seem to place the church is a species of partnership with the undertaker. The suggestion is commercial-funesial. In the circumstances, either element would perhaps be objectionable to any highly organized and sensitive nature, and neither is benefited by its association with the other. It greets one like the "Remember death" of the Trappist. But the enlightened conception of the province of the Church is that it is to inculcate righteous habits of life—to prepare men for life, the essential, rather than for death, the incidental and subordinate.

When Kruger Despaired.

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

A story told in sporting circles of the late President Kruger during the early days of the South African war shows the simplicity of the old Boer leader. When the first Australian contingent arrived at Cape Town Mr. Kruger is said to have asked Gen. Joubert if he knew anything about these Australians.

"I only know that eleven of them once beat all England."

"Good heavens!" cried the President, "we are lost! Thirteen thousand of them have just landed."

Mitigating Circumstances.

"Did you find it difficult to reconcile yourself to the loss of your daughter?"

"Yes, very at first. But her husband unexpectedly inherited a hundred thousand dollars about six weeks after they were married."

WAITING FOR PARKER LETTER.

Delay in Issuing It May Cost Him Many Votes.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In my judgment, Judge Parker is making a serious mistake in keeping back his letter of acceptance. If he withholds it until the 17th of September, as the newspapers say he intends doing, he will simply lose many votes. He should pay no attention to President Roosevelt's movements. The people are not awaiting with any considerable degree of interest the letter from the President, but there is a widespread desire to see what Judge Parker has to say. It would not be at all surprising to learn that the President's action in keeping back his letter (practically completed some time ago) is but a political scheme on his part. He and his friends know that he has nothing to lose by not issuing his own letter, and that the longer he can keep Judge Parker's more fully expressed views from his countrymen, the better it will be for his own candidacy.

The Democrats have a good chance of success in this campaign, but if they are to win they must be up and doing, and that mighty quick. From what I gather from a rather wide newspaper reading, I infer that there is a general opinion that the Democratic side of the campaign is being poorly managed.

If "Tom" Taggart is an improvement on the last Democratic National Chairman, now is the time for him to show it.

TARIFF REFORM CAMPAIGN.

Aggressive Action on That Issue May Win Democratic Victory.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I hope you will continue to urge upon the Democratic managers the necessity of forcing the fighting on the one serious issue that divides the parties—the tariff. What is the trust issue, what is the Roosevelt issue, compared with that which is presented by this gigantic combine of the protected interests which sustains and fosters the trusts that would exist without it and creates the trusts that without it never would exist; which cows into tame submission a man so bold, independent, and determined (not to say belligerent) as the President is on all hands taken to be; and which dominates the great party that has held the reins of government for forty-four years, less two Democratic Administrations?

Never before has that party shown itself so restive under this domination as now it is seen to be in the East as in the West. Now is the time for an aggressive, awakening campaign for tariff reform. It may lead to victory this year, and if not, then four years hence, as the brave Republican fight of 1856 led to victory in 1860.

WOULD NOMINATE GROUT.

With His Name on Ticket, Democrats Could Sweep State.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter headed "Grout a Vote Getter" in THE TIMES of to-day should be seriously considered by the Democracy at this time.

We want to win the State, and in order to do so we should take a man, irrespective of any personal feeling, that ran ahead of the ticket last year, and was the only one on the ticket who carried all the boroughs in the city.

With Grout we could sweep this State.

INDEPENDENT DEMOCRAT.

New York, Sept. 5, 1904.

NAMES FORNES FOR GOVERNOR.

Always Ahead of His Ticket His Candidacy Is Desirable.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As an independent Democrat, having observed the different candidates mentioned for Governor of this State, and being fully cognizant of the importance of a candidate who will not only promote the interests of the Democracy of New York State, but also of the National Democracy, it has occurred to me that in Charles V. Fornes, now President of the Board of Aldermen, we have such a man.

Mr. Fornes is a practical business man, well-known to the business world for a period of twenty-five years. He has been a resident of Buffalo and Erie County, where he was born, for several years, which is an important section of the State in this campaign. He is a man who is most highly esteemed, and well known throughout all sections of the State. His fearless independence, his thorough education and business training, are qualities which we need in order to secure votes.

In his official capacity in the office he has held he has been painstaking, thorough, and efficient. On each occasion that his name has been before the people his sterling qualities have been recognized, which are evidenced by the fact that he has been far ahead of his ticket. H. J.

LODGE IN THE WILDERNESS.

A Memory of What Happened After Blaine's Nomination.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In "Submission in Politics" (Aug. 19) you say: "Mr. Roosevelt * * * supported Mr. Blaine. His friend, Mr. Lodge, * * * reached the same conclusion."

My recollection is that Mr. Lodge, who was then a conspicuous political reformer, "took to the woods" in Michigan soon after Blaine was nominated and remained there till after the election. Whereupon the Mugwump papers said "O for a Lodge in some vast wilderness," and other unkind and flippant things.

In "Scrupulous Non-Partisanship," (Aug. 14,) I think you shoot wide of the mark. There is no possibility of securing Roosevelt Electors in Alabama. Hence it is a safe field in which to exploit and advertise devotion to civil service reform principles which the President finds inapplicable in doubtful States, especially New York and Delaware. H. C. MERRITT.

Irishmen and Russia.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It was astonishing to read of the ovations for Russia by Irishmen who met at the convention the other day. If those who participated in these ovations ever heard something of the latter day history of the Finns, Poles, Armenians, &c., and if they were true lovers of liberty, they would certainly not cheer for a country, or rather a Government, which not alone opposes home rule, but also tries to suppress even the liberal thoughts of people.

From The Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

The young doctor was very proud at being called into consultation.

"I have summoned you, doctor," said the great physician, "because you know young Cashley at college. Have you reliable information as to his financial condition?"

LABOR IN SESSION AT LEEDS.

Political Activity to be Advocated at Trades Union Congress.

LEEDS, England, Sept. 5.—The thirty-seventh annual trades union congress opened in the Town Hall here to-day under the Presidency of Richard Bell, M. P., General Secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants and Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress.

Politicians are much interested in the decision of the Congress on a resolution which will be introduced by the Boilermakers and Iron Shipbuilders' Union, as follows:

"That this Congress is strongly of the opinion that the time has arrived for all trades unionists to be represented at the Trades Union Congress and upon the Labor Representation Committee in order that the forces of trades unionism can become more closely combined for political action to remedy the injustices labor is now suffering from."

At the opening of the Congress Mr. Bell read a letter from the American Federation of Labor claiming that the universal solidarity of labor must result in universal peace and brotherhood.

D. Ryan and D. Driscoll represent the American Federation of Labor.

The congress will begin the transaction of serious business to-morrow.

ARMENIAN REBELS ADVANCE.

Turkish Troops Unable to Make Headway Against Them.

PARIS, Sept. 5.—A dispatch to the Temps from Constantinople, by way of Sofia, says that an official report which has reached one of the foreign Consuls there states that the Armenian insurgents at Van, Asiatic Turkey, are successfully resisting the Turkish troops, which until yesterday had been unable to reduce or disperse them. The Armenians advanced to within about 400 yards of the French Consulate.

The population of Van is seeking refuge in the schools and convents. It is expected that Turkey will mobilise the Fourth Army Corps and draw troops from Asia Minor in order to suppress the uprising.

It was announced from Constantinople Sept. 2 that a fierce fight between Armenian insurgents and Turkish troops had occurred at Van Aug. 31, and that more than a score were killed. About 150 Armenians raided the town, captured four houses, and barricaded themselves.

Troops attacked the houses and in the fight which followed two soldiers and twenty other persons were killed. The authorities set fire to a number of adjoining houses so that the troops might be better enabled to besiege the insurgents.

It was said by the authorities that other Armenian bands were preparing to cross the Persian frontier.

NEW SYNAGOGUE DEDICATED.

Home of Congregation Agudath Jesharim Finished in Quick Time.

With impressive ceremonies, the new temple of the Congregation Agudath Jesharim, in East Eighty-sixth Street, between Lexington and Park Avenues, was dedicated yesterday afternoon. The edifice has been practically rebuilt on the old site at a cost of $40,000.

The work has been done since April 1 last. The desire of the members to worship in the new building before New Year's Day—next Saturday—was the reason that extra efforts were made. The ceremonies were conducted by David Davidson, assisted by the Cantor, the Rev. H. I. Martin.

Scandinavian Customs Union.

A strong movement is now going on in the commercial and industrial circles of Sweden, Norway, and Denmark to establish a Scandinavian customs union, writes Consul General Guenther from Frankfort. It is believed that thereby the economic interests of the three countries would be much advanced, as unitedly they would present a power whose weight would fell in trade relations with foreign countries. The union would thus be of much benefit by stimulating and strengthening the production of the countries, providing for better transportation facilities, and obtaining good foreign markets.

"No; I'd lose too much on the repairs. You see, my income arises from a couple of auto repair shops I was lucky enough to start a year ago."

And each foot of earth they have stamped "U. S."
Let us drain this glass in the soldiers' toast
To every army and navy manned

SUCCESS FOR "THE DUKE OF KILLICRANKIE"

John Drew and an Admirable Company at the New Empire.

GILBERTIAN FARCE-ROMANCE

A Characteristic Play from Capt. Marshall—A Triumph for Fanny Brough.

The Duke of Killicrankie.....John Drew
Mr. Henry Pitt-Welby, M. P.
Ferdinand Gottschalk
Mr. Ambrose Hicks.....Lewis Baker
Alexander MacBayne, caretaker at Crag-o'-North.....Richard Carrington
Butler.....Robert Schable

"The Duke of Killicrankie," by Capt. Robert Marshall, the delightful author of "His Excellency the Governor" and "The Second in Command," was about the only play that enlivened the gloom of the last "season" in London, and with Jones's "Joseph Entangled" and Pinero's "Letty" took the honors of a rather unproductive year on the English stage. The new Empire was crowded last night with a characteristic audience, which relished to the utmost the refined and harmless cynicism of the lines, the fantastic absurdity of the story, and, above all, the exquisitely delicate, finished, and mirth-provoking work of the excellent company gathered about Mr. John Drew.

The programme describes the play as a farcical romance, and for once in a blue moon the programme is right. Only the two most irresponsible orders of play combined could afford a mantle of charity broad enough to cover the amiable absurdities of the piece. The story is of a mediaeval abduction in which a modern, nay, an ultra modern, Scotch Duke makes away with his unwilling lady love, with all of the decision if none of the bravery of young Lochinvar—lures her to a mediaeval mountain fastness, now a grouse shoot, and shuts her up with him (barely chaperoned) until he has made her love him.

As far as the circumstances permit, it must be granted, Capt. Marshall has made the story credible. His Duke is a clever lordling, who has been spoiled by always having his whims more than gratified, and who is in consequence, not unnaturally, determined to have his own way at any cost. Lady Henrietta scorns his suit for the excellent reason that he is a spoiled youngster. He has been beset all his life with girls eager to throw themselves at his head, which makes her determine that some one shall scorn him for the honor of her sex, and this, of course only makes him the more determined to win her. Besides, he is an aimless dilettanti. He has tried all the fads his kind are heir to, from soldiering at the head of a volunteer regiment to the Socialism of the Bernard Shaw cadre, a member of the idle rich class—and has stuck to none of them.

She taunts him with the act, and the taunt proves her undoing. He determines to carry one fad through to the end—the fad of marrying her. He induces a silly ass friend to send a lying telegram summoning her to the sickbed of an aunt in the Highlands, and then bribes a railway guard to put her into a carriage that takes her, not to the aunt, but to the Castle of Killicrankie, on top of a mountain, where he shuts her in behind stone and iron. The silly ass (Ferdinand Gottschalk) is in love with a rich widow, who has also scorned his suit, and it is a part of the unheroic compact that she is to be chaperone.

To complicate matters, the widow and Lady Henrietta are at outs, words and pinnate. It is not a merry party that gathers at supper in the Highlands. The cattishness of woman to woman has been a favorite material for comedy since females have played themselves on the stage; but not even Molière and Sheridan have extracted more mirth from such encounters than Capt. Marshall gets out of his second act—though the present little piece is not, of course, to be compared with "Le Misanthrope" or "The School for Scandal." Repartee followed repartee, and kept the audience in gurgles of exquisite laughter.

The last act, though abundantly amusing, somewhat relaxed the tension of delight. The fact is that the author missed what Sarcey called the scene à faire. Humanly and artistically speaking, the crisis of the play lay in the moments in which the two beleaguered women fall beneath the charms of their captors. A French playwright would have shown this in action. It is this feeling for progressive psychology which lends such delicious and enduring charm to pieces like Sardou's "Divorcons," where one sees every phase of the process by which Cyprienne tires of her lover and returns to her triumphant husband. Captain Marshall is not yet capable of such humanity and such finesse. At the opening of the third act, the two women are already vanquished. It only remains to see them capitulate, which they do in a manner amusing enough.

Captain Marshall is a true son of Gilbert in his wit and his sense of the politely absurd. The scene in which the women try to induce the craven Mr. Gottschalk to hurl himself out of the castle and into the top of a tall pine far below the walls, and the scrupulous reason with which he argues it point, is in the best manner of the author of "Engaged." Unfortunately Captain Marshall is also a product of the conventional English stage, and is entombed in Ivey's acting plays, with which he became originally familiar as the playwright for the amateur performances of his regiment. There were times when the mechanism of the other Ivey screaked again.

Of the actors Mr. Drew, sound and trained artist that he is, gave the most faulty—the only faulty—performance of the evening. He was far from perfect in his lines, and at important points he quite failed to embody the character, half whimsical, half impassioned, which is the mainspring of the action, and which Mr. Cyril Maude rendered with such delicacy and conviction in London. Miss Margaret Dale, who has not particularly shone hitherto, was admirable like in her light and in her emotional moments. It was a performance of great achievement and greater promise.

The real stars of the evening were Mr. Gottschalk and Miss Brough. With Mr. Gottschalk we have long been familiar, and delighted. No better light and grotesque comedian treads our stage. Miss Brough is chiefly remembered for her admirable performance with Mr. Rawtrey in "The Man from Blankley's." She is as perfect a comedienne as Mrs. Gilbert in her prime, though as yet she has shown only the capacities that consummate artist revealed as the testy Daly mother-in-law. To this she adds a touch of middle-class English hardness, admirably suited to the characters she has impersonated.

The play is by no means a masterpiece, but we shall be more than lucky if the season now opening shows anything better in its kind or better acted.

AT THE BROADWAY THEATRE.

Pete Dailey and Fay Templeton Seen in "A Little of Everything."

Pete Dailey and Fay Templeton have come down from the stage of the Aerial Theatre and taken a four weeks' stand in the Broadway in "A Little of Everything." They made their first appearance there yesterday afternoon. There was a gloomy atmosphere of solitude in the orchestra circle—but so there was in about every theatre yesterday afternoon. But the few people who were there made as much noise as they could when the proper moments came.

The Offenbach Review still holds its own as the really good feature of the piece. Miss Templeton, always good at imitations of the French, finds herself in her element here. One or two of her songs in the last fifteen minutes of the performance make "A Little of Everything" worth while. Susie Fisher's "Song of the Sea" is still popular.

There was some compensation last night for the thinness of the afternoon audience.

Mrs. Spooner to Run Two Theatres.

Hyde & Behman announced last night that Mrs. Spooner had arranged to split her large stock company into two sections, one of which will support her daughter Edna May Spooner and the other her daughter Cecil. The companies will alternate, under Mrs. Spooner's direction, this season at the Bijou and Amphion Theatres in Brooklyn, which are controlled by Hyde & Behman. This is said to be the first time that a woman has directed plays at two theatres at once.

A madcap Princess, indeed! A saucy jade, a minx, a termagant, forsooth. But, egad, what a merry one. It has been many a long day since a more engaging bit of femininity has frolicked her blithsome way through three acts of comic opera.

Comic opera? Why, yes.

The new show which served to bring back Lulu Glaser at the Knickerbocker Theatre last night really justifies the label. For if Ludwig Englander's music does not necessarily fall into the same category with the old standard repertory, it is at least tuneful and harmonious and is consistently appropriate to the text which Harry B. Smith has provided. For once the truthful chronicler does not find it necessary to apologize for the entertainment with the familiar and timeworn, "It's the sort of thing that people seem to like." But for all that they are going to like it.

"A Madcap Princess" really needs no apology. It's rollicking good fun for the most part, though bright blades flash occasionally, and the more serious moments are carried off with such seeming sincerity, that one almost forgets that it isn't real, sure enough drama.

That Charles Major's colorful story "When Knighthood Was in Flower" would provide good material for a comic opera ought to have been apparent to any one who read the book or who saw Julia Marlowe, with force of art, imbue with vitality a heroine who was otherwise but a thing of shears and paste and good white paper. The surprise last night lay in the revelation of the fact that somebody or other knew just how to go about doing the work to the best advantage.

In most of the musical entertainments for ever so long the aid of even that newest Harvard telescope would have been useless to discover a trace of the story in the jumble of songs and dances and interpolated specialties. In "A Madcap Princess" the tale of Mary Tudor's love for Charles Brandon, of bluff King Hal's decree that she should marry the King of France, and of the winsome little lady's subsequent calling of his bluff, is carried on a delicate thread, forsooth, but one that is entirely adequate.

The merry humor of it begins with Miss Glaser's first entrance. King Hal is in a rage. He has just told the audience in a jolly good stong:

"I am bluff King Hal!
I'm a Briton through and through!"

And he feels that he must live up to his own description of himself. So when Mary talks back to him, he lets out a few rip snorters, and ends up with a sputter.

"I lack words," he shouts.

"You lack breath," laughs Mary; "you ought to try breathing exercises."

"My!" she continues, pointing to his ruff, "aren't kings wearing high collars, these days?"

And when the King is once again about to abandon himself to his choler—that really wasn't intended for a joke—she puts a silencing finger on his lips with the remark:

"Now stop. That collar is an awful thing to get hot under."

The dialogue throughout this scene is delightfully amusing, and Miss Glaser's acting full of a spontaneity, charm, and variety. She is quite irresistible. Mr. Pruette, too, succeeded in presenting a comic operamonarch who was not an altogether impossible personage.

His make-up was admirable and his song, "Bluff King Hall," provided occasion for prolonged enthusiasm. Miss Glaser's best numbers were "The Isle of the Sea" and "A Typical Cavalier," the latter poured forth with an abundantly humorous show of braggadocio and bluster after she has donned the garb of a page to accompany her lover in his flight from King Henry's wrath and vengeance.

In refreshing contrast to what one ordinarily expects—and gets—in comic opera is the stage lover in this production. Bertram Wallace, who plays Brandon, is of manly appearance, and he can act. He sings well, but would be an acquisition as leading man, of whom there are not too many to go around at present.

A capital number was "Kings of the Sea," sung by H. Chambers, with swinging accompaniment and chorus.

Altogether "A Madcap Princess" is to be heartily commended. Her life should be long, and it is sure to be merry.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE OPENS.

"The Little Princess" First Production of Its Fall Season.

The Harlem Opera House on West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street opened its season last evening with "The Little Princess," by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett. Every seat was occupied and Miss Leonie Darmon, who played the title rôle, filled last season with remarkable success by Miss Millie James, was enthusiastically received.

During the past Summer the house has been redecorated and rewired throughout, and the addition of about a thousand more electric lights, set in elaborate gilded chandeliers, adds greatly to the general appearance. The stage has been remodeled, under the personal direction of Manager Alex Lichtenstein, and has been made fire proof in every respect. A new electric plant for scenic effects has been added.

The list of attractions offered by the house during the coming season far exceeds all previous bookings, among them being Cecilia Loftus, Fay Davis, John Drew, Kyrle Bellew, Virginia Harned, James K. Hackett, N. C. Goodwin, Joe Jefferson, W. H. Crane, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mme. Schumann-Heink, William Collier, Viola Allen, Annie Russell, Eleanor Robson, and the Rogers Brothers.

AMUSEMENTS LAST NIGHT.

John T. Kelly, who used to be with Weber & Fields, is at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre this week in a farce called "Senator McFee." His supporters are Florence Veldran, Louis G. Christy, and Herman Lieb. There is a long list of vaudeville specialists.

"Men and Women" was revived at the Fifth Avenue Theatre last night. William Morris headed the cast. Bonita and her midgets are best on the vaudeville programme.

The stock company at the Proctor house in One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street is giving "East Lynne" this week. Rebecca Warren has been engaged for the dual rôle of Lady Isabelle and Mme. Vine.

Charles Hawtrey appeared at Keith's yesterday in "Time Is Money." He presented this same sketch in the city last Spring two or three times, and it made a "hit" in every house where it was tried. The Sisters Gasch are first on Keith's vaudeville bill.

Incidents in foreign countries are shown on the moving picture screen at the Eden Musée this week. A motor race in Germany is the star feature. Figures are being added to the World in Wax continually.

John Mason and Eva Gray are giving "Another Story" at Hurtig & Seamon's this week. Others prominent on the bill are Doris Goodwin, Chris Bruno and Mabel Russell, and James Thornton.

"One of the Finest" is at the Third Avenue.

The West End Theatre's attraction for this week is "More to be Pitied than Scorned."

"Rachel Goldstein" is at the New Star Theatre.

Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre opened last night with a big vaudeville bill of twelve acts. Henry Lee, the impersonator, is the headliner. His favorite imitations are those of Alton B. Parker and President Roosevelt. The Victoria will keep open all the Winter as a vaudeville house. There will be two performances given every day. The prices for every matinée will be 25 and 50 cents.

RELIGIOUS EDITORS TO FIGHT "SATURNALIA"

Biondi's Work Assailed as "Brilliant, Pretty, and Bad."

AWAITING MUSEUM'S ACTION

Trustee Kennedy Quoted as in Sympathy with Samuel P. Avary's Opposition—Biondi Sails for Spain.

More trouble for Signor Ernesto Biondi's group "Saturnalia" was foreshadowed yesterday as a consequence of reports that the group was to be exhibited at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, to avoid the legal proceedings instituted against the Trustees and that the National Sculpture Society had withdrawn its objections to the exhibition of the work.

Editors of a number of religious publications, it was learned yesterday, have decided to make an effort to unite clergymen of Greater New York in protest should the Museum Trustees rescind their action, which Biondi declared relegated the work to the Museum cellar. It was asserted that while the plans for the movement were well in hand, no step would be taken before the November announcement of the decision of the Museum Trustees.

Only the theme of the group will be discussed in the religious press, it not being the intention to discuss the work as an artistic creation. It will be maintained that the time has come when an artist should consider his theme in selecting an agency for showing his talent, especially when the subject is intended for permanent exhibition.

Henry R. Elliot, editor of The Church Economist, had this to say of "Saturnalia," yesterday:

"The theme is obnoxious. It is curious that a subject of this sort is so often tolerated because the details are treated in terms of two or three thousand years ago. It would not be art to depict a group of drunkards reeling down Broadway in evening dress, but is correct if the revelers are dubbed bacchantes or dressed in Roman or Grecian clothes. We have similar absurdities in music and literature. Lay the scene in Spain or in fairyland, and anything is 'art.' To dwell in detail on a debauch in the Tenderloin is low and not to be permitted. But to describe the revels in the streets of Rome during the Decadence is a work of art. There is too much of this in vogue, in my judgment, for public morals. The Saturnalia was a beastly orgy, which no city in the civilized world would now tolerate. Why make a characteristic group of such an evil debauch the theme of a work of statuary? Suppose the treatment is masterly; what of it?"

The Rev. Dr. William Reyes Ward, editor of The Independent, said: "I have not seen the piece in some time, and I am hardly in a position to judge. But I should say that the 'Saturnalia' is brilliant, pretty, and bad, and should be put in the cellar."

Several sculptors refuse to discuss for publication the proposed attack of the religious press. One, who withheld the use of his name, said:

"There has been a vast amount of misstatement about this matter. Biondi has been misrepresented, the Museum Directors have been misrepresented, but neither of them as badly as that much-maligned organization, the National Sculpture Society.

"It is not now true, nor has it ever been true, that the National Sculpture Society is responsible for the opposition against the 'Saturnalia,' although attempts have been made to fasten the charge upon the society. The matter came up in the society, was the subject of a little informal talk, and was then referred to the Fine Arts Federation, and our delegates to that body received free rein and did not have to report back to our society.

"Officially, and in reality, I do not know what action the federation took. Stories that the National Sculpture Society has withdrawn its opposition are all poppycock. No meeting of the society has been held since June, nor will there be for a month or two yet, so, on its face, you see that yarn must be untrue."

One member of the Board of Trustees of the Metropolitan Museum said:

"The story that Samuel Putnam Avery's death removed from the directorate the only opposition in that body to the exhibition of Biondi's work is not true. As long as Mr. John S. Kennedy remains a Director of the Museum I imagine there will always be the strongest kind of opposition to any public view of the 'Saturnalia' within the Metropolitan's walls."

Biondi left New York for Barcelona yesterday afternoon on the Compania Transatlantica steamer Manuel Calvo. In discussing the matter of theme for the "Saturnalia" group he said that he was prompted by the strong moral and felt that it would make a strong object lesson. He would not return until summoned by his attorney to present himself in the suit he has instituted against the Metropolitan Museum. He thought this would probably be next Spring.

"ARE YOU A MASON?" HERE.

Revived at the Garrick for Two Weeks with Leo Ditrichstein.

"Are You a Mason?" is at the Garrick for two weeks. It was put on yesterday afternoon, with a cast containing many of the actors who originally acted in it. The play went well in the afternoon—with the few people who were there—and last night, when a good crowd turned out to the jolly farce, the Garrick's walls rang with laughter for two hours and a half.

Leo Ditrichstein is George Fisher, the stock broker who used to be an actor, and Henry Kolker has the part of the young husband who ought to be a Mason but isn't. Thomas A. Wise is the father-in-law from Rockford, Ill., who had an adventure with a damsel named Angelina twenty years ago and has not heard of much else from his wife since. Henry W. Donnelly is John Halton, the gentleman farmer from up-State. Others in the cast are Edith Barker, Florence Thornton, Jennie Reiffarth, George Henry Trader, John Emerson, Charles A. Greene, Gertrude Whitty, Margaret Sutherland, and Amy Lesser.

NOTES OF THE THEATRES.

"The White Tigress of Japan" will end its run at the American Theatre next Saturday night. The following attraction is "The Street Singer," with Florence Bindley in the leading rôle.

Carnival Days have begun at Luna Park, Coney Island. They will continue until the close of the Coney Island season, Sept. 25. Preparations are under way for the visit of 5,000 members of the American Bankers' Association.

Fred Hamlin got back from Chicago yesterday, bringing news of "Bird Centre," the play which is soon to be produced here. It is said to be a great success.

EVA TANGUAY AS A STAR.

"The Sambo Girl" Is Full of Laughs and the Music Is Tuneful.

Special to The New York Times.

WILKESBARRE, Sept. 5.—Miss Eva Tanguay made her appearance as a full-fledged star at the Nesbitt Theatre tonight, when she was seen at the head of her own company in the title rôle of Harry B. Smith's and Gustav Kerker's newest musical comedy, "The Sambo Girl." Mr. Smith's book is good, there being a laugh in nearly every line, and Kerker's score is original and tuneful.

The star's support was all that could be desired. Melville S. Collins, Harry Short, Arthur O'Keefe, Harry Kane, Louise Moore, and Florence Morrison filling their rôles acceptably. Song hits were numerous. "The Sambo Girl" is richly mounted.

"The Spellbinder" in Herald Square.

The general engrossment in politics, which is supposed to be harmful to theatrical business, was taken advantage of last night at the Herald Square Theatre by presenting "The Spellbinders." The political element is not strong, however, being of the strictly non-partisan kind, which is thought to be all that an audience will stand for. Ralph Delmore heads the cast.

"OLD HOMESTEAD" AGAIN.

Denman Thompson's Joshua Whitcomb Now at the New York Theatre.

"The Old Homestead" began yesterday afternoon at the New York Theatre its nineteenth season. And Denman Thompson is still the rural gold-brick target, Joshua Whitcomb. There was a fair-sized audience at the matinée—a large one, when compared with those at the other theatres on Broadway. The figure of the old farmer, who comes to town and balks at nude Venuses, shakes hands with the lackey, and stares at high buildings, is so familiar on the stage nowadays that it is hard for the spectator to realize that Joshua Whitcomb is, in a way, the prototype of them all. He is the original creation—and many hundred "rubes" are only bad imitations of the first Josh.

Gus Kammerlee now has the rôle of Henry Hopkins, the rich man in the city, whose chief duty is to sit stiffly in his evening clothes and say things that draw witticisms from Joshua. Annie Thompson takes the part of Mrs. Hopkins, a dowager with powdered hair who looks as if she had just stepped from a Revolutionary novel. Hector Dion is Reuben Whitcomb, the wayward son, who is important chiefly because if he hadn't been wayward and run away to New York his father wouldn't have come after him, and there wouldn't have been any play.

OLD ACTOR'S RETURN TO STAGE

Oliver Doud Byron to Appear in Ada Rehan's Company.

Theatrical people generally, and that portion of the public which follows the doings of actors, will be surprised to learn that the present season will see the return to the stage of Oliver Doud Byron, for many years one of the most successful actors of melodrama in America. And an added interest results from the fact that Mr. Byron's reappearance will be made in the company of his sister-in-law, Ada Rehan.

The announcement will cause a pleasant thrill of memory on the part of the older generation of playgoers, who will perhaps recall Mr. Byron's first appearance as a star, in "Don César de Bazan," at the old Bowery Theatre; but to most people Oliver Doud Byron is best remembered as the hero of the picturesquely flamboyant play "Across the Continent," which he played in every city and hamlet of the land. For twenty-two years he appeared in that piece, shelving it only a few years before his retirement to act in "The Plunger."

Mr. Byron is the father of Arthur Byron, now playing "Jack's Little Surprise" at the Princess Theatre. His wife was Miss Kate Crehan, a sister of Ada Rehan and of the late Hattie Russell, in her day a popular American comedienne.

ROGERS BROTHERS ONCE MORE.

They Open Their Seventh New York Engagement at the New Amsterdam.

The Rogers brothers, Gus and Max, began their seventh annual engagement in this city at the New Amsterdam Theatre last night, talking with their faces just as close together as they ever did and keeping up a rapid fire of new jokes, in their own peculiar vein, which bore the usual crop of laughter.

The title of their latest vaudeville farce, "The Rogers Brothers in Paris," tells as much of their offering to amusement seekers as it is meant to, and as much as there is any occasion for. Whether in Ticonderoga or Timbuctoo, they would still be the Rogers Brothers, and as such have the facility for surrounding themselves with just the people and the incidents needed to best bring out their twin talents.

John J. McNally, their regular dependence, has supplied them with the necessary opportunities for taking the centre of the stage and leaving it for breathing spells and changes, and has seen to it that the cast and chorus have ample room for disporting themselves and exhibiting their elaborate costumes.

The lyrics are by George B. Hobart, the music by Max Hoffmann, and the staging was done by Herbert Gresham and Ned Wayburn.

The musical success of the evening was the ballad "Under the Old Oak Tree," as sung in the second act by Miss Hunting and George Austin Moore. It was encored time after time.

IDA RENEE AT THE LYRIC.

A New English Artist in Character Songs.

At the Lyric Miss Ida Renée is now appearing in the third instead of the second act of "The Royal Chef." She is a characteristic English music hall singer, and lends a welcome touch of sprightliness and vivacity to the rather crude wit and forced merriment of the latest importation from Chicago.

Physically she is as little and frail as Cissy Loftus, and her features are as regular and pleasing, though with something more characteristically English in them. Her songs have a rather unusual deftness in phrasing and characterization, and, while never really wicked, are certainly cynical enough as she sings them. To quote one of them, a sly, coy glance comes in the corner of her eye, and there's mischief when she turns around.

One of the songs describes a married couple's progress, as Hogarth might have called it. After three days the husband is effusive and caressing when he makes his excuses "to get off for a night on his own," and leaves a trusting heart behind him. After three weeks he is more glib and summary with his lies, and leaves a wife who is wretched. At the end of three years he is a bit ashamed of his same old story, and one feels that he might be reclaimed if she were willing to make the effort. But it is too late, for his once loving mate is being consoled by a Johnny, and packs him off without ado.

Another of them is the sportsman's progress, which shows a man of wealth and fame dragged down by a rag and a bone and a bunch of racehorses, the devil gloating over his fall in a deep wicked refrain. This is apparently too terribly tragic for Music Hall sensibilities, for the last stanza represents him as pulling himself together and backing up to the infinite disgust of the deep wicked devil.

A third song describes the plight of a monk whom a maid makes to kiss him in spite of the best of intentions.

Miss Renée sings well and with a light and airy sense of the humors of errant human nature. She is well worth a trip to the Lyric, and would make the success of a less unpromising play.

OVER A CUP OF TEA THE PRINCE PROPOSED

German Heir Apparent Then Telegraphed the Kaiser.

SHE IS A BROWN-EYED BLONDE

An Hour's Automobile Ride Caused Engagement to be Suspected Before There Was Any.

ALTONA, Prussia, Sept. 5.—Details of the announcement of the engagement of the Crown Prince Frederick William to the Duchess Cecilia, sister of the reigning Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, show that the Emperor, while dining with the notable people of Schleswig-Holstein last night, received a telegram from the Crown Prince, who was at Gelbensande, the home of the Duchess Cecilia and her mother.

His Majesty therupon arose, raised his glass, and said that the engagement of their Royal Highness and the Duchess had just taken place and called for a threefold hurrah for the couple. The banqueters greeted the announcement with tremendous cheers.

The Crown Prince had, it transpired, visited the Duchess and her mother at their lodge at Mueritz, on the Baltic, and while taking a cup of tea there he asked her to marry him. Upon receiving the consent of the Duchess the Crown Prince called for telegraph blanks and immediately wired to the Emperor and Empress.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—The only time the Duchess Cecilia and the Crown Prince had been seen together in public was a few evenings ago. The Crown Prince had called on her and her mother at the Kaiserhof Hotel, just before they left for home.

After talking with them for an hour the Crown Prince took them to the station in an automobile and found that the train did not start for an hour. He then asked them to drive round the city, and with them went through the principal streets, which started the first talk of an engagement.

The Duchess Cecilia is a tall, slight girl, light haired and brown eyed. Although she could scarcely be called pretty she has a vivid complexion and is of sprightly demeanor.

Cecilia was brought up simply by her parents and learned the duties of housekeeping as the daughter of any country gentleman. She is fond of riding and driving and speaks English and French perfectly and Russian well. Although she has lived several years abroad the Duchess remains a true German girl.

It is impossible to say whether it is a love match or not. Strong dynastic reasons for the marriage exist. Only once during the last century, in the case of Frederick III., has a Prussian King taken a wife except from a German princely house.

The Emperor desires to bring the Cumberland, Danish, and Netherlands Courts into closer relations with the German Court. The Duchess Cecilia's brother, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, married last June the Princess Alexandra, second daughter of the Duke of Cumberland, a sister of the future Queen of Denmark.

The Duchess Cecilia is also a niece by marriage of the Prince Consort of Holland. The best loved of Prussian Queens, Louise, was of the same family, but of the Strelitz branch.

IN THE SHOPS.

Among the most attractive postal card albums are those covered with coarse damask. They come in different colors; dark red, blue, or green, strapped across with bands of leather finished with seals. Ends of the leather are left to tie in front if desired. "In Friendship's Name" is on one side in small letters. One of the large sizes is a foot and a half high and less than half as wide. This costs $2.25. A smaller book, the same style binding, costs $1.25. The leaves are dark gray.

Fobs with the coats of arms of different colleges upon them in silver enameled in colors set on black silk and with a swivel and a few links of silver chain at the top, cost $1.50 each.

There are charming things, small works of art, for electric lamps. One of these is a clam shell, polished pearl inside and out, possibly seven inches long, and narrow. The shell is hinged at the back as in the natural shell, but half open in front, where there is the bronze figure of a maiden. At one side in the back of the shell, like a pearl, is a small, round electric light globe.

A bear in bronze, six or eight inches long, has an electric light bulb in its mouth. There is also a gigantic insect, about the same length, the wings and head of glass and the head forming the electric light bulb.

Fancy napkins of linen monile cloth are finished with a heavy cream lace set into the edge and giving it an irregular outline. This embroidery is also done in the deep cream, which is really more of a café au lait, a design of flowers running up from the corners—in one instance lilies of the valley, while at the side of the blossoms the monogram is done in the same soft shade.

Those colored handkerchiefs which have white centres, colored borders, and white edges are also pretty. The edge is hemstitched, straight in places, and at others running up into the colored border in flower and other fanciful designs. These are the fine, expensive handkerchiefs.

For the woman who likes a cat on her umbrella handle there is an attractive one in light carved wood, pussy having her back hunched in anger and with fire flashing from her big rhinestone eyes. The umbrella costs $12.

Very pretty shoe bags may be had for 95 cents. One of these has a design of bright pink flowers upon it, and is bound with green. It has two rows of four pockets, with elastic in the top of each.

A funny little needle case is of wood. There is a top which turns, and this is set to a certain number on the box, 6, 7, 8, or 9, and then a needle of that number will come from a hole in the top. All this for 25 cents.

An excellent rubber-lined traveling case may be bought for $1.25. The outside is of pretty, bright cretonne. There is a pocket for a sponge, four or five other long, narrower pockets for different purposes, besides places for tooth and nail brushes.

A Handy Andy is made of a linen-colored cotton. It is square, to hang on a stateroom wall, possibly, with a row of pockets along the lower half and a narrow pocket at each end of the upper part, and between these a round tomato pincushion covered with the material, and a case with a flannel leaf for needles. This costs $1.25.

In the fancy wash waistcoats for men, an attractive one is of dark blue, with delicate designs formed by single threads of pale blue, while the buttons are pearl in dark blue.

A pretty hat in the colors of the season is a toque or turban, deep brown, with the edge formed of rosettes of orange velvet set into other rosettes of brown silk. It costs $7.48.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The last Summer holiday being over, there is a general rush from the seaside and the different Summer resorts. Many of the house parties broke up yesterday and this morning. Newport continues a week more with to-day, as the second of the Horse Show, to be followed by the Dog Show and many entertainments.

The golf tournament at Baltusrol will begin to-day and last until Saturday. On Friday there will be a reception in the afternoon. This will be the first suburban Autumn function of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman arrive in town to-day. With Mr. Edward Bulkeley, they are to make a tour of the world, sailing this week for the Continent.

THE NEWS OF NEWPORT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Sept. 5.—Society was very busy to-day with luncheons, the horse show, and dinners. Mrs. Joseph E. Widener gave a luncheon in honor of Miss Alice Roosevelt at the Picard cottage, and Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. William E. Carter, Mrs. J. De Forest Danielson, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Mrs. E. B. Thomas, and Mrs. Charles Astor Bristed also entertained at luncheons. Dinners were given to-night by Mrs. E. A. Bruguiere, Mrs. Elisha Dyer, Jr., Miss Angie Leary, Mrs. Oliver G. Jennings, Mrs. Lewis Cass Ledyard, Mrs. Burke Roche, and Miss C. Ogden Jones.

Mrs. Bruguiere's dinner was an elaborate affair, and was followed by dancing. A large white tent was erected on the lawn, in which was set a table in the shape of a horseshoe, so arranged as to accommodate fifty guests, seated at the outside of the horseshoe, the inside space being utilized as a garden and courtyard. The piazzas of the cottage were beautifully decorated with pink flowers and palms.

Mrs. Elisha Dyer also entertained a party of fifty, the dinner being followed by an impromptu cotillion, led by Mr. and Mrs. Dyer. This was one of the liveliest dances of the season, there being little formality. The cotillion favors were baby rattles, toy whips, tin swords, tin horns, and baby ribbons.

Miss Leary's dance was in honor of Mrs. William F. Sheehan, and was followed by a musicale, at which the artists were Miss Virginia Lucy, pianist, and Claire Monteith, singer. The guests included Miss Anne Lyman, Dr. Raymond Guiteras, Miss Louise Leary, George C. Munsig, and Muller Ury.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Cass Ledyard entertained a dinner party of twenty at their cottage, Sunset Ridge. The table was spread on one of the broad piazzas of the cottage, overlooking the entrance to the harbor.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont entertained at the horse show to-day Mrs. Neilson Brown, Miss De Coppet, Count Lenburg Stiram, Count Perigney, and Edward Gray.

PRIZES FOR R. C. VANDERBILT

Miss Alice Roosevelt Views Judging as Guest of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt—Mrs. Burke Roche Drives Winner.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 5.—The Newport Horse Show opened to-day, and the attendance was fully as large as in previous years. The programme included six novice classes, which brought out a fine lot of horses, and there were also on the card three classes for local dealers with delivery wagons which awakened no interest among the fashionable people.

There was but one class in which society women participated, the runabout class, in which Mrs. Burke Roche drove Carmen and Miss Cynthia Roche drove Firman, the former being awarded the blue ribbon and the latter the red. Reginald C. Vanderbilt drove his horses in several classes. He won several prizes, his only first being in the novice class for small harness horses, in which Orchid, a recent purchase, won an easy victory over Eben D. Jordan's President. Mr. Vanderbilt's Doctor Selwonk was placed second to Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's Rosebery in the brougham and victoria classes.

Mrs. Grosvenor's Roseberry was the only horse to win two blue ribbons and C. E. Myrick was the only other owner to win twice, but with different horses.

Miss Alice Roosevelt, who was a guest of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, was attired in white and wore a large yellow hat with sweet peas, the hat being tied under the chin with white tulle strings. ROCKAWAY HUNT'S SHOW.

The Gymkhana Races Afford Much Amusement at Cedarhurst.

Sleek of coat and with harness and traps polished and sparkling in the sunshine, the horses gave the judges no end of trouble yesterday to decide which were entitled to the coveted blue ribbons at the show of the Rockaway Hunting Club. Miss Mollie C. Maxwell carried off a major portion of the ribbons with her beautiful pair, Jacobite and Rosebud, while her high-acting Catseye also caught the admiring glances of the officials and put on a better gait after the blue rosette had been awarded him in the harness horse class.

It was a gala day for the fashionable colony, and members of the club and their guests were out in force and crowded the broad porch of the clubhouse and overflowed upon the lawn upon which there had been laid out a circle. Nearly all of the judging was completed in the morning, while the afternoon was devoted to gymkhana races. The programme comprised eleven of the latter events and caused considerable amusement both for the participants and spectators. In the driving a chicken race for ladies the barnyard fowls proved anything but docile, and all refused to keep to the course. The manikin race was another of the gymkhana features. The riders carried dummies dressed in the garb of women and tramps, and a prize was also awarded to the unaker of the most grotesque manikin.

In the pony class Miss Mary Forbes's Ping Pong received the blue and James B. Taylor, Jr.'s San Toy the red ribbon after the judges had sent them about the ring many times.

Among the exhibitors and those present were:

William Brockie, Winthrop Burr, William Baylis, Adelaide B. Baylis, William Baylis, Jr., F. Tilden Brown, Vernon Brown, Howard C. Brokaw, Miss Louise Burton, Robert L. Burton, J. Chesver Cowdin, J. ON THE TENNIS COURTS.

Pell Wins in Two East Jersey Championship Final Matches.

Theodore Roosevelt Pell displayed vigorous and winning form yesterday in the finals of the East Jersey Lawn Tennis Association championship tournament. He won two of the prizes on the courts of the Elizabeth Town and Country Club, where a large and enthusiastic gallery gathered to witness the competitions. Pell was paired with H. F. Allen, the Philadelphian, in the championship doubles, and they gained the possession of the valuable challenge cups by defeating the Princeton-Yale combination, Raymond D. Little and George W. Case, by the score, 4-6, 6-3, 6-1, 6-3. In this match Pell was at the top of his game. He quickly gained the net in every rally, and bore the brunt of the attack and defense. It was the resourcefulness of his racquet work that proved most diverting and earned the last three sets by easy scores. In the final of the consolation singles Pell met M. S. Charlock, who had been showing excellent form all through the meeting. Charlock endeavored to play at whirlwind speed, and accomplished some spectacular work, but he was unsteady and lost, at 6-3, 6-1.

The ex-Canadian champion, Frederick G. Anderson of the Kings County Tennis Club won the championship singles in three straight sets by defeating T. V. B. Lyon of Yale, the score being 8-6, 6-1, 6-1. The Yale man placed the ball very cleverly in the first set and kept Anderson on the run about his court, making the games so close that the result was in doubt until the thirteenth game when Anderson got his passing strokes in working order and passed Lyon every time cleanly as the latter ran in to the net.

Miss Miller and Emory Miller won the championship mixed doubles in a spirited match, in which they defeated Miss Thomas and Sydney L. Smith. The score was 6-1, 10-8.

Henry W. Slocum, the veteran tennis champion who held the title in 1868 and 1889, after taking it from the great Dick Sears, yesterday proved that his racquet had not lost its cunning. He won in fine style in both singles and championship doubles in the tournament of the Pocahaway Hunting Club at Cedarhurst, L. I. Slocum was the low mark man in the handicap singles, being placed at owe 15. He played a hard match with William Adams, one of the younger experts at scratch and defeated him by the score of 4-6, 6-3, 6-4. Slocum and his partner Rawlins won their place in the final round of the championship doubles, taking all of their matches in straight sets.

Nine teams entered for the handicap doubles but the matches were not begun. It is expected that all events will be finished this week. The pairs are: Forbes and Tailer, owe half 15; Brokaw and H. Inman, plus half 15; Thorne and Evans, owe half 15; Dixon and W. Babcock, plus 15; S. Babcock and De Sibour, plus half 15; Whitehead and Thorne, plus half 30; Kipp and T. Inman, plus 30; Norris and Livingston, plus 15; Slocum and L. Inman, owe 15. The summary of the day's play follows:

Men's Championship Doubles.—Preliminary Round—Adams and Adams defeated W. R. K. Taylor and Beach, default.

First Round—Slocum and Rawlins defeated Adams and Adams, 6—3, 6—3; F. L. Pell and partner defeated Corby and Colby, by default; H. Homans and E. N. Potter defeated L. Valentine and Inman, 7—5, 3—6, 6—4; Thorne and Evans defeated Forbes and Tailer, 3—6, 9—7, 6—4.

Semi-final Round—Slocum and Rawlins defeated F. L. Pell and partner, 6—1, 6—0.

First Round—Tailer defeated F. Inman, by default; Evans defeated H. M. Inman, 6—1, 6—3.

Closely contested tennis matches were the order yesterday in the opening rounds of the annual open tournament of the Nyack Country Club, at Nyack, on the Hudson. Good progress was made in the men's singles which will be continued throughout the week. The summary:

Men's Singles.—Preliminary Round—Benjamin Strong defeated Thomas C. Trask, 6—2, 6—2; L. H. Fitch defeated J. L. Joys, 6—1, 6—2; Henry Torrence defeated Crownell, 6—4, 6—1; C. Edwards defeated R. Cottrell, 2—6, 3—6, 6—3; Lorraine C. Wyeth defeated S. O. Miller, 6—4, 4—6, 6—2; R. L. Jones defeated W. H. Baldwin, 6—3, 7—5.

ON LOCAL CRICKET CREASES.

Paterson Wins Final Metropolitan League Match—Women Played Good Game.

Cricketers were out in force yesterday at Prospect Park. The chief game was the final contest of the Metropolitan Cricket League between Manhattan and Paterson, which eventually resulted in a victory for Paterson by 42 runs, after they had declared their innings closed with only four wickets down. The feature of the game was the batting of W. Bunce for the winners. F. G. Warburton and J. W. Hooper also played well. The total score was: Paterson, 174, (declared;) Manhattan, 132.

A match between the Wanderers of New York and the West Indians' Team B was productive of considerable excitement. The West Indians won by the narrow margin of 2 runs. The totals were: West Indians Team B, 42 and 44; Wanderers, 40 and 46 for six wickets. The Thistles and Brooklyn Team C had a friendly meeting, in which the latter won rather easily by 61 runs.

Married versus Single was the title of the match which the Crescent Club played at Prospect Park. It proved a pleasant contest, but the single men won by an unexpectedly large margin of 87 runs. This was brought about by the fine batting of E. B. Reece, J. F. Stuart, and H. Smart, who put on 72, 64, and 55, respectively. The totals were: Kings County Married, 131; Single, 218.

The young women members of the Prospect Park Ladies' Cricket Club played a return match with the Kings' County Bachelors at Prospect Park, and the latter scored a second victory by 50 runs. Miss Stuart, who scored 10, did the best batting for the girls, and Miss Belva Tattersall captured most of the wickets.

The West Indians had a visit from the Yonkers Club for their return match in the championship series of the New York Cricket Association, and won handily by 73 runs on the first innings. The totals were: West Indians, 100; Yonkers, 27 and 30 for 4 wickets. Schenectady cricketers visited Prospect Park for a match with Brooklyn, who had little difficulty in winning by 61 runs on the first innings. The totals were: Brooklyn, 108; Schenectady, 43 and 98 for 5 wickets.

A large crowd of spectators gathered at Staten Island to witness the match between the Livingston Field Club and a Philadelphia team under the Captaincy of W. W. Foulkrod. The Staten Islanders won by 160 runs. The totals were: Philadelphians, 98 and 41 for 9 wickets; Livingston F. C., 135.

NEW YORK OARSMEN WIN

Capture a Majority of Events in Middle States Regatta.

TITUS THE FASTEST SCULLER

Union Boat Club Wins Newly Established Octuple Sculls Race—Potomacs First in Senior Eights.

Local rowing clubs captured a majority of the honors in the fifteenth annual regatta of the Middle States Regatta Association held over the Speedway course on the Harlem River yesterday afternoon, winning ten of the fourteen events.

In spite of the large number of entries, which required trial heats to be rowed in several of the events, the races were run off promptly on time. A United States revenue cutter kept the course free from interferences by tugs and other craft.

The best race of the day was generally admitted to be the junior octuple sculls event, which was put on the programme for the first time this year. There were four starters, representing the Hudson Boat Club, the Harlem Rowing Club, the Union Boat Club, and the Metropolitan Rowing Club, all of this city. The start was excellent, all the crews getting away together and keeping well together for the first quarter mile. Then the Union crew began to draw ahead, and at the half mile led by half a length, with the Harlems second, and the Metropolitan third by slight margins. At the three-quarters the Harlem crew came up on even terms with the Unions and from that point to the finish it was an even struggle, which was won by the Unions by a bare yard at the finish. The Metropolitans were third and the Hudsons fourth. The Harlem shell is four feet shorter than the Union boat, and the Harlem men on the officials' boat, who had backed their crew heavily, remarked regretfully: "If our boat had been as long as the Unions we would have beaten them by a foot."

The Argonauts of Toronto, who rowed in a boat borrowed from the Palisade Boat Club, won the intermediate eight-oared event with ease by a couple of lengths, but were beaten by a length and a half in the senior race by the red-shirted Potomac crew, from Washington, D. C.

C. S. Titus rowed what was declared by rowing experts on the officials' boat to be his prettiest single sculls race since he became a member of a local club, and defeated Fred Fuessel of the Harlem Rowing Club by a length and a half. Frank Vesely of the First Bohemian Boat Club, Titus's old adversary, and D. B. Duffield of the Detroit Boat Club finished third and fourth, respectively, close up with Fuessel. Summary:

BIG YACHTS IN RACE.

Atlantic Beat Vergemere and Yankee Led the Seventy-Footers.

The schooner Atlantic won another victory over the Vergemere, and the sloop Yankee again defeated the other seventy footers yesterday in the Fall Regatta of the Larchmont Yacht Club. Altogether there were forty-six starters.

The first division of the fleet, the seventy-footers, was sent off at 12:35, after three-quarters of an hour postponement in expectation of a better wind. The wind was light, from north by west. The Rainbow got the better of the start, and was followed by the Yankee and the Virginia in the order named. The Yankee, however, soon took the lead and was never afterward in the company of her competitors. She beat the Rainbow 9 min. 31 sec. and the Virginia 13 min. 57 sec. She was probably, however, helped somewhat by better luck in the prevailing fluky air.

The two big schooners were the last to start. The Atlantic crossed first, but having had to pay off to avoid crossing too soon, she had less headway on than the Vergemere, and the latter went right by her. The Vergemere continued to gain until she struck a soft spot, and then the Atlantic came up on even terms with her. The wind then shifted more to the west and both set spinnakers. The Atlantic had the lead at the first mark, and steadily increased it on the wind. They were to have sailed thirty miles, but were stopped at the end of the first round because of the approach of night. The Atlantic allowed 3:03, and won by 4:03.

The other winners were Anoatok, Tern, Alert, Rascal II., Una, Dorothy, Jeeb, Flim Flam, Arizona, Cotton Tail. Following is the summary:

Greater New Yorks and Quakers Divide the Honors—More Than 60,000 Local "Rooters" on Hand.

With one or two exceptions, large crowds witnessed the Labor Day games in the two major leagues, the official figures in seven cities showing a total attendance of 138,956. In the American League there were 72,608 "rooters" and in the National League 66,348. New York was the only place where the rival clubs clashed, and the National League team outdrew the Americans, the total being 37,327 to 24,632. The New Yorks and Chicagos were the only teams in the National League that won two games. No changes occurred in the championship record. In the American League, however, the champions again took the leading position by winning two games, while the Greater New Yorks lost one to Philadelphia. Chicago advanced to third place and St. Louis and Detroit exchanged places. Summary follows:

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

New Yorks Win Two Games from Boston in Presence of Big Crowd.

Nothwithstanding the fact that in the games between the New Yorks and Bostons the local team had won fourteen out of fifteen, the Polo Grounds held one of its largest crowds yesterday to see the teams play a double-header. According to the figures furnished by Secretary Knowles there were 37,327 persons present. As expected, McGraw's men won both games, the first quite handily, but it was not until the ninth inning, after one man was out, that Browne hit for two bases and Mertes sent Browne home with the winning run in the second game. Mathewson was batted more freely than usual in the first game, but the hits were too scattering to be of any account until the ninth inning. Then Delehanty hit to centre field for three bases, and after two men had gone out he ambled across the plate on Needham's three-baser.

In the second game Ames and Pittinger were the opposing pitchers. The local man did well, but he was handicapped by the errors of Bresnahan and Dunn. Boston held the lead until the seventh inning, scoring two runs in the first after two men were out. Abbatichio hit for three-bases, and tallied on Dunn's wild throw to first to catch Cooley, the latter reaching second. On Delehanty's hit, Dunn's throw being dropped by Bresnahan, Cooley ran home. Tenney scored in the fifth inning on a bunt, a steal, and Cooley's hit for three-bases.

The New Yorks scored two runs in the second inning on Dunn's three-bagger, Delehanty's wild throw, a wild pitch, and Bresnahan's out. Bresnahan scored a run in the seventh inning by beating out a hit, Browne's sacrifice, and Mertes's single. then in the ninth Browne's double and Mertes's single scored the winning run. The scores:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Chesbro Wins Against Quakers, but Powell's Effort Results in Defeat.

Chesbro had the Philadelphia Athletics at his mercy in the first game of the doubleheader yesterday afternoon, and by receiving excellent support the Greater New Yorks won by a score of 2 to 1. In the second game, however, the Quakers turned the tables and won by a score of 7 to 2

Conroy led off in the fifth inning of the first game with a two-base hit to left field. Kleinow's bunt, which Coakley threw wild to first base, enabled Conroy to reach third and Kleinow second. Chesbro struck out, and Dougherty was retired on a foul fly well caught by Noonan at the edge of the grand stand. Keeler, however, made a good hit to left field, scoring Conroy and Kleinow.

Up to the eighth inning the Philadelphians had made but one hit off Chesbro and no battery error was charged against him. In that inning, however, Monte Cross, after three balls and two strikes had been called, batted to the extreme centre field fence and made the circuit of the bases easily. Then Noonan and Coakley struck out, but Parnell and Pickering hit safely Hartsel stole second, and on Pickering's hit would have scored and tied the game, but after running third base for home he stumbled over Conroy and was compelled to put back.

Both teams started off at a lively gait in the second game, each scoring two runs in the first inning. It was after Waddell had sent Dougherty to first on the first four balls pitched, succeeded by a sacrifice and three singles, that he was replaced by Bender, and no further runs were done. Thereafter the New Yorks were totally unable to hit the Indian pitcher, while Powell was batted freely. Hartsel began the game with a home run, but struck out three times afterward. Shreck was the first batsman to face Clarkson in the last inning, and a hit to the right-field fence earned for him an easy home run.

The scores:

CHICAGO TOOK BOTH GAMES.

DETROIT, Sept. 5.—Chicago won both games of the double-header from Detroit this afternoon before one of the largest crowds that ever gathered at Bennett Park. In the first game the visitors started hitting Donovan, and, coupled with his wildness, gathered five runs in two innings. After that his was effective, but to no avail, as Altrock held Detroit safe beyond his spell of wildness in the first inning.

White pitched great ball in the second game, holding the locals safe from the start. Mullin was wild, and the errors behind him were costly. The fielding of Davis and Tannehill was particularly bright. Scores:

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

The financial district was entirely idle yesterday, all banks and Exchanges being closed on Labor Day. At London the market showed cheerfulness. Paris and Berlin did business, but nothing more notable was reported than some natural but moderate weakness in Russians. The world's markets, especially London's, seemed to have caught lately something of the cheer and new courage recently shown in our own.

The said lands will be sold subject to the lien of a mortgage covering all the lands hereinbefore described as formerly owned by the said National Clay Manufacturing Company, which said mortgage was dated the first day of July, 1902, and executed by Adrian Lyon, Trustee for Robert W. Lyle, to Edgar Brothers Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey, and given to secure the payment of the sum of $35,000, whereof the said Great Eastern Clay Manufacturing Company assumed and agreed to pay the sum of $35,000, and which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Clerk of Middlesex County, at New Brunswick, New Jersey, in Book 166 of Mortgages, page 523, on the 2d day of July, 1902.

The said lands will be sold with the rights to the grantee set forth in the description of the said lands hereinbefore contained and subject to the rights reserved to the grantor in said descriptions set forth.

The property of every kind above described will also be sold, and the purchaser will take the same subject to the performance by him of all pending contracts in respect to the said property or business heretofore lawfully made by the Receivers of the defendant company, and he must assume and agree to perform the same, and to save the Receivers harmless in respect thereto, and must give to the said Receivers such bond to secure said assumption and agreement as shall be approved by the United States Circuit Court for the District of New Jersey.

The property of every sort hereinbefore described will be sold as an entirety and as a going concern engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling clay products. As provided in said decree, the said sale will be made subject to confirmation, in the first instance, by the United States Circuit Court for the District of New Jersey, and then to confirmation by the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York.

Any party to the said suit and any creditor or creditors of the said defendant company and the Readjustment Committee of creditors acting under a plan for the readjustment and liquidation of the affairs of the defendant company and other allied companies may bid and purchase at such sale.

The undersigned will receive no bid from any one offering to bid for the said property who shall not first deposit with them as a pledge that he will make good his bid in case of its acceptance the sum of $50,000, in money or by certified check upon an incorporated bank or trust company in the City of New York or the City of New Brunswick, New Jersey, and they will receive no bid for the said property of less than the sum of $1,250,000, and upon the acceptance of any bid for the said property, the purchaser must forthwith deposit with the said Receivers the sum of $50,000 in cash or by certified check as aforesaid, but the amount of any cash or certified check previously deposited by the successful bidder will be received on account of the amount required on the acceptance of his bid.

Deposits received from unsuccessful bidders will be returned to them respectively when the property shall be struck down, and if either of the said courts shall not confirm the sale for which a deposit shall have been made, the deposit will be returned to the bidder.

In case any bidder shall fail to make the said deposit of $50,000 upon the acceptance of his bid, the said Receivers reserve the right, at their option, to then and there offer the said property for sale without further notice or advertisement, to adjourn the said sale, to sell the said property after a new advertisement or to apply to court for directions.

In case any bidder or purchaser shall fail to make good his bid upon its acceptance by the said Receivers, or, after such acceptance shall fail to comply with any order of either of the said courts relating to the payment thereof, or the consummation of the purchase, then the sums deposited by such purchaser shall be forfeited and absolutely retained by the said Receivers and shall be applied toward the expense of a resale and toward making good any deficiency in case the property be sold at a price less than that bid at said sale.

Upon confirmation of the sale by the said courts, the purchaser must make such further payment in cash on account of his bid as either of the said courts from time to time may require. The purchaser may satisfy and make good any part of his bid not required by the court to be paid in cash, by crediting upon claims of creditors of the defendant company held by the purchaser, and ascertained to be entitled to participate in such dividend of the assets of the said defendant company and to be lawfully held by the purchaser, such net amount, not exceeding eighty-five per cent. of the face of such claims, as in the judgment of the said Receivers the holder of the claim in question is entitled to upon a distribution by dividend of the assets of the said defendant company among its creditors.

Notice is further given that the said sale will be made subject to all and singular the provisions of the said decrees and each of them, whether in this notice specifically mentioned or not. The said decrees are on file in the offices of the Clerks of the said courts, respectively.

MGR. GIBBONS NOT WORRIED.

Says Waggaman's Failure Will Not Impair University's Work.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 5.—In a statement today, Cardinal Gibbons said he did not feel any anxiety over the future of the Catholic University in Washington, nor does he fear that its prosperity will be affected by the bankruptcy of Thomas E. Waggaman of that city, who was the depository of large funds belonging to the university.

"I shall do everything in my power to assist the university," said the Cardinal. "My interest in its success and prosperity is well known. There need be no apprehension that the work of the university will be impaired.

"There will be no diminution of its work; students will be taken as usual, and the courses will go on during the year precisely as if there had been no shrinkage in the Waggaman funds. There is money belonging to the university which was not in the hands of Mr. Waggaman."

LACK OF ENTHUSIASM MARKS LABOR PARADE

There Was No Well-Known Marcher to be Cheered.

20,000 MEN WERE IN LINE

Weinseimer, Butler, and Nason All Missing—Plenty of Music — Policeman Hurt Stopping Runaway.

Twenty thousand strong, and headed by 3,000 red-shirted, white-hatted housesmiths and bridgemen, the union hosts joined yesterday in their annual Labor Day parade.

The element of enthusiasm was largely lacking, both among the marchers and the crowds which lined Fifth Avenue. There was no Sam Parks to lead them. The Grand Marshal, James B. McCabe of the Goldbeaters' Union, did not even ride a white horse. There was not in all the line a single face to be singled out for a demonstration. "Dick" Butler, the friend of Parks, was not to be seen, and ex-Chief Devery was another absentee. That there would be no politics in the parade was understood. Only once did any political feeling crop out. "Down with Murphy!" yelled a Brooklyn teamster, who had evidently imbibed a personal supply of enthusiasm. "Hurrah for McCarren!"

"You must be the driver of a dump cart," shouted a Tammany bystander, and in the big laugh of his fellows that followed the adherent of the Brooklyn Senator lost all desire for further exploitation of his fealty.

"Diamond Phil" Weinseimer, who originally was to have headed the parade, was not to be seen at all. Following his indictment for extortion he resigned the Presidency of the Building Trades Alliance as well as of the Plumbers' Union. He stepped down as Grand Marshal at the same time that he handed in his resignation as President.

William Nason, Weinseimer's successor as President of the Building Trades Alliance, took no part in the parade. None of the trades represented in the Alliance participated in the demonstration, which was entirely under the auspices of the Central Federated Union. Notable among the absentees were the bricklayers, upon whom much of the present strain in the local labor world rests, and the plasterers, who boast an organization of more than 8,000 men in Greater New York.

The Amalgamated Butchers and Meat Cutters made a brave showing. They wore navy blue shirts, with white hats, ties, and belts. Almost 1,000 men were in their ranks, and they received a few scattered cheers. They have just called off their strike against Schwarzschild & Sulzberger and the United Dressed Beef Company.

In point of numbers the teamsters were strongest. They had probably 4,000 men in the parade.

The parade started down Fifth Avenue from the Plaza. There was no fault to find with the police arrangements. Particularly were the plans made effective at Twenty-third Street and Broadway, where gaps were regularly cut in the line so as to allow traffic to pass through at intervals so well timed that there was no appreciable halt in the procession.

The line was as follows:

Platoon of Mounted Police.
Grand Marshal James B. McCabe.
Grand Marshal's Aides.
Gustave Simon and James H. Hatch.
Assistant Grand Marshal Charles W. Oberwager.
Assistant Grand Marshal's Aides.
James P. Holland, James Hand, Michael Brayer, M. Dolphin, Gus Waldinger, and John Taggart.
Officers and Delegates of the Central Federated Union.
First Division—Housesmiths' and Bridgemen's Union, Theatrical Protective Union, Actors' Protective Union, Architectural Iron Workers, Metallic Lathers; James Daly, Marshal.
Second Division—International Brotherhood of Teamsters; William J. Slade, Marshal.
Third Division—Dock Builders, Engineers No. 20, Engineers No. 124, Machinery Riggers; Matthew McConnville, Marshal.
Fourth Division—Firemen No. 56, Machinists, Patternmakers, Boilermakers, Coppersmiths, Range Mounters and Setters, Tar, Felt, and Water Proofers; John Hagland, Marshal.
Fifth Division—Goldbeaters and Silversmiths; John Kliqus, Marshal.
Sixth Division—Stone Masons and Masons' Helpers; Henry Hand, Marshal.
Seventh Division—Rockmen and Excavators, Pipe Calkers and Tappers; James L. Barry, Marshal.
Eighth Division—Butchers and Bakers; William Graveno, Marshal.
Ninth Division—Piano and Organ Workers, Carriage and Wagon Workers; Daniel Spellman, Marshal.
Tenth Division—Belgian Pavers, German Pavers, Cement and Asphalt Workers; Thomas Rock, Marshal.

For half an hour before the parade was actually under way Fifth Avenue was lined three deep with spectators on either side. The marchers were dismissed in and about Washington Square, where the Grand Marshal and his aides reviewed them, being reinforced by the division marshals as they arrived. Just before the parade started considerable excitement was caused when the horse of George Simons, one of the Housesmiths, ran away. When the animal was finally caught, Simons concluded that walking was good enough for him.

The Housesmiths and Bridgemen's Union marched in four divisions. There were two divisions from Manhattan, one from Brooklyn, and another from Jersey City.

The Theatrical Protective Union, the next organization in line, was followed by half a hundred members of the Actors' National Protective Union. In a carriage at their head rode Dolleen Cole, the President of the Ladies' Branch.

With the Teamsters' Union were all manner of carts and trucks. There was a United States mail wagon in line, and a milk cart brought up the rear of their division. There were about 3,500 men with the teamsters.

The Cement and Asphalt Laborers, headed by a fife and drum corps, were almost 1,000 strong. The Steam Engineers had half as many men in line, and the Riggers' Protective Union about 300. The riggers were preceded by an elaborate float. The Machinists' Union made a good showing. They were not uniformed, but wore red badges.

Various branches of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers had considerably more than 1,000 men in the parade. The Stone Masons and their helpers were almost as numerous.

There were thirty-three bands and fife and bugle corps in the procession. They were so close together that there was not a moment when music was not in the air at any point along the line.

The last of the marchers reached Washington Square and disbanded under the arch at 1:45 o'clock. A large crowd was gathered at the arch and around the square, and while it was thickest a horse ran away. Policeman William Headman of the Mercer Street Station sprang for the animal's head, and caught its bridle. The horse dragged him for some little distance, and then fell with him to the pavement. Headman was painfully injured.

NO BANDS IN PARADE.

Paterson Brass Musicians and Fife and Drum Men in a Row.

PATERSON, Sept. 5.—There were no brass bands in the Labor Day parade here, as a result of the row that arose between the American Federation of Musicians and the fife and drum corps of the city because the latter have not joined the federation. There were sixteen fife and drum corps in line, and the 5,000 marchers had plenty of music, but at the picnic at Willard Park this afternoon there was no dance music, as all the brass bands and orchestral players are members of the federation, and they were not allowed to play.

A few minutes before the parade started a committee from the United Trades and Labor Council waited on J. W. Grish, the leader of Grish's Band, and ordered him and his men out of the parade. They were there in uniform, ready to march, but they obeyed orders and left the line. No other brass band was in line.

A queer feature of the row is that the members of the fife and drum corps have a union of their own and have seats in the United Trades and Labor Council, the very body that ordered the brass bands not to parade with the fife and drum corps men.

NON-UNION MEN PARADE.

Cripple Creek's Unique Observance of Labor Day.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Col., Sept. 5.—Labor Day was observed here with a parade of 3,000 independent workmen. It was the first time in the history of the camp that the union men failed to parade, and probably the first observance of Labor Day by strictly non-union men in America.

Banners reading, "They Can't Come Back," "Cripple Creek Is Still in America," and "We Don't Hire Salaried Agitators," were carried. Army officials, the fire company, and the local militia participated.

Newark's Biggest Labor Parade.

NEWARK, Sept. 5.—The Labor Day parade here to-day was the largest ever held in this city. Over 18,000 men were in line. A large crowd viewed the paraders. Mayor Henry M. Doremus, members of the Common Council, and other city officials reviewed the parade from the balcony of the City Hall.

BUILDING TROUBLE CONTINUES.

No Satisfactory Proposition for Peace Before Employers, Says Eidlitz.

According to the officers of the Building Trades Employers' Association, no peace propositions which can be considered have been made by the unions in the Building Trades Alliance. Charles L. Eidlitz, President of the Association, said last night:

"We have been receiving daily propositions of a hazy kind, none of which we can accede to as a basis of settlement so far. At first recognition of the Alliance was made a condition of settlement, but latterly this condition has been dropped. Those making the propositions apparently want to have them accepted before they are stated fully. We can, however, consider no basis of settlement that is not in line with our plans—that is, the calling off of the strikes and the signing of the arbitration agreement as a first principle. In the meantime the employment of men individually under the arbitration agreement will go on."

A special meeting of the Building Trades Alliance will be held to-day, at which the question of plans of settlement with the alternative of an extension of the strikes will be considered. Notwithstanding, the statements of the employers, the delegates talk as if there was some understanding among the employers that plans of settlement were being considered.

CAR KILLS MOUNTED BLUECOAT

Policeman Burns's Green Horse Threw Him Under Trolley.

Thrown from his horse directly in front of a trolley car going at full speed down a steep grade, Edward Burns, one of the youngest members of the Yonkers police force, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon. A panic ensued on the car, which was crowded with excursionists. Men, women, and children jumped to the street, believing that the car was about to be overturned, and the horse, which escaped by a miracle, dashed into a crowd of pedestrians, knocking several down and scattering them in all directions.

The accident, which was witnessed by hundreds, happened on Elm Street near Nepperhan Avenue. There is a steep grade at this point, and despite the brakes the trolley cars gain tremendous headway in descending. Burns, who lived in Oak Street, had been home to dinner with his wife and three young children. Returning to Police Headquarters, he got a new horse, as his own had gone lame. Although the animal was said to be a green one he acted well until Burns reached Elm Street and Nepperhan Avenue. Here he drew rein for a moment to look for his partner, and as he did so a trolley car swung into Elm Street and started down the grade.

Seeing the car running directly toward him, the horse began to prance, and when the car was within a few feet of him he reared and made a dash as though to cross the tracks. Burns was thrown directly under the trucks.

The horse was struck on the hind quarter, knocked down, and rolled over half a dozen times before the car was brought to a standstill at the foot of the hill.

BROOKS'S CHAUFFEUR HELD.

Western Union Officer Halted While Out Riding with Friends.

Bicycle Policeman May of the Tremont Station arraigned John Riley, a chauffeur, in the Morrisania Court yesterday for exceeding the automobile speed limit. May swore that he saw Riley speeding the automobile at twenty-five miles an hour on King's Bridge Road.

In the automobile were Gerald Brooks, an officer of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and four friends. Riley was held in $300 bond, which he gave. He is said to have been the first chauffeur to drive the "White Ghost," the racing automobile owned by Alfred G. Vanderbilt.

FOLLOWS HIS FRIEND TO GRAVE.

Schullmeyer Hangs Himself Just as Fellow-Workman Did.

Paul Schullmeyer, forty-one years old, hanged himself in his apartments, on the third floor at 172 Chrystie Street, yesterday. It is supposed that his act was due to a similar suicide, three weeks ago, of his friend and fellow-worker John Brendel of 151 East Third Street, who hanged himself in the same manner. Schullmeyer and Brendel were carpenters and worked at the same bench.

Late last night Schullmeyer took his child up stairs and put it to bed, while his wife remained to chat with neighbors. She did not return to her rooms until two hours later. The doors were locked, and when the wife entered by the fire-escape she found Schullmeyer's lifeless body swinging to a chandelier.

BIG WILLIAMSBURG BLAZE.

Fire Starts in Sawdust and Spreads to Mining Engineer's Plant.

The one-story frame building at 222 North Eleventh Street, Williamsburg, occupied by John Pearsall, who sells sawdust, together with the two-story frame structure No. 224, adjoining, occupied by David McKnight, mining engineer, were destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. The loss on buildings and machinery is placed at about $35,000. McKnight was the heaviest loser, his damage being estimated at $30,000.

The fire was discovered in the sawdust establishment by Policeman O'Connor of the Bedford Avenue Station. The interior of the building was then a roaring furnace. When Fire Chief Duffy arrived he immediately sent in a second alarm. Within a few minutes the flames had spread to McKnight's building.

LOCAL MEAT CUTTERS ARE READY TO SECEDE

Have Practically Decided to Leave the National Union.

RETURN ON OPEN SHOP BASIS

Abandoned Strike Here on Their Own Hook—Plan to Form Local Union, It Is Said.

The local meat cutters and bucher workmen swarmed back to work yesterday as individuals, although they still consider themselves union men. They go back on the open shop basis, and it is said that they are so angry with the National officers of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen that they have practically decided to cut loose from the National union and form a big local independent union to take in men within twenty-five miles of this city.

The men who went on strike here had nothing to gain by following the lead set by strike leaders in Chicago and other Western cities. As it turned out, they had a lot to lose, and lost. The local leaders opposed the strike in the first place. The action of the local unions in calling off the strike early Sunday morning was independent of the two National officers who were supposed to have special charge of the New York strike. These are National Secretary Homer D. Call and National Organizer Henry L. Eichelberger. Organizer Eichelberger said yesterday:

"I know nothing of the arrangements and was left out of them. The New York locals practically 'fired me' as far as New York is concerned. Therefore I have nothing to say about the matter."

Charles A. Hilton, representing Carmen's Local, No. 256, in the local Advisory Board of the strikers, admitted yesterday that the strike was off. He added:

"About 50 per cent. of the men are to be taken back to-day, to go to work to-morrow, and 35 per cent. more will be taken back next week. Most of the remaining 15 per cent. will be taken back later."

It is understood that many men who are accused of participating in disturbances or who otherwise made themselves obnoxious during the strike will never be taken back. These men do not expect to be taken back, it was said.

Superintendent Kirscheimer of the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Company said last evening:

"The open shop will now be a permanent condition in our plant. The men who are being re-employed as individuals understand this and have agreed to it. We have no hard feelings against the men, knowing that they were drawn into the strike. We may have 50 per cent. of our re-employed men at work to-morrow, and they start in at 6 A. M. There are certain men who were active in making trouble whom we will never re-employ. We expect the Chicago strike to end soon."

On behalf of the United Dressed Beef Company the following statement was made:

"We are re-employing our men as individuals on the open-shop basis as fast as we can. More than 50 per cent. will probably be re-employed, and all are eligible for vacancies except those who misbehaved during the strike. Considering the number of men on strike and the length of time they were out, there was not a very large number of these men. The re-employed men will go to work in the morning, and some may start shortly after midnight."

CHICAGO STRIKE NEAR END.

Negotiations in Progress Between Packers and Former Employes.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—Indications to-night are that the stock yards strike, begun two months ago, may be called off within twenty-four hours. Through the medium of a middleman, negotiations were begun to-day in an effort to secure an understanding with the packers on which the striking unions can rely as a basis for abandoning the strike to-morrow afternoon. It was admitted to-night by Secretary Tracey of the Allied Trades Council of the unions on strike that a message opening such negotiations had been delivered to-day to representatives of the packing firms by W. E. Skinner, general agent of the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company, acting as a middleman.

According to the plans to-night an answer is to be submitted to-morrow by the packers in time for it to be reported at a special meeting of the Allied Trades Council. This meeting has been called for the forenoon. If the packers give an encouraging answer, the unions, it is said, will then vote on discontinuing the strike.

CLAIM SWINDLERS MISLED.

Based Demand for Damages Upon Erroneous Newspaper Report.

The Union Railway claim agents think that they have foiled a gang of impostors who depend for their livelihood on getting money from street railroads by filing accident claims based upon newspaper reports of accidents. A few days ago a claim was filed with the local company by a Boston lawyer in behalf of a man who said that he was hurt in the collision of two cars in the Bronx on July 31.

The police told the reporters that the cars had vestibules. As a matter of fact, they were open, and their description as vestibuled in the newspapers the next day was an error.

The Boston lawyer's client said that he had been sitting right back of the vestibule of one of the cars. The certificate as to his injury was signed by a woman doctor, who the agent says is a member of the gang.

Two of the alleged swindlers were arrested, but jumped their bail. The police are looking for them.

BARBARIANS WHEN IN TOWN.

So Magistrate Pool Called Two Bridge Window Climbers of Poughkeepsie.

In fining five young men $3 each for climbing through the sides of a Coney Island train at the Manhattan entrance of the Brooklyn Bridge, Magistrate Pool in the Tombs Court yesterday reversed the attitude he had hitherto taken toward such offenders. Two of the prisoners had been locked up all afternoon and night in a cell in the Oak Street Station.

These two had come from Poughkeepsie on Sunday to spend Labor Day at Coney Island. They admitted in court they had never been the famous resort and were eager and in a hurry to catch the first train. In extenuation of their offense they said they did not know the rules, although they admitted they would not have done the same thing if they were in Poughkeepsie.

"I suppose you have read in the newspapers a good deal of the bridge crush?" asked the court.

They admitted they had.

"And I suppose," continued the Magistrate, "you felt that the instant you got into the city you must act like the barbarians the newspapers describe the rushers in the bridge crowds to be."

After paying their fines they walked decjectedly out of court.

Boy Jolted Off Train and Killed.

George Lutze, twelve years old, of 25 West End Avenue, was jolted off a New York Central freight train in the vicinity of Seventy-eighth Street last night, and, falling between two freight cars, was run over and killed instantly. He had been riding on the top of a car, despite frequent warnings not to get on the trains.

GIRL DISFIGURED FOR LIFE.

Appears Against Man Who, She Says, Slashed Her Face.

Her face disfigured for life by a scar extending from under her right ear almost to her mouth, Nancy Mandato, who it is alleged was slashed with a razor while she was walking with a man on Mulberry Street on Aug. 21, appeared in the Tombs Court yesterday as complainant against Joseph Perrotto of 102 Mott Street, who she says slashed her.

The girl had just left St. Vincent's Hospital. Perrotto had been in jail awaiting the result of her injuries. The girl told Magistrate Pool that Perrotto had tried to murder her. Counsel for the prisoner waived examination, and he was held in $1,000 bail for trial.

COMPROMISE AVERTS STRIKE ON ELEVATED

Subway Motormen Get $3 50 for Ten-Hour Day.

THREE-YEAR AGREEMENT

Both Sides Pleased at the Final Result—Reached After a Prolonged Conference.

After a conference between August Belmont, President of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, and representatives of the elevated road employes, it was announced last night that all differences between the company and its men had been satisfactorily adjusted, and that the danger of an Elevated strike was over.

Concessions from both sides brought about this result. The principal point at issue between the Interborough management and the labor organizations comprising the employes on the elevated system in this city, the bitterly contested question of motormen's wages in the subway, was settled by compromise. Mr. Belmont receded from his original position that a subway motorman's wages should be $3 a day, and consented to pay $3.50, the rate demanded by the men. On the other hand, the latter agreed to a ten-hour working day in the tunnel instead of one of nine hours, which they had been holding out for.

A number of minor details of the agreement, which so far is merely a verbal one, will be arranged to-day at a conference between the National representatives of the unions and Vice President E. P. Bryan of the Interborough Company. This conference, it is understood, will be held at Mr. Bryan's office in the Park Row Building. A contract embodying the terms of the agreement will then be drawn up, which, according to officials of the company, will remain in force for three years.

The conference yesterday was held at Mr. Belmont's office in the Equitable Building. The Interborough Company was represented by Mr. Belmont, Vice President E. P. Bryan, and Superintendent Frank Hedley. The employes were represented by Warren S. Stone, Charles Wilson, and W. D. Mahon, National heads of the Brotherhoods of Engineers and Firemen and of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America respectively. The three chiefs were accompanied by all the local leaders of the three organizations and the Executive Committees of the latter. All told twenty-nine persons took part in the conference.

Company Ready for Strike.

The meeting was of nearly five hours' duration. Before going into the conference, the labor leaders had made arrangements to have the men belonging to their various organizations leave work at a moment's notice should the conference come to naught. And the company, while its chief officials were making a final effort for peace with the disgruntled labor leaders, was quietly transferring a little army of strike breakers to the car barns at the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street terminal, which, earlier in the day, had been fitted up with cots and cooking utensils and had been stocked with provisions for a long siege.

Until just before the conference came to a close, it looked as though the city shortly would be in the throes of one of the biggest strikes in its history. Both sides had thoroughly marshaled their forces, and the only thing wanting to send the opposing camps into action was the word that was expected from the conference room—that final negotiations had failed.

It was 2:45 o'clock when the meeting got under way. The first few minutes must have been spent very pleasantly for such a serious affair, for the mirth of the participants was audible in the corridor beyond. This led to the belief that a peace agreement had been reached in a hurry, and that only the formalities remained to be gone through. But as the meeting dragged on there was a change of opinion among those that waited outside. Among the latter were many labor men. They shook their heads gravely and insisted that this meant war. They became more firm in their opinion when three hours after the conference had begun, loud voices were heard from the room, and several persons spoke at once.

Shortly before 7 o'clock a couple of labor representatives emerged from the room.

"It will be over in a few minutes," said one of them. "We have won and will get all we have been fighting for."

Mr. Bryan's Statement.

But Vice President Bryan came out a moment later. He said that they were not done fighting. It was half an hour later when the conference came to a close. Mr. Bryan was the first one to emerge from the room. He said:

"It's practically settled. The boys will get three dollars and a half for a ten-hour day."

A moment later the conferrees began coming out in a body. Mr. Bryan then supplemented his earlier statement by saying:

"We have made definite arrangements at the conference, but some details still remain to be arranged. They will be settled to-morrow afternoon at my office, when there will be a meeting between the men and representatives of the company.

"The substance of our agreement is that we have consented to give the men three dollars and a half for a ten-hour working day. We have also made arrangements for a three years' contract, which the com-

SENATOR DAVIS'S LIMIT $50,000

His Children Said to Object to Large Campaign Contributions.

Special to The New York Times.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Sept. 6.—A report comes from Elkins from a source believed to be reliable that Senator Davis, the Democratic nominee for Vice President, and his brother, Col. Thomas B. Davis of Keyser, West Va., who was the Democratic candidate for Congress in the Second District four years ago, have each contributed $50,000 to the Democratic campaign fund for all purposes, and that that will be the limit.

It has always been believed by persons knowing the Davises that Mr. Davis would be a heavy contributor to the campaign fund. It is said, however, that his daughters, Mrs. Elkins and Mrs. Arthur Lee, dislike the fact that their aged father has been burdened with campaign responsibilities, and are opposed to his contributing large sums. Senator Davis's only son, John T. Davis, now ill with typhoid fever, is also said to have similar objections.

Four years ago John T. Davis spent large sums in four counties, hoping to aid his uncle Tom in his race for Congress, but Col. Davis was defeated. Since then the Davises have had little faith in politicians and are very cautious about handing out money to them.

Col. Davis is now ill at his home in Keyser, and while his condition is not considered dangerous, his friends are apprehensive on account of his age.

AIRSHIP MAKES GOOD SHOWING.

Benbow's New Dirigible Balloon Tested at World's Fair.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 6.—A test of the airship invented by Prof. T. E. Benbow at the World's Fair aeronautic concourse this afternoon was declared by experts present to be highly satisfactory under the existing conditions. While Prof. Benbow did not qualify for the $100,000 contest, it is believed that he will be able to do so, as he proved that his balloon is dirigible and that his inability to sail back and forth over a given course to-day, was due to the incomplete state of his preparations.

Not all of the motors which he proposes to use in sailing his machine were in place to-day. The amount of gas with which the balloon bag was filled was not adequate, and he was handicapped by having his balloon held by a rope 150 feet long. This precaution was taken because an unfavorable wind was blowing at the time of the test, and it being the first trial of the machine, it was feared the inventor would not be able to keep the balloon within bounds.

After ascending to the height allowed by the rope the machine sailed 400 yards along the aeronautic concourse and partially executed a turn back toward the starting point. The inadequate motors and the stiff breeze prevented the complete success of this evolution, and the men who had hold of the restraining rope pulled the balloon back to earth.

SEVEN DEAD IN WABASH WRECK

Train Carried 500 Passengers for St. Louis—Thirty Injured.

MOBERLY, Mo., Sept. 6.—The southbound Wabash passenger train which left Des Moines for St. Louis at 6.40 A. M. was wrecked to-day near Pendleton, Mo., killing four passengers and injuring more than thirty others.

The dead are J. E. Nichols of Macon, Mo.; Mrs. Henry Folcht, Huntington, Penn.; Mrs. C. H. Graves, La Plata, Mo.; Edna Patterson, La Plata, Mo.; Mrs. Henderson, La Plata, Mo.; Mrs. Anna Brenner, Macon, Mo., and Miss Hebler, daughter of A. F. Hebler, Macon, Mo.

The train, which was composed of an engine, baggage and smoking cars, day coach, diner, and Pullman sleeper, was well filled, it being estimated by Wabash officials that there were about 500 persons on board. The train was running at its scheduled speed when the accident occurred.

The day coach left the track and, breaking loose from the baggage and smoking cars, plunged down an embankment, dragging the diner with it. The Pullman did not leave the track.

The heavy dining car crashed on top of the coach, and the majority of those killed and injured were passengers in the latter.

FALL 85 FEET FROM BRIDGE.

One Man Fatally Hurt—Another, Landing on Him, Escapes.

OSSINING, Sept. 6.—Two men were injured, one fatally, by falling eighty-five feet from a new bridge near Ossining to-night. They were rushed down on a train of the New York and Putnam Railroad to the Fordham Hospital.

The men fell off the bridge while carrying a beam across it. Andrew Bannack struck the ground first and received fatal injuries, but John Costello landed squarely on top of Bannack, and escaped with merely a few cuts and bruises.

The bridge is of the cantilever variety, and is being built by the American Bridge Company over a branch of the Croton River. It is nearly completed.

NEW CRUISER'S ENGINES TRIED.

The Chattanooga Will Be Put Into Commission This Month.

The new sheathed cruiser Chattanooga began the dock trial of her engines just before noon yesterday at the navy yard. Commander Alexander Sharp, Jr., who has been detailed to command her, and some of the other officers who are to be of her complement were on board, preparing to put the vessel into commission later in the month.

The Chattanooga is a sister ship to the Denver, which was put into commission in May, and is now in service at sea. The Chattanooga's contract was given to the Crescent Shipyards Company on Dec. 14, 1899, and the vessel was to have been completed on June 14, 1902. The time was extended to July 15, 1903. She is 292 feet in length, 44 feet beam, 15½ feet draught, 3,500 tons displacement, and is to have a speed of 16½ knots.

BISHOP OF DIJON RESIGNS.

Stands by the Vatican in Its Contest with French Republic.

ROME, Sept. 6.—In private audience with the Pope to-day Mgr. Le Nordez resigned the Bishopric of Dijon. The Vatican authorities consider this an answer to the speech of Premier Combes at Auxerre Sunday last.

It was the summoning to Rome of the Bishop of Dijon and the Bishop of Laval by the Vatican for trial without consulting the French Government which led to the rupture of relations between France and the Vatican.

SHERMAN SQUARE NEW AMUSEMENT CENTRE

Quiet Upper West Side Threatened with a Rialto.

LIEBLERS MAY BUILD THEATRE

Thompson & Dundy Hold Option on Site for Winter Menagerie—Hammerstein Planning a Vaudeville House.

It looks as if the quiet of the upper west side is to be rudely broken into by the building of several playhouses. The latest step toward the transformation of that neighborhood into another Rialto is the probable purchase of a lot on Sherman Square, at Seventy-third Street, by Thompson & Dundy, proprietors of Luna Park, Coney Island. They have not yet positively announced it, but it is understood on good authority that they have an option on the big lot on the corner of Amsterdam Avenue and Seventy-third Street, just above where Broadway crosses the avenue.

The land is now occupied by the United States Stables. If the deal is put through, as it probably will be soon, the lot will become the site of a sort of Winter menagerie, with other amusement features.

Some time ago Oscar Hammerstein announced that he would probably put up a vaudeville house in the vicinity of Sherman Square. This, when it goes up, will probably be run on the same plan as the Victoria, with a long bill of vaudeville specialists and daily matinées.

But the most important of all the places of amusement likely to go up around Sherman Square is the theatre planned by Liebler & Co. This firm, one of the largest producers in New York, has never had any theatre it could call its own. With many prominent stars under its management, the lack of a theatre has kept it from being perfectly independent. A member of Liebler & Co. has control of a lot near Sherman Square, fronting on Broadway. It is fully large enough for a playhouse of the modern variety, with fire escapes and a passage running all the way around.

When Liebler & Co. get this new house up they will be ready to carry on their ventures on a much larger scale than hitherto. How soon this will be can not be known yet. The firm is not talking much about the project until it is ready to begin.

Theatre builders heretofore have hesitated to build above Times Square. The Majestic on the Grand Circle, at Fifty-ninth Street, was considered a risky proposition. Real estate people prophesied a failure. The Majestic has been a wonderful success. But hardly the wildest dreamers ever thought of making quiet little Sherman Square an amusement centre up to a year ago.

There is a big express station on the subway at Seventy-second Street, Broadway, and Amsterdam Avenue. This would make all nearby theatres easily accessible from nearly all parts of New York.

A member of Liebler & Co. was questioned yesterday about his firm's probable part in the transformation of Sherman Square. He intimated that there was "something doing," but said he wasn't ready to give out any details yet. Several months ago Liebler & Co. said they were to build far uptown, but didn't tell the exact site.

PRINCE TO WED IN BERLIN.

German Royal Marriage Likely to Take Place Early Next Year.

BERLIN, Sept. 6.—The wedding of Crown Prince Frederick William and the Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin will take place in Berlin, where the visiting members of royal families can be entertained better than at the bride's home. The marriage will probably take place early in the new year.

One wing of the Royal Palace at Hanover has been undergoing reconstruction for a year, and is now being refurnished and redecorated sumptuously. The Hanoverians are convinced that the Prince after his marriage will be promoted and transferred from the First Garde de Corps to the Royal Uhlan Regiment stationed at Hanover, and that the palace there will be assigned to him as a residence.

METHODISTS RAP LYNCHERS.

Participants in Statesborough Affair Must Leave Church or Repent Publicly.

Special to The New York Times.

STATESBOROUGH, Ga., Sept. 6.—The conference of the Methodist Church, which assembled here to-day, passed vigorous resolutions condemning lynching and other acts of mob violence and calling upon any member of the Church who participated in the recent outbreak in which two negroes were killed to withdraw from the Church or to make public confession of their wrongdoing and express the most earnest penitence.

The conference was called to discuss the rumors that have been current that some of the members of the Church went to make up the mob that captured and burned Reed and Cato. The action of the conference was registered without a dissenting voice.

CORONER MAY CHANGE FINDING

Will Examine Dubois Girl's Suitor Before Giving Official Opinion.

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 6.—Detective McGrath, who went to Hammonton, N. J., last night in order to take the deposition of Ernest La Pointe, the suitor of Louise Dubois, whose dead body was found on the Woodmont shore last Friday, returned to New Haven to-night with La Pointe.

Although Coroner Mix gave out a statement this afternoon to the effect that Miss Dubois committed suicide, it is not his official finding in the case. He said to-night that he might change his opinion after an examination of La Pointe and other witnesses whom he will call upon to-morrow.

ENGINEER DIED AT THROTTLE.

Was Running "Driller" in Erie Yards at Weehawken.

James Reeder, fifty-five years old, engineer of Engine 638, a driller in the Erie yards, dropped dead while the engine was at Weehawken at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

When the engineer collapsed the fireman took charge and hurried to Fifteenth and Bloomfield Streets, Hoboken, where a physician was called. Death was said to have been due to heart disease.

HIT WRECK IN EAST RIVER.

Sound Steamer Payne in Danger—Officers Averted Stampede.

When off Fort Schuyler on her way to Bridgeport, Conn., yesterday the Sound steamer William G. Payne of the Bridgeport Line struck a submerged obstruction and was so badly damaged that she was unable to proceed and had to anchor.

On the boat were about 300 passengers who were panic stricken. The majority of them were on deck when the accident occurred, and all rushed for the stairways, but were calmed by the ship's officers. A woman attempted to jump overboard, but was prevented by one of the deck hands. The passengers were transferred about an hour after the accident to the steamer Richard Peck and taken to New Haven.

The Payne left her pier, at the foot of Peck Slip, East River, at 3 o'clock. When she was off Fort Schuyler a loud crash was heard. Capt. Witherwax at once signaled the engineer to stop, but the engines had been brought to a standstill by the shock. After quieting the passengers, Capt. Witherwax found that the starboard wheel had struck the obstruction, wrecking the buckets, so that it was impossible for the wheel to revolve. The engines, it was found, were not damaged.

After the passengers were transferred to the Richard Peck the Payne was towed back to her pier and her cargo taken off. She was afterward towed to the Quintard Iron Works, at the foot of East Twelfth Street, where she will be repaired. Capt. Witherwax said last night:

"What the boat struck I do not know. It was undoubtedly some large pile or a submerged wreck. We were in the course taken by all the Sound steamers."

NEW TEACHERS AT BILTMORE.

Others Left Vanderbilt School in a Body When One Was Discharged.

Special to The New York Times.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Sept. 6.—The Biltmore parish school was reopened to-day with a new staff of teachers. All the old teachers resigned when Mr. Vanderbilt asked for the resignation of Miss Nolin, the teacher of mathematics.

Dr. Rodney Rush Swope, who had charge of affairs at the school during Mr. Vanderbilt's absence, instructed Miss Carman, the Principal, to demand Miss Nolin's resignation. Miss Carman refused, and Dr. Swope appealed to Mr. Vanderbilt. He upheld Dr. Swope, and all the teachers went out in a body.

Mr. Vanderbilt has appointed Miss Alice R. Jackson of Philadelphia Principal, and Miss Julia Williams of Westfield, Conn., First Assistant.

NO BANKRUPT, SAYS WAGGAMAN

Denies University Is a Preferred Creditor—Case Up in Court.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—The answer made to-day by Thomas Waggaman through his attorneys in the District Supreme Court in the proceedings to throw him into bankruptcy and to place his estate in the hands of a receiver was to the effect that he was not a bankrupt and that no act of bankruptcy had been committed by him.

It is claimed that there has been no default of interest thus far in any of his notes and that the unrest in regard to his affairs has resulted from the filing of the deeds of trust to secure the Catholic University more thoroughly for moneys loaned to Waggaman or placed in his hands in trust.

At the same time, it was stated by the attorneys for the Washington banks, that in a letter to one of the banks a few days ago Waggaman said he was virtually bankrupt and that bankruptcy proceedings should be had to settle his affairs.

What the Waggaman interests desire is the appointment of a trustee in bankruptcy proceedings to disentangle the situation and try to settle up the estate. This action would be satisfactory to the university interests also.

The case was adjourned until Thursday to give counsel for the university opportunity to file an answer denying that Mr. Waggaman, in making the deed of trust in the university's favor for more than $800,000, intended to prefer that institution as a creditor.

FIND GIANT INDIANS' BONES.

Workmen on Harlem Road Unearth Relics of Teekus Tribe.

Special to The New York Times.

KATONAH, N. Y., Sept. 6.—While a gang of men in the employ of the New York and Harlem Railroad were taking sand from an immense mound near Purdy's Station today to fill in an excavation, they unearthed several skeletons of unusual size.

The bones are believed to be those of Indians who once lived in this vicinity and belonged to a tribe that was led by the great Chief Teekus, from whom the Titicus Valley, now a part of the New York watershed, takes its name. Besides finding the bones, the workmen also exhumed a score or more of arrowheads, hatchets, and copper implements. It is believed that the large mound in which the relics were found was once the burying ground of the Teekus Indians. The last Indians were seen in the valley a short time after the Revolutionary War.

The bones found to-day were brought to Katonah and will be reinterred in the local cemetery.

MOUNTED BROADWAY POLICE.

McAdoo Selects Ten Men to Regulate Downtown Traffic.

Police Commissioner McAdoo said yesterday that he had selected the ten mounted men with whom to make the experiment of employing such officers to regulate traffic in lower Broadway, and will start them on their new duties to-day. He has gotten quarters for their horses in a temporary stable in Madison Street, but if the experiment justifies itself he will arrange for permanent provision for the mounts. The men have been taken from Bronx Park, Fifth Avenue, and Brooklyn.

The Commissioner has obtained twenty-five new horses for the force, partly to replace some of the horses which have been used by the officers guarding the beef wagons in the lately ended butchers' strike. With their long rides over the pavements most of these animals have become temporarily unfit for service and will need a rest.

CRUSH AT ELLIS ISLAND.

Two Days' Accumulation of Immigrants Brings 5,000 People In.

Ellis Island had one of its biggest days of this year yesterday, when over 5,000 immigrants from eight ships passed through its precincts and were started on their careers as prospective Americans. The island was closed on Monday, and in consequence the passengers from several steamships that arrived on that day were compelled to wait until yesterday before being cleared. Two big steamships and several smaller ones arriving yesterday swelled the number.

VERMONT REPUBLICAN BY INCREASED MAJORITY

Is 32,000, as Against 31,000 in the Bryan Year, 1900.

DEMOCRATIC VOTE FALLS OFF

Republicans Win Victory Despite Defections in Three Counties—Expected Smaller Plurality.

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, Vt., Sept. 6.—Election returns from 200 out of the 246 cities and towns of the State give Bell, (Rep.,) 88,880; Porter, (Dem.,) 12,892. The same places in 1900 gave Stickney, (Rep.,) 83,948; Senter, (Dem.,) 13,556.

These figures show a slight falling off in the vote of both parties and indicate the election of Bell by about 32,000 plurality. The Republicans now claim the State by that figure.

The returns indicate that the Republicans won a signal victory in to-day's State election, in that they held their own and elected the head of their ticket by a plurality greater than that returned for William W. Stickney when he was elected Governor in 1900.

Stickney, however, received the support of many Gold Democrats, and the Republicans expected that Bell would lose these votes. Stickney was elected four years ago by 31,282 plurality over Senter.

The majority is beyond the Republican expectations. They to-day conceded a falling off from Stickney's plurality of 1900 owing to the probable loss of the gold Democratic vote.

Information received by the Republican State Committee this morning indicated that Mr. Bell, the Republican nominee for Governor, was being cut by the farmers of Chittenden County because of his policy while Cattle Commissioner in ordering the slaughter of many cattle in that county on account of the prevalence of tuberculosis.

In Chittenden, Rutland, and Washington counties the existence of a fusion ticket or county officers was having some effect upon the Republican ticket, as the so-called independent Republicans, who were dissatisfied with the Republican plank on the local option law, were supporting the fusion candidates.

Aside from these instances, the Republicans were voting without any split in their ranks, in striking contrast to the election of two years ago, when there was a division over local option.

At noon the Republican officials were looking for a final plurality in the State of more than 25,000. The Democrats decline to give an estimate.

The campaign was hard-fought by both of the leading parties, the Democrats bending their efforts to a reduction of the Stickney majority of 31,000. A plurality of less than 25,000 for the head of the Republican ticket would have been construed as indicating a decline in Republican sentiment.

The returns from the towns of West Fairlee and Eden, the first to be received, indicated a falling off in the Democratic vote of 1900, and the succeeding returns were of a similar tenor.

The State officers elected are:

Governor—CHARLES J. BELL of Walden.
Lieutenant Governor—CHARLES H. STEARNS of Johnson.
Treasurer—JOHN L. BACON of Hartford.
Secretary of State—FREDERICK G. FLEETWOOD of Morrisville.
Auditor of Accounts—HORACE F. GRAHAM of Craftsbury.

David J. Foster of Burlington was elected to Congress from the First District, and Kittredge Haskins of Brattleborough from the Second District.

The vote for Congressman followed closely that for Governor, and with the exception of the three northern counties, where local issues affected the normal vote, the complexion of the Legislature was practically unchanged. This indicates that Senator Redfield Proctor will be re-elected at the coming session of the Legislature.

HEAVY SLUMP IN ARKANSAS.

Democratic Majority Cut One-Half—Republican Gains in Legislature.

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 6.—Sufficient returns from the State election have been received to indicate the election of Gov. Davis to a third term by a plurality of 20,000.

His majority two years ago was 40,000, double that which he now receives. The Republicans have made a great effort this year to cut down the Democratic majority, and have been successful.

Several other State officers were voted for, but there was opposition to Davis alone.

Several counties have given Republican majorities, which heretofore have gone Democratic, but in the main the county Democratic tickets have been elected.

The Prohibitionist vote will possibly fall short of two years ago when Kimball for Governor on that ticket polled less than 5,000 votes.

The decreased majority received by Gov. Davis is due to Republican gains, for the total vote will be from ten to twenty-five thousand greater than two years ago. All counties show an increased vote.

Davis's plurality may go over 20,000, but cannot exceed 30,000.

Hitherto there have not been more than two Republicans of the 133 members of the Legislature, both in the lower branch. Enough returns are at hand to show that there will be five Republican members in the House of the next Legislature, and one in the Senate.

Newton County, which has been Republican for many years, sends a Democrat to the Legislature. The other counties remain Republican.

The staying at home of evenings of Gov. Davis had a great deal to do with the decreased plurality, however, as Gov. Davis polled slightly less than two years ago, while Myers polled several thousand more votes.

State Attorney General Murphy, elected on the Democratic ticket for two terms, came all the way from Canada to vote for Myers.

The Republicans are jubilant over their gains.

ROOSEVELT HEARS THE NEWS.

Receives the Returns from Vermont and Gets Telegram from Proctor.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Sept. 6.—President Roosevelt received returns to-night from the Vermont election. The Associated Press bulletins and private dispatches were received over the special telegraph wire in the Summer executive offices, and then transmitted to Sagamore Hill by Secretary Loeb by telephone.

The first dispatches, indicating not only slight Republican gains but an appreciable percentage of Democratic losses, were received with satisfaction. At 9:30 o'clock the following dispatch was received from Senator Proctor:

Burlington, Vt., Sept. 6, 1904.
Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, Oyster Bay, L. I.:
Indications are that Bell's plurality will be [illegible]

WARSAW, Sept. 6.—Twenty quick-firing batteries which the Emperor expected to inspect this week have been hastily placed on trains and have been started for the front.

BALTIC SHIPS FAULTY.

It Is Rumored That They Will Be Unable to Sail Before November.

YANKEE IN SULTAN'S NAVY.

Erstwhile American Skipper Appointed to High Command.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 6.—Capt. R. D. Buckman, for many years an American skipper, has been appointed to a high command in the Turkish Navy, according to a story received here to-day.

Capt. Buckman was detailed by the Cramp Shipbuilding Company, builders of the Turkish cruiser Mejidia, to take the vessel from Hampton Roads to Constantinople.

LABRADOR SWEPT BY GALE.

Much Damage Done to Fishery Property—Eleven Lives Lost.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Sept. 6.—The mail boat Virginia Lake, from Northern Labrador, reports that the seaboard was swept by a fierce gale two weeks ago. Much damage was done to fishery property along the coast, and five schooners were driven ashore, resulting in the loss of eleven lives.

The Virginia Lake reports also that the steamer Viking, from Halifax for Hamilton Inlet, Labrador, which went ashore Aug. 26 near Belle Isle, in a fog, has not yet been floated and that there is slight prospect of saving the vessel.

BIG FIND OF RARE FOSSILS.

Amherst Professor's Treasures Include Fossil of Prehistoric Horse.

Special to The New York Times.

CODY, Wyo., Sept. 6.—Prof. Frederick B. Loomis of Amherst College has just completed his researches into the fossil fields of the Big Horn Basin and the Badger Creek region and secured over 500 specimens of rare fossils. One of the most important finds was a prehistoric horse nearly complete. The animal is less than three feet in height.

Specimens were also found of monkeys, squirrels, and pigs, all differing radically from the species of the present day. Prof. Loomis is highly pleased with his success. He will probably divide his treasures between Amherst and the Smithsonian Institution.

EXPLORERS NOT YET RELIEVED.

The Frithjof Unable to Reach Ziegler Party in Franz Josef Land.

HAMMERFEST, Norway, Sept. 6.—The Norwegian steamer Vircola, which has arrived here, reports that she met the Ziegler relief expedition steamer Frithjof Aug. 17 in latitude 79 north and longitude 52 east. The Frithjof up to that time had been unable to reach Franz Josef Land.

The Frithjof, having on board the Ziegler relief expedition, which arrived at Vardo, Norway, Aug. 4, after an unsuccessful attempt to reach the steamer America, bearing the Ziegler arctic expedition party, sailed from Vardo Aug. 5 for Franz Josef Land, with coal for the America. The latter vessel sailed from Trondhjem, Norway, for Franz Josef Land on June 23, 1903.

SUBWAY THIRD RAIL VICTIM.

Fatally Burned on Elevated Portion of the Road in the Bronx.

Hugh Ford of 433 West Fifty-fourth Street, who was employed on the elevated structure of the subway, was fatally burned by coming in contact with the third rail at One Hundred and Sixty-seventh Street and Southern Boulevard yesterday afternoon.

The structure is very high at the point where the accident occurred, and there was no way to get the injured man down at that point. One of the trains came along about fifteen minutes after the accident, and the injured man was put on board and carried to Robbins Avenue, about three blocks away, where he was taken to the street and sent to Lebanon Hospital in an ambulance.

KUROPATKIN IS NOT HEARD FROM; MAY BE CUT OFF

Oyama Reports the Bulk of the Russian Army Still Far South of Mukden.

ANOTHER FLANKING MOVE

Japanese Force Advancing on Mukden from the Liao River.

RUSSIANS' RETREAT IS SLOW

Hampered by Flooded Rivers and Terrible Condition of Roads.

CZAR TO SEND 192,000 MEN

Fresh Army and Many Guns to be Rushed to the Front—Much Alarm in St. Petersburg.

LONDON, Wednesday, Sept. 7.—The Daily Mail's Niu-Chwang correspondent, cabling under date of Sept. 6, says:

"The Russians are relying mainly on Tie-Ling and are avoiding Mukden.

"Eight transports arrived here to-day with troops, which immediately took train for Liao-Yang.

"The Russians have been partly intercepted between Liao-Yang and Mukden."

ST. PETERSBURG, Wednesday, Sept. 7, (2:10 A. M.)—There has been no news from Gen. Kuropatkin since Monday afternoon. This is attributed to the interruption of direct communication with the Commander in Chief owing to the transfer of the telegraph office to Mukden, whither messages have to be sent by courier.

The utmost confidence prevails at the War Office that the Russian Army is slowly but surely effecting the retreat without serious risk of being cut off. None the less, intense anxiety is felt throughout the whole nation, and this feeling is shared by the Emperor.

His Majesty is unwilling at such a juncture to absent himself from Peterhof, and has countermanded all proposed journeys. He will not go to Warsaw or Libau, and remains closeted for hours with his military advisers.

It is believed that the outcome of these deliberations will be an order to mobilize several more army corps.

Russian War Office's View.

Late last evening The Associated Press obtained the following statement from the War Office:

"No telegrams whatever were received from Gen. Kuropatkin to-day, (Tuesday.) It is inferred that the only Russian troops remaining at Yen-Tai to-day are the rear guard, whose mission is solely to retard the enemy's movement.

"It is quite consistent from the position of affairs to suppose that a portion of the Japanese forces entered Yen-Tai, there being no intention to hold this point, as it is of no intrinsic importance. The stores there have already been removed, and whatever was not removed was burnt.

"An official telegram will probably arrive to-morrow (Wednesday) morning.

"The transfer of the telegraph office to Mukden has caused delay in the direct transmission of messages."

A Russian correspondent of The Associated Press sent a message from Mukden last (Tuesday) evening, more than twenty-four hours after the dispatch of Gen. Kuropatkin's last published message. This correspondent gives no details of the retreat, and the censor is probably not allowed to authorize the transmission of this news until the Commander in Chief sends his report.

Floods Impede the Retreat.

The correspondent points out in his dispatch that the Russian forces are followed step by step by the Japanese, and are greatly impeded by heavy roads and floods. He adds:

"It is impossible to say how long the fighting will continue, as the initiative is in the hands of the Japanese."

The correspondent does not contest the fact that the Russians are undergoing a severe ordeal, but he says that the courage of the troops remains unbroken.

[illegible] Japanese [illegible]

Kuropatkin's rear guard has been annihilated, that Kuropatkin has been taken prisoner, and that Port Arthur has fallen.

These alarmist reports were circulated on the Boerse yesterday, and at one time threatened to cause a panic.

Kuropatkin's Latest Message.

The latest message received from Gen. Kuropatkin is the following, dated Sept. 5, which arrived yesterday:

"To-day (Sept. 5) the army is advancing northward. It has extricated itself from the dangerous position in which it was placed, being threatened by the enemy and having a narrow front.

"The enemy throughout the day cannonaded our rear guard, especially its left flank, but without much effect.

"We lost about 100 men to-day."

Private reports from Mukden received yesterday said that some of the rear guard actions in progress were quite severe. No details were given.

Disaster to Rear Guard Denied.

The Associated Press was authorized yesterday in the name of the General Staff to deny the report which was in circulation here on Monday night of the annihilation of Kuropatkin's rear guard. According to the latest advices, the officials said, no Russian force was cut off, and it was believed that there was little danger of the Japanese intercepting Kuropatkin below Mukden.

According to the latest advices the Russian retreat is being effected in good order. The heads of transport trains passed through Mukden on Monday at noon.

The fact that the baggage trains continued on their way northward of Mukden, the War Office explained yesterday, did not mean that Kuropatkin was bound further north, but was simply a natural precautionary measure, even if he intended to hold Mukden, the Russian formation during the operations of an army locating the baggage train fourteen miles and the ambulance corps four miles to the rear of the main body of troops.

The news from the front, as construed here, indicates that Oyama, having failed to surround Kuropatkin at Liao-Yang, is pressing Kuropatkin's rear with all the power of his tired troops, while hurrying forward a column which crossed the Tai-Tse River at Pensihu, (thirty miles northeast of Liao-Yang and five miles due east of Yen-Tai station,) in the hope of cutting the Russian line of retreat below Mukden. This column may consist of fresh troops in light marching order.

Hun River Protects Mukden.

The Pensihu Road joins the main road from Yen-Tai where the latter is intersected by the Hun River, three miles below Mukden. Once this point is passed Kuropatkin's army will have the Hun River between it and Oyama.

The only uneasiness is due to the possibility that Japanese light-draught gunboats, which according to reports are coming up from Niu-Chwang, might suddenly make their appearance, the river being navigable to this point.

As Kuropatkin was just north of Yen-Tai when the heads of transports entered Mukden on Monday, it is evident that the retreating column is over fifteen miles long.

Report from Oyama.

TOKIO, Sept. 6, (7 P. M.)—It is officially announced to-night that a portion of the Russian force remains at Yingshui-Su, south of Yen-Tai, (twelve miles northeast of Liao-Yang,) where the bulk of the Russian Army is assembled. It had previously been rumored here that the Russians had retired beyond Yen-Tai and that Gen. Kuroki had occupied the town.

A report from Marquis Oyama, made public to-night, says that a portion of the Russian troops hold Ying-shui-Su, and that Gen. Kuroki's right is in close touch with the Russians.

The Field Marshal announces also that the left and centre Japanese armies, under the command of Gens. Oku and Nodzu, have halted on the left bank of the Tai-Tse River and that it is his intention to dispatch a portion of them to occupy the heights north of Mu-Chang and along the railroad.

Gen. Kuropatkin burned all the railroad bridges over the Tai-Tse River.

Battle at Yen-Tai Expected.

The announcement that the Russians retain possession of the Yen-Tai colliery indicates a strong possibility of a battle there. Yen-Tai is the only colliery in Northern Manchuria, and its possession is of vital importance to the Russians in connection with the operation of the railroad.

MUKDEN, Sept. 6, (1:40 P. M.)—The commissariat and columns of artillery are arriving here and proceeding northward.

Gen. Kuropatkin's army is engaged in an extensive rear-guard action.

The retreat of the army is being carried out in good order, despite the terrible condition of the roads, rendered sodden by the rains which fell yesterday and to-day, which mire the lumbering guns and heavy transport trains. Long lines of commissariat wagons, drawn by steaming mules, horses, and even bullocks, are straining their way north over the soaking, cut-up main road from Yen-Tai. Behind them come long trains of artillery, and back of them still is Kuropatkin's army.

Continuous Rear Guard Action.

The Japanese are hanging on Kuropatkin's flanks, keeping the Russians engaged in a continuous rear-guard [illegible]

The progress of the retreating army has been slow owing to the necessity of first getting through the baggage and guns, but the heads of the commissariat trains have already passed through Mukden, and are continuing their way toward the north.

The main Japanese army is marching up along the roads eastward of the Russian lines of retreat, which converge at Mukden.

Another Japanese force is also heading for Mukden from the westward, coming from the direction of the Liao River.

Marshal Oyama seems to be making a race for Mukden. He evidently has great superiority in numbers, especially in artillery.

As this dispatch is filed the correspondent of The Associated Press can hear the booming of the Japanese cannon, which are in play fourteen miles from Mukden.

The skies are black and the air is stifling with the sense of suffocation, which is felt here before a storm breaks—strange harmony between the elements and the menacing attitude of the contending armies.

Denies Russians Are Demoralized.

A Russian correspondent of The Associated Press supplies the following:

"Our retreat is being carried out under heavy pressure and with the Japanese on our heels. The task is additionally difficult owing to the terrible condition of the roads, and the rivers, which are flooded.

"The fighting has now been almost continuous since Aug. 24, and how much longer it will last it is impossible to say, as the initiative is in the hands of the Japanese.

"The number of lives sacrificed and the loss of supplies by burning, bridges being blown up, &c., can only be explained when we once more have concentrated, and this will occupy us for some days.

"Do not be under any misapprehension; we will live through these heavy days and still more alarming nights, for, despite recent failures, we have steadfast faith in the future and the spirit of the troops is unimpaired.

"There are numberless stories of heroism, collective and individual, which it is impossible to relate by wire.

"The Red Cross is working tirelessly, not only in aiding the wounded, but in establishing booths by the roadside and distributing food and tea to the sick, injured, and starving.

"The Chinese population is in a state of ferment."

YEN-TAI, Monday, Sept. 5, (Delayed.)—There was heavy fighting northeast of this place to-day.

The Japanese troops are now pressing northward along the ridges east of the railway, and several skirmishes have already occurred within twenty miles to the southeast of Mukden.

CANNOT ESTIMATE LOSSES.

Oyama Unable to State Number of Japanese or Russian Casualties.

TOKIO, Sept. 6.—An extended report from Field Marshal Oyama, the Japanese Commander in Chief in the field, was received in Tokio to-day and made public to-night. It is largely devoted to a review of the fighting between Aug. 24 and Sept. 4.

The report says that the exact number of Japanese losses since Aug. 25 is not known at present, but that the casualty lists are being compiled.

The Field Marshal predicts that the losses will prove heavy.

The report does not mention the number of guns taken, but it is known that sixteen guns were captured at An-Ping and An-shan-Chan, and earlier reports mentioned the capture and use against the railroad station at Liao-Yang of certain 10-centimetre Canet guns.

Field Marshal Oyama says also that in spite of continuous attacks for ten days against an enemy occupying semi-permanent fortifications, and the heavy resultant sacrifice, the spirit of devotion and determination of the Japanese troops is excellent.

Gen. Kuropatkin, according to the report, continued to receive reinforcements until Aug. 13, and his final strength consisted of at least twelve full divisions.

The losses sustained by the Russians are not known to the Japanese field force.

Gen. Kuroki encountered desperate opposition in the battle on the heights to the west of Hei-ying-Tai, where he fought continuously and fiercely for four days before he succeeded in dislodging the Russians.

It is manifest that the stubbornness of the Russian defense at Hei-ying-Tai saved the Russian line of retreat and averted an overwhelming disaster.

APPALLED BY THE SLAUGHTER.

French Writer Blames the Czar for the Butchery in Manchuria.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 6.—The revolt of French feeling against the hideous slaughter in Manchuria is the most striking feature of public opinion at the present moment. It could hardly find more vivid and accurate expression than in some remarks of M. Cornély in the Siècle. He says:

"The horror and reprobation with which every civilized man is inspired by the massacres in the Far East are counterbalanced by profound admiration for the two adversaries. The Japanese soldiers show an ardor, animation, and contempt for death, in which we find those traits that made our own troops masters of the world. The Russians, on the other hand, have lost none of that cool courage and extraordinary endurance which formerly succeeded in getting the better of our impetuosity.

"Thus we ought to salute those who retire with the same respect as those who advance.

"It is heartrending to think how precious is the blood now being shed so prodigally. There is none more generous in human veins. There are none more brave than those who are exterminating each other in the Far East, or rather, who have been obliged to do so in an excess of criminal insanity.

"Our friendship for Russia forbids us to think of mediation, which she has refused in advance, but every one who believes in God must be horrified at the thought of the responsibility incurred by those who preside over this butchery. [illegible] Czar is a believer."

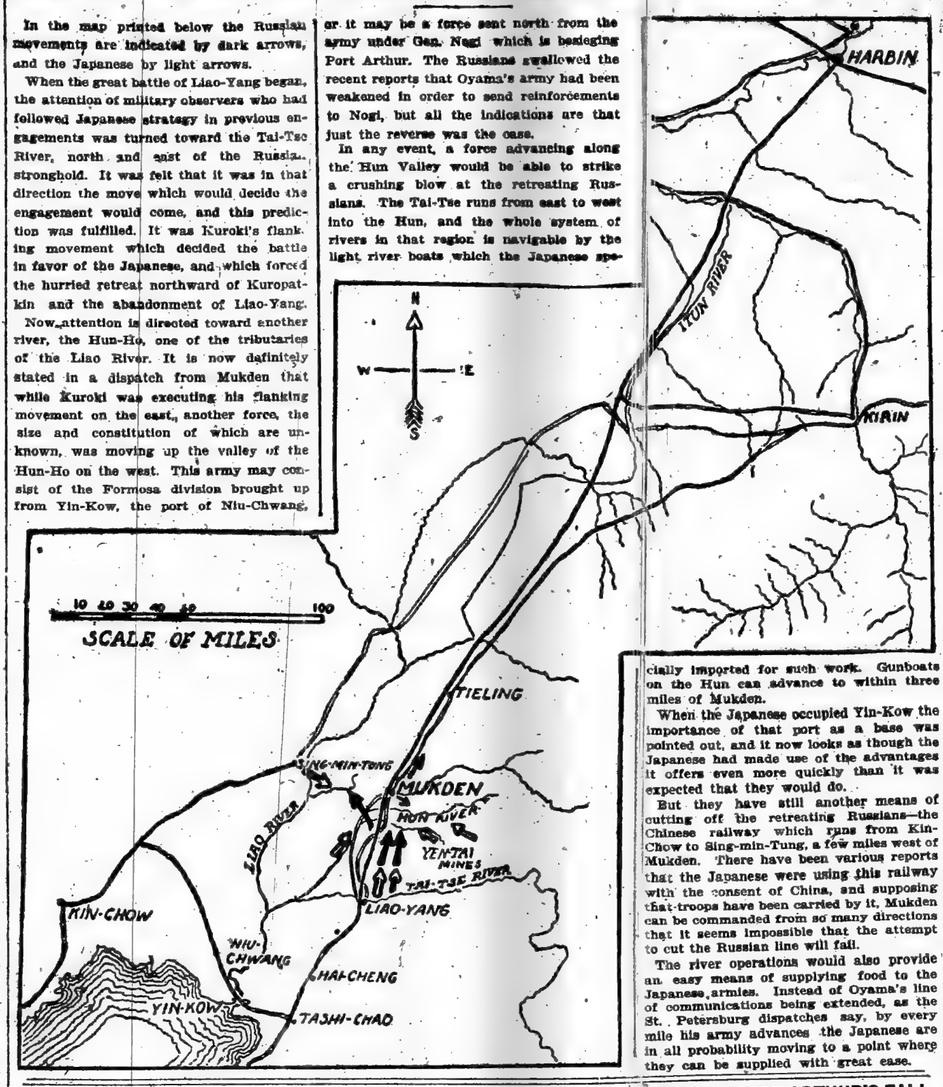
HOW THE JAPANESE ARE THREATENING KUROPATKIN'S RETREAT TO HARBIN

In the map printed below the Russian movements are indicated by dark arrows, and the Japanese by light arrows.

When the great battle of Liao-Yang began, the attention of military observers who had followed Japanese strategy in previous engagements was turned toward the Tai-Tse River, north and east of the Russian stronghold. It was felt that it was in that direction the move which would decide the engagement would come, and this prediction was fulfilled. It was Kuroki's flanking movement which decided the battle in favor of the Japanese, and which forced the hurried retreat northward of Kuropatkin and the abandonment of Liao-Yang.

Now attention is directed toward another river, the Hun-Ho, one of the tributaries of the Liao River. It is now definitely stated in a dispatch from Mukden that while Kuroki was executing his flanking movement on the east, another force, the size and constitution of which are unknown, was moving up the valley of the Hun-Ho on the west. This army may consist of the Formosa division brought up from Yin-Kow, the port of Niu-Chwang, or it may be a force sent north from the army under Gen. Nogi which is besieging Port Arthur. The Russians swallowed the recent reports that Oyama's army had been weakened in order to send reinforcements to Nogi, but all the indications are that just the reverse was the case.

In any event, a force advancing along the Hun Valley would be able to strike a crushing blow at the retreating Russians. The Tai-Tse runs from east to west into the Hun, and the whole system of rivers in that region is navigable by the light river boats which the Japanese specially imported for such work. Gunboats on the Hun can advance to within three miles of Mukden.



When the Japanese occupied Yin-Kow the importance of that port as a base was pointed out, and it now looks as though the Japanese had made use of the advantages it offers even more quickly than it was expected that they would do.

But they have still another means of cutting off the retreating Russians—the Chinese railway which runs from Kin-Chow to Sing-min-Tung, a few miles west of Mukden. There have been various reports that the Japanese were using this railway with the consent of China, and supposing that troops have been carried by it, Mukden can be commanded from so many directions that it seems impossible that the attempt to cut the Russian line will fail.

The river operations would also provide an easy means of supplying food to the Japanese armies. Instead of Oyama's line of communications being extended, as the St. Petersburg dispatches say, by every mile his army advances the Japanese are in all probability moving to a point where they can be supplied with great ease.

RUSSIAN PRESS PESSIMISTIC.

The Russ Finally Throws Over the "Luring Them On" Theory.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 6.—While insisting that Field Marshal Oyama missed his main object at Liao-Yang, most of the Russian papers do not disguise their profound disappointment over the result of the battle there. The Russ says:

"The fact that Kuropatkin was compelled to leave Liao-Yang has not only military but political significance. It is no use concealing the fact that the evacuation of Liao-Yang was a surprise for the Russians. Everybody was led to believe that the hour had arrived for a decisive struggle. It was thus we interpreted Kuropatkin's telegram saying the men were thirsting for an opportunity to meet the foe.

"The dashing of our hopes means a prolongation of the campaign. The moment for taking the offensive is now indefinitely postponed. This will inevitably influence the fate of Port Arthur, and the further developments of the Japanese operations.

"The evacuation of Liao-Yang will also have an effect upon China, which already is in a state of nervous tension under the influence of Japanese agitation. The Japanese, of course, will do their best to restore Mukden to China, and China must foot the bill.

"We cannot deceive ourselves any longer with the idea that by retreating into the heart of Manchuria we are gaining time and adding to our forces, whereas the Japanese are lengthening their line of communications and therefore losing strength.

"Our ideas of the military strength of Japan were far from correct. It is now known that they can increase their forces as well as we can. We fully believe in our ultimate success, but it is idle to blink at facts. We shall have to make heavy sacrifices in order to protect the vital interests of the empire."

The Russky Invalid, organ of the army, however, is of the opinion that Gen. Kuropatkin, both strategically and technically, got everything possible out of Liao-Yang, saying:

"It enabled him to cope with an army very much superior to his. Field Marshal Oyama was compelled to waste several tens of thousands of men to capture a position which is of no importance now that Kuropatkin has left.

"It is evident that Oyama's plans miscarried, as he failed to surround and inflict a decisive blow on the Russian Army."

PANIC AFTER RETREAT ORDER.

Discipline Vanished at Liao-Yang—Cossacks Seize Wine at Station.

PARIS, Sept. 6.—A dispatch to The Temps, dated Sept. 3 and delayed, graphically describes the panic which occurred at Liao-Yang when it became known that the town was to be abandoned. The correspondent says:

"A crowd of people rushed toward the depot. I was standing in the refreshment room of the station when three Japanese shells burst in succession about 150 feet away. Many persons were killed and a Sister of Charity was wounded.

"The people were terrified and fled, leaving their baggage, whereupon the Chinese plundered the trunks and valises and the Cossacks grabbed the stock of champagne in the refreshment room.

"Military trains continued to leave the depot regularly. I left at 2 o'clock for Yen-Tai, where a battle with Gen. Kuroki had already begun.

"A Russian officer who held back the first Japanese assault on Liao-Yang told me that he never saw such fury. The Japanese hurled themselves in masses against the barbed wire defenses and fell into trap ditches, but they continued their steady advance.

"At Yen-Tai Gen. Kuropatkin has the disadvantage of being on a plain, while Gen. Kuroki has the advantage of having a position on the crests of the neighboring hills."

PRAISE FOR KUROPATKIN.

London Paper Says He Has Probably Saved a Great Part of His Army.

LONDON, Wednesday, Sept. 7.—English opinion regarding the situation in the Far East is not much influenced by Gen. Kuropatkin's reassuring dispatches.

For some time it had been held here that the Japanese efforts to envelop the Russian force had failed, and St. Petersburg's jubilant relief over that failure is scarcely noticed in the continued and rather critical desire to know the degree of disintegration in which it is assumed here that Kuropatkin's army must reach Mukden.

Almost all the difficulties of the retreat reported in the latest Russian dispatches were foreseen by the English military observers, and, indeed, the Russian confidence, following so closely the period of what was regarded here as exaggerated depression, combined with complete Japanese silence regarding the pursuit, leads The Daily Graphic to believe that the Japanese Generals "have not yet given up all hopes of inflicting a crushing blow on the Russian main army."

The Daily Mail's Mukden correspondent, writing under date of Sept. 5, appears impartially to sum up the situation, saying that the "relative positions of the opposing forces are just the same as ever. The enemy is advancing from the south and threatening the Russians at the same time from the east, but the decisive battle is still to come."

English Excitement Grows.

From the English point of view the excitement grows rather than diminishes, and whether the Japanese are fast enough and strong enough to develop the running fight into a great battle with a definite result is a question still asked on all sides. The Russian official dispatches themselves dispose of the apprehension hitherto expressed by several English critics that the Japanese would be so exhausted by their long fighting, or that their ammunition would become so depleted that they would be unable to carry on the pursuit.

The Standard, which comments upon what it terms St. Petersburg's "attack of nerves" and its not altogether surprising readiness to believe anything, however disastrous, thinks that if the Russians can get to Harbin there will be a long pause in the war. Whether Kuropatkin can get to Harbin is, says The Standard, "a hypothesis which must not be put forward too confidently until we see what the next day or two may bring forth."

The same paper has no doubt that the Japanese will follow their enemy to Harbin, as they did to Liao-Yang, but it does not think that the pursuit can be carried out as far as Harbin until after the Winter season.

Kuropatkin's Masterly Retreat.

"Kurcpatkin has won the race," says The Daily Telegraph, "and saved the greater part of his army by one of the masterly retreats of military history. Few things in the record of war have been finer than the energy and determination with which the Czar's Commander in Chief prevented the victors from converting a defeat into a catastrophe, and the result will have the most far-reaching influence upon the whole future of the war. Combined with the stolid staying powers of Ivan Ivanovitch, the tactics which saved the situation after Liao-Yang and again at Yen-Ti, saved it once more at the Hun River, and protected the crossing of the bulk of the forces."

At what cost this was accomplished and whether the Japanese have yet been "wholly thwarted of their prey" The Daily Telegraph says will not be known for some days, but, assuming that Kuropatkin had 190,000 men at Liao-Yang, the paper says he will be "comparatively fortunate if he leads 120,000 men to Tie-Ling or to Mukden, and that number will be sufficient to save the prospects for the immediate future."

Though Kuropatkin's resource meets with such praise, The Daily Telegraph adds:

"The Japanese triumph from every point of view is one of the most extraordinary feats of arms ever performed by any people, and vindicates the claim of the Japanese to be regarded as a great power, treating on equal terms with the foremost of Western States and counting, with the British Empire and Russia, as one of the three [illegible]

RUMOR OF PORT ARTHUR'S FALL

Novoe Vremya Prints It, but Recalls Papers—Attack Expected To-day.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 6.—The Novoe Vremya this morning got out an early edition announcing the fall of Port Arthur, but it was recalled before the paper reached the streets. Such a report is current, but it seems to have no basis in fact.

CHE-FOO, Sept. 6 (10:15 P. M.)—Firing at Port Arthur was heard here to-night.

Two Chinese interpreters belonging to the official household of Lieut. Gen. Stoessel, commander of the military forces at Port Arthur, have been caught spying at Shu-shi-Yen and Palung-Shan. They were executed by the Japanese.

Chinese who arrived here to-day from Port Arthur declare that the Russian garrison expects a general land and sea attack Sept. 7.

On Sept. 2 and 3 the Japanese bombarded the fortifications severely and two Russian guns on a fort near Rihlung-Shan were dismounted.

The recent entrance into Port Arthur of a large steamship carrying provisions, chiefly flour, has resulted in the reduction of the price of flour from $5 to $2 a bag.

British Cruiser Communicates Russian Government's Order to Them.

ZANZIBAR, Sept. 6.—The British cruiser Forte early this morning found the Russian volunteer fleet steamers Petersburg and Smolensk within the three-mile limit and communicated to them the orders of the Russian Government to desist from interference with neutral shipping.

The commanders of the Russian vessels said they would forthwith proceed to Europe.

A report was brought in yesterday by the German steamer Kronprinz that the Petersburg and Smolensk were coaling in territorial waters. The Forte immediately proceeded to search for them, and eventually found the Russian vessels. They were not coaling, but after the orders of the Russian Government had been delivered to them the Smolensk and Petersburg joined a German collier and proceeded to Dar-es-Salaam, (on the African coast, twenty-five miles south of Zanzibar.)

The Forte returned here this afternoon.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 6.—It is understood that Russia is trying to negotiate for the purchase of the British steamer Calchas, captured by the Vladivostok squadron while on her way from Puget Sound to Japan, which is still at Vladivostok.

No intimation was given to the British Embassy by the Foreign Office to-day that the reply of Russia to the British note on the subject of food as contraband of war would be delivered to-morrow. Foreign Minister Lamsdorff will see the Emperor to-morrow, as is customary, and it is possible that he will receive imperial authority to override the objections of the Admiralty authorities.

pany considers a distinct gain, inasmuch as it gives us assurance that we will be able to operate the subway without the danger of a strike. One of the deciding considerations in granting the higher wage rate was the question of cheap motormen. The representatives of the men argued that if we employed men at $3 a day in th tunnel and anything happened, it would be thrown back at us that we employed cheap labor. We do not want that said.

"The company neither loses nor gains in the matter of time. The men give an extra hour and we pay them for it. On the salary proposition we figure that our loss will be about 20 cents a day for 150 men."

Mr. Belmont remained closeted with Mr. Bryan and Superintendent Hedley for a short while after the conference. The Directors of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, it was learned, will have a meeting to-day.

Union Leaders Well Pleased.

While most of the labor representatives claimed that they had won a victory and professed great satisfaction at the outcome there was some slight dissent among the rank and file. Grand Chief Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who has borne the brunt of the fight on behalf of the men, professed complete satisfaction with what had been achieved. He said:

"Matters looked bad till late in the conference. I knew that everything had been done, and that there was no chance for anything but a strike if the conference ended the wrong way. Yes, Sir, a strike was the only way out of it that I could see then.

"It took us an hour to brush the cobwebs from the sky and get rid of misunderstandings, for at first neither side knew exactly where they were at. The minor questions were disposed of first. Then we reached the mattr of hours and pay for the engineers. There was considerable talk over the question of physical examination for the motormen. The men don't like the system now in vogue, the standard railway test. They want the practical test. Let a man be taken out on the line and asked to tell colors and read semaphore and other signals. Men can stand that test who could not range a skein of sixteen yarns of worsted from light to dark. All that will be fixed up at the conference to-morrow."

Mr. Stone said that the company also had conceded to men going from the elevated to the subway their seniority when it came to promotions. There will be another meeting of the chiefs and the Executive Committees of the locals at the Broadway Central Hotel, prior to the conference at Mr. Bryan's office to-day.

THE YELLOW PERIL BOGEY.

Continent's Apprehension Not Shared by The London Times.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—The Times, in an editorial article on the future of the Far East, discusses the question whether the triumph of the Japanese in the pending war will turn the "yellow peril" that has been talked about so much into a reality.

It starts with the proposition that the total overthrow of Russian power and influence in Manchuria, Korea, and China is not improbable, and asks what in twenty or fifty years will be the result, particularly for Europe and America.

An idea gains strength on the Continent, it says, that an awakening in China will take place like the awakening in Japan, and that in a generation or two hence Europe will stand face to face with a yellow confederacy able to put into the field five or six millions of men as brave and well disciplined as those now fighting under the Japanese colors; but The Times doubts that there will be such a development in the Far East because it doubts whether the Chinese character will lend itself to such a transformation as would be necessary in order to make this development possible.

It says that the large majority of skilled observers, men who know China best, are utterly sceptical upon this point, failing to see among the Chinese any sign of a spirit that would regenerate the country by assimilating and adapting the wisdom of other nations and using it honestly in the service of the state.

JAPAN EXPECTS A LONG WAR.

Arranging for Three Years' Campaign—Will Make No Peace Overtures.

PARIS, Sept. 6.—An official of the Japanese Legation, in the course of an interview to-day, said he expected that the battle deciding the future of Manchuria would occur at Harbin, as Gen. Kuropatkin's flight had been too hurried to permit him to intrench at Mukden.

Owing to the distance of Harbin from Mukden and the approach of Winter, the battle, the official added, probably would not occur before Spring. In the meantime, if Russia desired peace she would be able to open negotiations, but the Japanese Government would never make the first propositions for peace.

The reported Japanese peace terms were mere individual speculation, it was added, as Japanese Government circles were not considering peace. They were calculating that the war would last three years and were making preparations accordingly, leaving Russia to make the first overtures for peace.

The Temps quotes an "eminent Russian," which is understood to mean the Russian Embassy here, as follows:

"Russia will never make the first proposition for peace. Furthermore, she will entertain no proposition for intervention, even if it comes from the powers having the greatest sympathy for her, and which she considers her friends. This is the unalterable determination of our Emperor and Government."

FOUND MURDERED IN CARRIAGE.

Liveryman Had Been Stabbed—Was In Two Quarrels.

TARRYTOWN, Sept. 6.—George Daley, twenty-two years old, a livery driver, was found murdered in his carriage in North Tarrytown early this morning. John Boyle found the man hanging head downward from the carriage door. Daley had been stabbed several times.

Daley had the reputation of being ugly when under the influence of liquor. He engaged in a quarrel in a beer garden on Cortland Street early last evening, and the police say he was ejected from the place. About 1:30 o'clock this morning Daley went into John Helfrich's saloon, on Pocantico Street, and had not been long there when he got into an altercation with Morris Hartnett. It is alleged that he struck Hartnett with a whip. William Kilday, a former Sergeant of police, separated the men, and Daley was taken out to his carriage and told to get away and not return. Half an hour later he was found murdered.

Kilday and Hartnett were taken into custody at their homes. They were afterward taken to the County Jail in White Plains. The police say that they found no bloodstains in Daley's carriage, and they are inclined to believe that he was thrown into the carriage after he had been stabbed.

The State Railroad Commission gave a public hearing yesterday on the application of the newly incorporated South Shore Traction Company for permission to construct a sixty-mile trolley road through Suffolk and Nassau Counties, L. I. James Anderson Hawes and Arthur Hume signed the papers as Vice President and Secretary of the company. The proposed route runs from Central Avenue, in Jamaica, to Rockville Centre, to Hempstead, to Oyster Bay, to Babylon, to Amityville, to Islip, to Patchogue, and easterly to Carman's River, in the township of Brookhaven.

WOMAN GOES INSANE ON CAR.

Tries to Leap to Ground and Fights Restraining Passengers.

While riding on a north-bound Lexington Avenue car at Eightieth Street yesterday afternoon Mrs. Irene Ostricher, twenty-three years old, of 143 East Seventy-seventh Street, began to act strangely, and had to be restrained from jumping from the car. The car was stopped and the woman was removed to the Bellevue Hospital psychopathic ward.

Mrs. Ostricher has been ill for some time. Yesterday was the first time that she had been out of the house for more than a month. Just before the car reached Eighteenth Street she started with her baby in her arms to jump from the car while it was going almost at full speed. Her husband grabbed her and held her back. The woman fought to get off the car, and the conductor and several of the passengers held the woman in her seat until the car was brought to a stop.

Strike Breakers Going Home.

Many of the strike breakers employed by the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Company and the United Dressed Beef Company who had been recruited from distant places left for their homes yesterday. It was understood that they were to be employed only temporarily, and they came here on that condition on account of the high wages paid in New York. Some of them were in business in a small way in villages, and will return to take charge of their affairs at home.

INVADERS HOLD GROUND IN BULL RUN BATTLE

Grant's Blues Have Not Beaten Back the Enemy.

BELL'S POSITION IMPREGNABLE

Discovered His Adversary's Plans and Made Dispositions of His Forces Which Foiled Grant.

Special to The New York Times.

GAINESVILLE, Va., Sept. 6.—Hardly had the profound quiet of midnight descended upon Prince William County, when the sound of the spitting fire of rifles, the rapid hoof beats of the cavalry, and the heavy rumble of artillery betokened the beginning of the third battle of Bull Run. Gen. Grant and his Blue Army, that defending Washington, had begun his advance against Gen. Bell and the Brown Army, which holds Thoroughfare Gap, the strongest startegic point in an operation against the capital. The intermittent rattle of musketry showed that the outposts of the opposing armies had come in conflict.

As the dawn came and the day wore on the roar of the opposing heavy artillery resounded from the hills, vast clouds of red Virginia dust arose from the trail of cavalry galloping to reinforce threatened positions, and wide cornfields trembled and fell to earth before the advance of thousands of Brown and Blue infantry. At 3 o'clock this afternoon a yellow smoke bomb ascended high into the air from the hill which commands Gen. Corbin's headquarters, and the boom of a cannon called attention to the signal that hostilities were to be suspended for the day.

Gen. Grant had failed to dislodge Gen. Bell from his position based on Thoroughfare Gap. The Brown line of battle was not broken by the repeated attacks of the Blues, although Gen. Bell was obliged to hurry all his reserve troops to his left flank, which rested on Snow Hill, and which was the object of a strong and concerted outflanking movement by two brigades of the Blue Army.

To-night the Brown army maintains a strong defensive line extending from Buckland, on the southern edge of the manoeuvre field, northeast to Haymarket, on Thoroughfare Pike, and thence north to Snow Hill, on the northern edge of the rectangular field operations. Along this line the Brown front will bivouac to-night on the field, and the Blue forces, beginning at midnight, will make another and final attempt to dislodge Gen. Bell.

OBJECT OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The experimental war is being carried on chiefly to settle the question of the vulnerability of the capital, toward the solution of which problem the Confederate General, Early, contributed some valuable data in 1864. Just south of the sleepy town of Manassas is the Bull Run range of the Blue Ridge Mountains, through which there is but one break, Thoroughfare Gap.

Once through this opening, an advancing army has no natural obstacle to overcome before it reaches the capital, which was very clearly shown when the Confederate General made his bold dash through the Gap in the beautiful Blue Hills and descended upon Washington. The manoeuvres will show as practically as possible without bullets the opportunities of two hostile armies operating between the capital and the Gap, and the military possibilities of the territory.

Gen. Bell, whose merits have won him quick promotion in the army, and who has the reputation of having been under fire more times than any other officer in the service, was frankly pleased when toward noon he realized that his disposition of his 18,000 men had rendered his line practically impregnable. He had just ridden up to Stone House, a little north of Little Bull Run Creek, having hurried reinforcements thither to support his threatened left, and there met the foreign attaches, who were out to watch the evolutions of the rival forces.

There are three roads from Sudley Springs, which figured largely in the first and second battles of Bull Run and which are on the northern edge of the manoeuvre field, and all these roads lead into Gen. Bell's territory. So thorough were the Brown commander's precautions that at 2 o'clock this morning, two hours after the declaration of war, all three roads, including Pageland Lane, five and a half miles from the Brown camp at Thoroughfare, were occupied by Brown outposts.

They naturally were obliged to fall back before the advance of a superior force of Blues, but they were able to supply Gen. Bell with information that adequately indicated Gen. Grant's purpose.

THE BROWNS' POSITION.

The Brown left was composed of the Fourth Brigade under the command of Col. F. A. Smith of the Eighth Regular Infantry, which has seen service in the Philippines and which is now stationed at Governors Island. Col. Smith's brigade included five companies of his own regiment, one battalion of Delaware infantry, two battalions of West Virginia infantry, the Second South Carolina and the Second Vermont. The West Virginians held the extreme end of the line and they were protected by six guns of the Third Battery of the regular artillery and one Connecticut battery with a machine gun.

The Third Battery, with two of the guns and a small force of cavalry, before it took up its defensive position made an advance eastward from Stone House toward Catharpin Road, but was compelled to retreat when two Blue regiments of infantry and a battery appeared, advancing from Ludley. The four remaining guns of the Third Battery, however, quickly reinforced them and protected their retreat to the Stone House.

It now became evident that the centre of activities for the time being was to be between Little Bull Run Creek and Snow Hill, between which points Col. Smith's Brown brigade was intrenched. Next to Col. Smith in the Brown line was Col. Regan, from Little Bull Run to Thoroughfare Pike, and Gen. Barry's brigade, in which is the Twelfth of New York, occupied the territory thence to Buckland, completing the front. The First Brigade of the Browns, under Gen. J. M. Lee, was held in reserve in the rear.

Gen. Theodore J. Wint was in command of the Blue right brigade, which led in the attack on the Brown left. At about 10 o'clock the Seventy-fourth New York Infantry, from up the State, and one company of the regulars advanced from their cover of woods and opened fire. In the meantime, however, Gen. Bell had strengthened Col. Smith's position by sending the Second Texas from the reserve to reinforce the right, and the Texas had occupied so commanding a position, and their fire was so theoretically deadly that the Blues were in a technical hole.

When the Eighth regulars began to do business the umpires ordered the Blues to fall back. Their loss was figured out to be 5 per cent. of their men.

Gen. Bell's reinforcements had come up so rapidly to the assistance of his left that the Blue Army deemed further assault against that portion of the Browns inadvisable.

In the meantime, while making an advance in the open against the Brown Army, the Blues had been exceedingly active. Col. Butler Price, who commanded the Third Brigade of Gen. Grant's Army, and held the right centre of his line, communicating with Gen. Wint, on his own right, had taken up a strong position in a clump of woods encircling extensive corn field, north of Little Bull Run, just west of the road between Gainesville and Catharpin, and opposite the Brown centre. His force numbered fully 2,000 men.

He began his attack about 2 o'clock, and the resultant engagement was the most exciting fight of the day. They pushed out a strong force from the cornfield, and musketry rattled ceaselessly for half an hour.

The Browns were well intrenched and in good force, resisting with vigor. Gen. Bell's reserves again were drawn upon, and so well were they disposed that two regiments reinforced his centre before Col. Price could get his full force into action. With the two Brown regiments that hurried up came a battery of field artillery, which after a lively scramble secured an elevated position and had the attacking Blues in range less than 1,000 yards away.

The cannon boomed again and again and the multiplying and vibrating echoes of their firing was punctuated by the sharp volleying of the musketry, the fight centering about the Bellcher house. The movement of the troops was in plain view from the hill commanding corps headquarters at Gainesville, and Gen. Corbin with Mrs. Corbin and Mrs. Grant came over to watch the manoeuvring.

PRICE'S MEN WIPED OUT.

From the umpire's point of view, of course, the Blues were wiped off the field, on account of the position taken by the Brown battery. Col. Price's idea in making his assault so late in the day was to establish a good position for the continuation of the fight to-morrow.

Just as the cannon were booming out annihilation to the Blues and while the Blues were endeavoring to hold their position by rapid and desperate volleys, the smoke bomb was sent up from headquarters and the fight was over.

In the final tussle around the Bellcher farm the Brown regiments engaged were the Second New York, the Second Maine, which came to reinforce, and the Second Vermont, which earlier had held the right of Col. Smith's brigade. A portion of the Twelfth New York, which was held in reserve by Gen. Barry along Thoroughfare Pike, was sent to assist, and that is all the fighting the Twelfth saw to-day. The New Yorkers were tired, dirty, and dusty from their march, but were all enthusiasm.

Col. Price's attacking force consisted of six companies of the Sixteenth Regulars, the First Alabama Infantry, the First Maine Infantry, the First Texas, and the Seventh Virginia.

So thoroughly had the reconnoitring work of the past few days been done that the long infantry marches and the rapid advances were accomplished in the darkness without difficulty. When dawn came, four companies of the famous Ninth Infantry were in force on the high hill opposite Gen. Corbin's headquarters. Six guns of the Third and Fourth Cavalry were masked on the brow of the hill.

SEVENTH TAKES PRISONERS.

Many captures were made to-day in which the Seventh Cavalry, (regular,) under Gen. Bell, bore off the honors. They took both the regimental and National colors from the Fifth Massachusetts and also captured a member of Gen. Grant's staff, an officer of the Connecticut National Guard. They took also part of the Twenty-third (regular) Battery. The capture of Gen. Wint himself was reported, but the umpires have rendered no official decision to that effect. The honor of the capture is attributed to Lieut. Rhea of the Seventh Cavalry.

The Seventh came into outpost contact with the crack Fifteenth regulars in the Blue army. There is considerable rivalry between the organizations, and a fist conflict was barely avoided. Three members of Brooklyn's Troop C early this morning were taken by a company of the Seventh.

Lieut. Cornelius Vanderbilt was reported sick in his tent last night and is unable to take the field to-day. This is not confirmed at the headquarters of his brigade.

MAKES A HIT IN GEORGIA.

Applause for Soldier Who Wouldn't Salute Negro Officer.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Sept. 6.—"The Georgia boy who refused to salute the negro officer at the Manassas manoeuvres showed true Georgia grit and we are all proud of him. He is a true Southerner, and I don't believe that any of our boys will depart from his example," said Gov. Terrell this afternoon.

Ex-Gov. Candler was even more emphatic. He declared that "any Yankee who thinks a Georgia soldier will salute a negro is a damned fool. Damn Yankee and negroes anyway," concluded the ex-Governor.

DEBS ATTACKS CLEVELAND.

Calls Pullman Strike Article a "Tissue of Misstatements."

The Social Democratic Party opened its National campaign in Carnegie Hall last night. Every seat on the floor of the house was filled and each of the four balconies was crowded to overflowing with men and women who wanted to see and hear Eugene V. Debs, the Socialists' candidate for President of the United States. Hundreds were unable to gain admittance to the hall and were entertained outside by spellbinders who talked from the tailend of a wagon.

Debs, who was the principal speaker of the evening, divided his address into two parts. The first part was a reply to the recently published letter of ex-President Cleveland, wherein Mr. Cleveland attacked the American Railway Union, of which Debs was the leader, for its course during the great Pullman strike in Chicago in 1894. The other part of his address was devoted to a discussion of the present campaign.

One of his statements was:

"The article of ex-President Cleveland is made up of a tissue of misstatements and perversions of facts, and every conclusion that he arrives at is in violation of the plain fact of history.

Debs declared that the record of Theodore Roosevelt was one of "implacable hostility to the workingman," and, he added, "I challenge contradiction of this statement."

In closing Debs touched upon the threatened strike of the elevated railroad employes, and said:

"I hear that some concessions have been made by the Interborough Company. If this is so, the concession has been made merely to tide the men over till after election.

NEWSIES BREAK MANY RULES.

Police Lax in Enforcing Board of Education Regulations.

The Truancy Department of the Board of Education is in difficulties with the police over the enforcement of the law which requires that all newsboys between ten and fourteen years of age shall wear badges issued by the department. During the past Summer the regular truant officers have been keeping order at the recreation centres and devoting only two evenings a week to chasing delinquent "newsies." This placed the enforcement of the law almost entirely in the hands of the police.

The police have been so lax in the matter, it is said, in spite of the interest of Police Commissioner McAdoo and the Captains, that many of the newsboys have laid aside their badges altogether or have been letting them out to smaller boys for 5 and 10 cents a day. The little boys have gone back to playing picture cards on the sidewalks, a forerunner of "craps," and young boys and girls have appeared on the streets after 10 o'clock in the evening with papers.

A truant officer who recently examined fifty boys under fourteen years of age found only one badge among them, and that was inside a trouser band. A large and brawny Police Sergeant of the east side gave one explanation of the laxity of his colleagues when taken to task by a District Superintendent of Schools.

"Ar," he exclaimed, "wot d'ye t'ink av me pullin' in a kid thot ain't t'ree feet high? De whole station w'u'd be a laughin' at me!"

WORLD'S RECORD BY N. Y. A. C. SWIMMER

C. M. Daniels Makes New Figures for 220-Yard Event.

NEW YORK POLO TEAM WINS

Scott Leary Loses to Hungarian Champion After a Tie in Fifty-Yard Event.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 6.—The world's record for swimming 220 yards and the American record for the same distance were broken to-day in the Olympic championship by C. M. Daniels of the New York Athletic Club, whose time was 2:44 1-5. The world's record, held by David Billington of London, had been 2:48, and the American record, held by L. Carroll Schaefer, had been 2:50 4-5.

A sensational race was that between Scott Leary of the Pacific Coast and Zoltan Holomay, the Hungarian, in the fifty-yard swim, which furnished the best sport of the tournament thus far. The two were off like a team and kept the pace the full distance, finishing in a dead heat. The judges ordered the race swum over, and Holomay showed greater endurance than Leary, swimming the second heat in three-fifths of a second better time than the first, and winning by two strokes. Daniels finished third in this event.

R. E. Beach of the Chicago Athletic Club won the one-mile handicap easily from H. B. Warren of the New York Athletic Club, with Jamison Handy of the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association swimming from scratch, third. Beach's handicap of 5 minutes 45 seconds was pronounced by experts present unreasonably great. The New York water polo team defeated Chicago 6 to 0. The New Yorkers have never been scored against. Summary:

Fifty-Yard Championship Swim.—Won by Zoltan Holomay, Budapest, Hungary; Scott Leary, Olympic Club, San Francisco, second; C. M. Daniels, New York A. C., third. Time—0:28.

Swimming on Back, 100 Yards.—Won by Walter Brock, Germany; George Hoffman, Germany, second; George Zacharias, Germany, third. Time—1:16 4-5.

440-Yard Handicap Swim.—Won by E. H. Adams, New York A. C., New York City, (0:20;) G. Kiss, Budapest, Hungary, (scratch,) second; Marquard Schwartz, Missouri A. C., St. Louis, Mo., (0:25,) third. Time—6:44 2-5.

220-Yard Championship Swim.—Won by C. M. Daniels, New York A. C., New York City; Francis Gailey, Olympic Club, San Francisco, Cal., second; E. Rausch, Germany, third. Time 2:44 1-5.

NEGRO MURDERER LYNCHED.

His Capture Effected by Other Negroes, Who Turned Him Over to Mob.

BRUNSON, Fla., Sept. 6.—The body of Wash Bradley, the negro who murdered Mrs. N. B. Barrow last Friday, has been found with both ears cut from his head and otherwise mutilated. His body had been hanged to a tree and riddled with bullets. Bradley's capture was made by Shed and Walter Howard, two negroes, at the home of another negro, Jim Tondon, two miles north of Levyville, yesterday.

When they overpowered him they disarmed him, tied him hand and foot, and delivered him to the neighbors of the settlement. The Barrow family were notified, and the news of his capture spread until a large mob appeared, with the result mentioned. Bradley confessed his guilt.

The doctor thinks the child was choked to death and his body taken in a rowboat through Hell Gate to Bowery Bay and dropped overboard.

8,000 yards curtain muslin, 12½c. yard.

This fine curtain muslin is the quality goods usually priced at 19c., 21c. and 29c.; it is 36 inches wide; there are dozens of patterns in dots, stripes and figures; the only reason the manufacturer had for making this reduction is that the selvages are slightly imperfect, due to catching in the loom while weaving.

McCARREN TELLS DOYLE LATCHSTRING IS OUT

But Doyle Fears to Reach for It, Lest It Be "Yanked Back."

LOVE FEAST IN KINGS COUNTY

Wrangle Starts When Farrell Inquires of McCarren Whether He Is "Outside the Breastworks."

The meeting of the Kings County Democratic Executive Committee, held last night in the Jefferson Building, on Court Square, was enlivened with a show of feeling on the part of the district leaders opposed to the leadership of Senator McCarren. The meeting was called to fix a date for the holding of the Assembly District Conventions to elect delegates to the State Convention. This matter was quickly settled, it being decided to hold the conventions next Friday night. The dates for the conventions for the nomination of candidates for Congress, the State Senate, and Assembly had already been fixed as Oct. 3, 4, and 5, respectively.

Then Deputy Water Commissioner Thomas R. Farrell, leader of the Eleventh District, who is backed by James Shevlin, arose and demanded to know from the Chairman, Senator McCarren, just where he stood in the organization. Farrell declared that his wishes with regard to the selection of places for holding the primaries had been entirely ignored by McCarren, and that the latter had arbitrarily removed election officials in the district chosen by him.

"I would like to know," continued Mr. Farrell, "whether I and the other leaders who have like cause for complaint are to be allowed to run the campaign in our own districts or be permitted to take any part in the effort to elect our party's candidates for President and Vice President."

Mr. Farrell waxed rather warm as he talked, but Senator McCarren preserved his usual coolness. In reply he calmly assured Mr. Farrell that each of the leaders would be allowed entire freedom in the management of the campaign in his own district. He then spoke of what he considered the essential features of a political organization to be, one of which was absolute loyalty on the part of every member to the will of the majority. To this was largely due the success of Tammany as an organization. Leaders of that organization who had seen fit to set themselves up against the rule of the majority had been thrown out.

"I do not hold myself better in any respect than any member here," he said, "but as a majority of the committee has chosen me as leader, I consider it the duty of every meruber to accept the will of this majority."

The Senator added that Judge John J. Walsh, leader of the Second District, had come to him and said frankly that he believed it his duty to respect the wishes of his old leader, Hugh McLaughlin. In reply Senator McCarren had told Judge Walsh that he could not dispute his right to a preference in the matter of a leader. If each member of the committee, however, was to select his own leader, organization would be destroyed and there would be chaos.

Deputy Fire Commissioner Doyle took occasion to ask if he was to be considered "outside the breastworks."

"Only as you have put yourself out," replied the Senator, with just a suggestion of a smile.

He pointed out that by an early act of his, that of presenting to the County Committee a resolution which had not been approved by the Executive Committee, Doyle had placed himself in an "irregular" position. The resolution in question was the one opposing the sending of an instructed delegation for Judge Parker to the State Convention. It was this move on Doyle's part which laid bare the fact that he was working in the interests of Charles F. Murphy in Brooklyn. Doyle, the Senator added, again with the shadow of a smile, was still romping around outside, but if he wanted to come back he would be welcomed.

"The latchstring is out," said Mr. McCarren.

"But it might be yanked back if I reached for it," suggested Doyle.

"Only to yank you in with it, I guess," returned the Senator, reassuringly.

Commissioner Farrell said he wished to make it clear that he believed in local autonomy and was as zealous as any man for the borough organization. Senator McCarren said he could not understand why, in that case, Farrell had taken a place as Deputy Water Commissioner from Tammany without consulting the Brooklyn organization, succeeding a man who had been recommended by the local organization and ousted by Tammany.

There was another wrangle when the selection of a place for holding the convention in the Fifth Senate District was made. Doyle wanted it held in his district, the Seventh Assembly, and was supported in this by the other anti-McCarren leaders. J. Morrissey Gray, leader of the Eighth Assembly District, wanted the convention held there. Doyle called attention to the fact that two of the three Assembly District leaders of the Senate District supported his proposition and he warned the committee that if Gray got the convention it would be a violation of the "majority principle." Despite this warning, it was voted to hold the convention in Gray's district.

Doyle was asked point blank by Senator McCarren whether he and his allies would go into the caucus of Kings County delegates to the State Convention and go with them to Saratoga or as an annex to Tammany. In answer Doyle said he could not say what course would be followed until he had conferred with his associates, who will probably meet in conference to-night.

TAMMANY'S STATE DELEGATES.

Carlisle and Fairchild May Be in the Wigwam Contingent.

Although Charles F. Murphy spent some time at Tammany Hall yesterday he declined to say anything on the subject of the subsided McCarren controversy or of the probability of the anti-McCarren leaders there throwing their fifteen delegates to Shepard for Governor to cut into McCarren's boom for Controller Grout.

"I am busy now trying to get out the full Tammany vote for Judge Parker and trying in other ways to elect the candidate," said Mr. Murphy. He said he could not give any definite idea as yet to the make-up of the list of delegates from Tammany's thirty-five Assembly districts to the State Convention. Mr. Murphy himself will head the delegation from his own Eighteenth District, and will vote the entire delegation in the convention. Mayor McClellan may be named as a delegate from the Fifth District, but in such an event his alternate probably will represent him on the convention floor, as the Mayor is not likely to attend.

John G. Carlisle, who was named as a delegate two years ago, is likely to go from the Twenty-fifth District, and ex-Secretary Charles S. Fairchild may be a delegate from the Fifth District. Practically all the Tammany Commissioners will go as delegates, as will most of the district leaders. Congressman Cockran and Congressman Francis Burton Harrison also will be delegates. State Senator George W. Plunkitt, who has charge of the arrangements to take the Tammany contingent to Saratoga, said yesterday that fully 2,000 persons would attend from the different districts. The contingent from the three Queens County districts, the three Westchester districts, and the one Richmond district also want to go with Tammany and probably will be accommodated. The delegates and others from the five anti-McCarren districts in Brooklyn also are expected to go with Tammany.

SAYS BRYAN MEN ARE LOYAL.

J. G. Johnson Talks After Seeing Taggart, Sheehan, and Nicoll.

After a long conference between Chairman Taggart of the National Committee, Vice Chairman Nicoll, Executive Chairman Sheehan, and J. G. Johnson of Kansas at National Headquarters yesterday, Mr. Johnson declared there was no truth in the published reports that the Bryan men of the West were lukewarm toward Judge Parker.

"The Bryan men will work as heartily for Parker in this campaign as they did for Bryan in the last two campaigns, during which I was Executive Chairman," declared Mr. Johnson. "We are Democrats first of all, and we stand by the Democratic ticket just as we would have expected the Eastern Democrats to stand by us had we won at the St. Louis Convention. Bryan himself will do all in his power to elect Parker, and you will not hear of any treachery or backsliding in the West on election day."

Among the callers at National Headquarters during the day was Congressman "Big Tim" Sullivan, who drove up in a hansom. "There is nothin' political in this visit," said "Big Tim" when it was over. "When I play politics I play it down on the Bowery. I'm not up to this Waldorf game. I came up here this morning to see how politics looks across the street from the Waldorf."

OLNEY AND MILES AT ESOPUS.

Ex-Secretary Visits Judge Parker—Cleveland Not Likely to Speak.

Special to The New York Times.

ROSEMOUNT, Esopus, N. Y., Sept. 6.—Richard Olney, Secretary of State under Grover Cleveland from 1895 to 1897; Gen. Nelson A. Miles, John R. McLean, the Ohio Democratic leader, and Judge Daniel McConville were visitors to Rosemount today. All of them came to discuss the situation with the candidate, and all but one departed voicing his praises and expressing confidence in the election result.

Mr. Olney was a notable exception. When he left he was not in a loquacious frame of mind. At the station the reporters approached him. "I am not Mr. Olney," he said, "and I have nothing to say."

A more tractable personage who accompanied him said the ex-Secretary intends to make stump speeches in the Bay State in October and has promised Judge Parker to do his best in support of the ticket.

Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles called at 3 o'clock. He was driven to Rosemount from the station with Mr. McLean and Judge McConville, who is Chairman of the Speakers' Bureau of the Democratic National Committee. Gen. Miles had advice and suggestions to offer the nominee, but both parties to the conference declined to say what they were.

"I am not a campaigner," declared the General, "but I shall watch this canvass with the greatest interest and with every confidence that the people of the country will not fail to appreciate the standard bearer of the Democracy and the sound principles he typifies."

Judge McConville went over with Judge Parker the plans he has made for stump speaking during the campaign.

"Most of the speaking done so far," he said, "has been devoted to the State of Maine. Now there will be an interval of about two weeks until the orators get back from their vacations. Then we will begin in earnest and keep up the broadside until election day, so that there will be few people in the country who need vote without having heard our side of the argument. Some of the best orators in the United States have volunteered their services to the bureau."

Judge McConville does not believe that Grover Cleveland will be asked to deliver any addresses in support of Judge Parker. It would be indelicate, he thinks, to request the ex-President to go upon the stump for the National ticket this year. Nevertheless, it is expected that Mr. Cleveland will wield an influential pen.

The National Committee informed the nominee to-day that it has completed arrangements for the coming and reception of the Democratic editors on Thursday. The delegation will come to Hyde Park, across the river, by train over the New York Central Railroad at 11 o'clock in the morning, and will be brought to Rosemount on board a chartered steamer.

In response to a speech by the chairman of the contingent, Judge Parker will deliver a brief address, but it will be of only general significance. The editors will return to New York by boat about one o'clock in the afternoon.

DEMOCRATIC EDITORS ARRIVE.

Judge Parker Is Expected to Address Them at Esopus.

Democratic editors from all parts of the country began arriving at the Democratic National Committee Headquarters yesterday to attend the general editorial conference which has been called by Chairman Taggart for to-day. More than 100 arrivals were noted yesterday, and it is expected that fully five times that number will attend the conference.

Elaborate preparations have been made by Josephus Daniels, North Carolina's member of the National Committee and the man who is in charge of the committee for the entertainment of the editors, for the reception of the editors. Mr. Daniels moved over yesterday from National Headquarters to the Waldorf-Astoria, so he could the better receive the visitors. There he will remain until to-night's banquet and to-morrow's excursion to Esopus are things of the past. To-night's banquet will be held in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. The toastmaster will be S. P. Johnson, who has charge of the Washington Bureau of The Cincinnati Enquirer and who is an ex-President of the Gridiron Club. The toasts as arranged will be as follows:

Henry Watterson—"The Issue and the Outlook."

Clark Howell—"Democratic Success; the Surest Guarantee of National Unity."

Herman Ridder—"Why Independents Support Parker and Davis."

Andrew McLean—"The Democrats of the Empire State."

John B. Stoll—"The Democrats of the West."

Willis J. Abbot—"The Triumphant Democracy."

Chairman Taggart, Vice Chairman De Lancey Nicoll, Executive Chairman William F. Sheehan, Secretary Woodson, and many of the members of the National Committee, will attend the banquet, as also will the State Chairmen of several nearby States.

A change has been made in the plans for visiting Esopus on Thursday. Instead of taking the entire party up and back on the steamer Shinnecock, it is planned now to take the editors up the river by the New York Central Railroad to Hyde Park, at which point the Shinnecock will be waiting to take the party across the river to Rosemount landing. On the return trip the Shinnecock will convey the party to New York. At Esopus Charles W. Knapp, the editor of the St. Louis Republic, will make an address, to which Judge Parker will reply. The editors will be taken to Coney Island as the guests of the management of Dreamland on Thursday evening.

DOUGLAS WINS A POINT.

He Gets a Few State Convention Delegates—Gilman Retains Leadership.

Congressman Douglas, who was defeated at the primary contest for the Republican leadership of the Nineteenth Assembly District, attacked the validity of the election in the Supreme Court yesterday by obtaining from Justice Clarke an order to show cause why there should not issue a peremptory writ directing the Inspector of three close election districts to throw out certain marked ballots. After reviewing the case Justice Clarke decided in Douglas's favor.

The decision, while giving Douglas control of certain delegates to the State Convention, leaves ex-Deputy State Controller Gilman leader of the district.

Cassidy Outranks Chairman Meyer.

When the Democrats of the First and Second Queens County Assembly Districts held their conventions last night to elect delegates to the coming Saratoga State Convention, Borough President Cassidy, who is the Democratic leader of the borough, had himself elected first man on the delegation from the First District, and then had State Chairman Cord Meyer put on as second man. There was no comment or debate about the placing of the State Chairman as the second man on the delegation from his own Assembly District.

REPUBLICANS AT SEA OVER STATE TICKET

Will Leave Selection for Governor to the Convention Leaders.

ODELL SAYS HE WON'T RUN

Is Looking for Anybody to Beat Woodruff—Disappointed by Higgins's Slur on "The Tag."

At a conference of Republican State leaders at the State Committee headquarters, in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, yesterday, Gov. Odell declared that under no circumstances would he accept a renomination. His announcement was called forth by the suggestion of one of his friends and admirers that he ought to step into the breach; the leaders being unable to agree upon any other candidate. Talk of his candidacy, the Governor said, was distasteful to him, and he hoped it would cease.

The Governor's declination to permit the consideration of his name was the most important outcome of a conference having for its object an agreement of the leaders as to the best man who could be selected as the head of the ticket. Being unable to fix upon any man whose candidacy would unite the factions and give fair assurance of success, it was decided by the leaders that the Gubernatorial nomination should be left open until the assembling of the delegates at Saratoga, where there will be a conference of all of the leaders of the delegations. Unless the delegation leaders can come to an agreement which will meet with the indorsement of the convention the candidates will be allowed to go into the convention and fight it out.

The best information obtainable would seem to indicate that the Republicans are very much at sea as to the make-up of their State ticket and that there is a decided undercurrent of bitter feeling between the Odell men and the Platt men, notwithstanding their pretensions of harmony. There is little doubt that the Platt men are sincerely for Woodruff and will push his candidacy vigorously, and there is less doubt that Gov. Odell and his friends will never permit the nomination of Woodruff if they can prevent it.

That Gov. Odell and his kitchen Cabinet had fixed upon Lieut. Gov. Higgins as the most available candidate to take up has been admitted by those close to the Governor, but a slight change came over their spirits when they read the statement given out by Mr. Higgins, in which he said, in effect, that he did not want a nomination with the Odell tag on it. The interpretation put upon the Higgins statement is that he will not accept a nomination unless it comes to him by a unanimous vote of the convention as a result of a party caucus.

Gov. Odell and "The Tapeworm Club" were not flattered by that kind of talk from their chosen favorite. They are still for him, however, because at present he is the only man to whom they can turn as a formidable antagonist to Woodruff, but they are not so much for him as they were on Saturday last. In fact, it may be said that if they could find some "dark horse" who would answer all requirements and whom they could prevail upon the caucus to accept they might spring him at the eleventh hour. The fear that a man selected in that way would wear "the tag" in the eyes of the public, and consequently be loaded down with a fatal handicap, will be the restraining influence against any such course of action.

There was some talk of Hamilton Fish in the conference yesterday, and the availability of ex-Gov. Frank S. Black, Mayor Erastus C. Knight of Buffalo, and others was referred to, but it was plain that the differences of opinion were too decided to be reconciled at this time.

Gov. Odell's demeanor, both in the conference and in individual interviews with the leaders, was a puzzle. He continued to maintain that he had no candidate, and that he favored an open convention, and to none of them would he communicate his preference. That he has a preference all of them were convinced. They believe that he has made up his mind as to just what he intends to do, but is keeping his own counsel because he does not wish to disclose his hand to the Platt men.

It was noon before Gov. Odell arrived at State headquarters yesterday. He was joined almost immediately by Senators Malby, Raines, and Brackett. Congressman James S. Sherman, National Committeeman Ward, ex-Congressman Emerson, George W. Aldridge, Louis F. Payn, William Halpin, and others. Their deliberations lasted for two hours.

Later in the day Senators Platt and Depew went to the hotel and they also had a talk with the Governor. There had been a conference earlier in the day at the office of Senator Platt. This was attended by Col. George W. Dunn and other of the Senator's friends from up State. The inference drawn from this was that Senator Platt and Gov. Odell were not in accord with respect to the Gubernatorial nomination, and that there was little prospect that they would be. Senator Platt, when he reached the hotel, was asked whether he had come to attend the conference. He replied: "What conference? I know of no conference."

Word was received by Gov. Odell from ex-Gov. Frank S. Black yesterday that he could not act as Temporary Chairman of the State Convention. It was said that an effort would be made to have Gov. Black reconsider.

TO SING OF FREEDOM AGAIN.

Republicans to Use Platt's Fremont Glee Book at Saratoga Celebration.

An original copy of "The Freeman's Glee Book," owned by Senator T. C. Platt and used by him as a member of the Frémont Glee Club in 1856, has been loaned by the Senator to those having in charge the arrangements for the semi-centennial celebration of the birth of the Republican Party at Saratoga next week, and the singing of the old songs will be made a feature of the celebration.

The book is a pamphlet of 106 pages and shows the marks of wear and old age. Senator Platt was quite a singer in his younger days, and often lead the singing at Frémont meetings.

The first song in the book, entitled "Frémont and Liberty," was made up of several verses of "Yankee Doodle," "Adams and Liberty," written by Robert Treat Paine for an anniversary meeting in Massachusetts in 1798, and several more verses appropriate to the Frémont campaign. The verses were sung to the air now known as "The Star-Spangled Banner." The following is a sample verse:

The fame of our arms, of our laws the mild sway
Has justly ennobled our Nation in glory,
Till the dark clouds of faction obscured our young day,
And enveloped the Sun of American glory—
But the tattoo be told,
Who their country have sold,
And bartered their God for His image in gold,
That ne'er shall the sons of Columbia be slaves,
While the earth bears a plant, or the sea rolls a wave.

Another song, "The March of the Free," was written by Horace Greeley. One stanza of the song is as follows:

From thy borders, Panobscot, their shot has ascended;
Connecticut's title bears it on;
'Till with thine, Mississippi, its surgings are blended,
And Roanoke recalls glories gone;
Thou placid Ohio, art thrill'd with the spirit
Wak'd from Michigan's shore to the sea,
Where our own noble Hudson so proudly shall bear it
And exult in the march of the Free, the Free!
And exult in the march of the Free, the Free!
And exult in the march of the Free!

Other songs in the book are entitled "God Made Us Free," by Cyrus Bryant, a brother of William Cullen Bryant; "Freedom and Frémont," "The White House Race," "A Little More Cider," and "The Nebraskaites Think."

At the bottom of each page of the songbook there are quotations from the speeches of Daniel Webster, Millard Fillmore, and the Republican platform of 1856.

Election Odds Unchanged.

J. J. Judge, a curb broker, made a wager on the Presidential campaign yesterday of $1,000 to $800 with E. F. Hutton & Co. No other wagers were reported, although there were considerable amounts of Roosevelt money offered at the same figures. No change was made in the odds established several days ago of 10 to 6 and 6½ to 10.

EGAN LEADS GOLF FIELD

Travis Beaten by One Stroke in Opening Championship Round.

BALTUSROL LINKS CROWDED

Pacific Coast and Texas Represented Among the Sixty-four Now Eligible for National Honors.

H. Chandler Egan, the new Western amateur golf champion and a Harvard student, led the big field of golfers yesterday at the Baltusrol Golf Club, near Short Hills, N. J., in the opening round for the championship of the United States. His score for the 18-hole medal play round was 80 strokes, while in a triple tie for second place, with 81 strokes, were Walter J. Travis, the American and English champion; Archie M. Reid of St. Andrew's and a Yale student, and Fred Herreshoff, not yet out of preparatory school, but sufficiently advanced in the intricacies of golf to hold the championship of Vermont.

The medal play qualifying round will be resumed to-day, for in the 18-hole round yesterday 64 qualified to play a 36-hole round to-day, the weeding out medal play contest practically being 54 holes. The leading 32 in to-day's play will then meet in the regular championship match play rounds to-morrow.

Travis and Capt. T. M. Horn of the United States regular army were the second pair to start. A good-sized gallery followed the champion, but they witnessed no phenomenal golf, and Travis showed an undue tendency to find the bunkers on the course. Capt. Horn fell far in the rear, with 105. The significant fact about the four leaders is that all, except Travis, represent the school and college element. The younger players showed up admirably, fully half of the 64 eligibles being under thirty years of age Chandler Egan played a very steady game, his long game being particularly good, and his Western friends are looking to him for great things.

One of the surprises of the day was the poor scoring done by Findlay Douglas, an ex-champion, and Frank O. Reinhart, the intercollegiate champion, and who holds the record of 73 strokes for the Baltusrol course. The tie for the last two places will be played off the first thing this morning. The 64 who qualified are:

MRS. GROSVENOR'S HORSES WIN

New York Woman's Exhibits Take Blue Ribbons at Newport.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 6.—The second day of the horse show drew nearly as large an attendance as on the opening day, the Summer residents filling all the boxes and occupying many of the seats in the grand stand. There was more life in the programme, which introduced the only four-in-hand competition of the show, and a very interesting ladies' driving class.

The honors of the day went to Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor of New York, who won four firsts, four seconds, and two third prizes. Eben D. Jordan of Boston was next with four firsts and two seconds, and Reginald C. Vanderbilt won two firsts, two seconds, two thirds, and one fourth prize. Alfred G. Vanderbilt drove in the four-in-hand class, with his coach Venture, but was given only a third prize, being beaten by two teams entered by Mrs. Grosvenor. The ladies' single horse and phaeton class were the feature of the afternoon. Mrs. Vanderbilt driving Reginald C. Vanderbilt's Herald, Miss Beach driving Eben D. Jordan's The Baron, Miss Gertrude Gilbert driving Mrs. Grosvenor's Little Boy Blue, and Miss Tyng driving R. H. Tyng's Brandy and Soda. Miss Beach won the blue ribbon, with Mrs. Vanderbilt second. The summary follows:

FOURTEEN PAGES.

EDWARD M. SHEPARD.

The nomination of Mr. SHEPARD for Governor by the Democrats would impart life and spirit to the somewhat prosy campaign in this State. Mr. SHEPARD has political ideas, and he knows how to express them before an audience. He is an effective speaker. His speeches attract public attention far beyond the audience to which they are addressed and the community in which they are delivered. Newspaper reports of them are read and studied throughout this State and in other States of the Union.

If the Saratoga Convention should put the name of Mr. SHEPARD at the head of the ticket he would be able to make such a canvass of the State and such an appeal to the voters as has not personally been made by the party's candidate for Governor in many a long year. WILLIAM E. RUSSELL, a Democrat, was thrice elected Governor of the Republican State of Massachusetts largely because of the possession of qualities strikingly similar to those which distinguish Mr. SHEPARD. He was in the first place a man of high and fine character. Then his ideas upon public affairs and the conduct of public business were of a nature to commend themselves to all sensible and honest men. His standards were high, and he held himself bound in good faith to live up to them. Moreover, he was a convincing speaker. He was able to tell the voters what he thought was for their good, to meet the arguments of his opponents, and to present in his own behalf arguments they found it difficult to refute. His speeches were undoubtedly a determining factor in those memorable campaigns in the old Bay State.

Mr. SHEPARD can make this campaign memorable. He can not only put life into the campaign, but put hope into Democratic bosoms. It would be a uniting and uplifting nomination. The party has an opportunity by nominating him to take a step that will go far to restore to the Democracy the glory of the old Tilden days.

OUR NORTHERN NEIGHBORS.

Mr. JOHN H. RAFTERY, the special correspondent of The St. Louis Republic, who is sending to his paper a most interesting and informing series of articles from Canada, writes from Winnipeg that on one night "seventy carloads of immigrants passed through North Bay, Ontario, en route to the hard wheat lands of Assiniboia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, farmers, laborers, artisans, shopkeepers—two regiments of them—all going into Canada's new country to build homes, to harvest crops, to open stores." And he estimates that within the last twenty months a half million of pioneers have come into the region, of whom a quarter of a million were from the United States.

This does not mean that the Canadian Northwest is being Americanized, in the sense that the majority or anywhere near a majority of its people will be within a calculable time Americans by birth or by descent. But it does mean that a considerable proportion of the people of that region will be of this sort, and that the conditions of life, the needs of the community, its aims, sentiment, and opinions will tend to be like those that have prevailed in the newer agricultural portions of the United States. With this important difference, that the general standard of industry, education, business and social life will be higher than among the earlier pioneers of the United States in the West. It means also that peculiar colonial feeling with relation to England which exists in the eastern and southern parts of Canada will be much modified and to a great extent will disappear in the Northwest. Instance the following passage from Mr. RAFTERY'S latest letter:

"What do we care about England?" asked GRAHAM FERGUSON, a native farmer and ranchman of Manitoba, when I sounded him on the Chamberlain plank. "What good will that scheme do Canada in its trade with England? The empire needs Canada far more than Canada needs the empire. CHAMBERLAIN knows that. England must have our hard wheat, tariff or no tariff; she needs our beef, mutton, pork, and lumber.

"If the people of England wish to put upon themselves a new tax in the shape of a protective tariff, that is their business. Let them wall out the United States, too, if they wish. But if they choose to do these things I cannot see that it is an argument in favor of our giving to England any further concessions.

"So far as business is concerned, it is the United States and not England with which we should be arranging commercial unity. The United States makes what we want—makes it better, cheaper, in greater quantities, and much nearer to our homes than England, or even the manufacturing districts of Canada itself.

"On the other hand, as to what we produce: Why must we send it across a continent by rail or ocean on costly ships when there are 80,000,000 people beside us who want our products?"

The fact that is of most importance to the United States in the situation of the great Northwestern provinces of Canada is that here we have a population already considerable, rapidly growing, energetic, enterprising, in sympathy with American ideas, accustomed to American ways, and ready to trade with us. The future of the region is extraordinarily promising. Its resources are vast and varied, and its development is sure along the lines followed in our own country. Why should we maintain along the frontier of such a region artificial customs barriers to impede its trade with us and to force trade into other channels?

VERMONT AND ARKANSAS.

At the present writing the indications are that the Republican majority in Vermont will be about 30,000. This is fully up to the average of the majorities obtained in the years in which the Republicans have been successful in electing their candidate for President. It does not warrant any inference that the sentiment of the Northeast has undergone any revolutionary change on account of the return of the Democratic Party to sound doctrine on the money question.

On the other hand, the fuller returns from Arkansas show a falling off of the Democratic vote in that State which is hardly to be accounted for wholly by local disaffection. It is probable that the so-called "radicals" who were disappointed at the National Convention and whom Mr. BRYAN claimed to represent have expressed their disappointment and resentment by staying at home. That would be likely to lead, in November, to their voting the Populist ticket.

THE STRIKE AT MARSEILLES.

Our Paris correspondent says that real alarm is felt in Government circles on account of the shipping strike at Marseilles, and he emphasizes the prediction of the President of the Compagnie Générale Transatlantique that street disturbances were likely to break out during the week. Street disturbances, however, are trivial possibilities when compared with the probable commercial catastrophe which a prolongation of the strike or a victory of the strikers would seem to make inevitable.

In a circular issued by the shipowners and merchants of Marseilles it is stated, without the least exaggeration, that "conventions signed subsequent to previous strikes are continually violated. Sailors and dockers stop work for any trivial reason, and show a most absolute disdain for the laws and contracts which bind their masters." In other words, the fetich of the sympathetic strike has so robbed these men of their manhood that the dictates of their leaders have supplanted their old-time interest in the success of their employers' enterprises, and in their own future. "Every day," continues the circular, "and at any time, the seamen or the laborers, terrorized, but obedient to a handful of leaders, create new incidents, raise further demands, and seek to impose their sovereign will upon every one."

This intolerable condition has existed for two years. Now, however, the owners have decided to lay up their vessels until every question between every owner and his employés shall be settled. The circular also notes that the Government views the affair with indifference. The firm stand of the owners and the attitude of the Government are actually inspired by the desire to bring the strike to an end as soon as possible. But each method works to the undoing of the other. In the meantime, not only has the local shipping been tied up, but as late as Aug. 27 twenty-five steamers which make Marseilles a port of call had canceled their sailing, principally from Italian ports. A rumor has gone abroad that the wealthy Peninsular and Oriental Company would shortly abandon Marseilles for Genoa.

Genoa—that is the key to the whole situation. It accounts for the boldness of the strikers, for the firmness of the owners, and for the indifference of the authorities, who are indifferent because they hope that without their support the owners may cease to struggle. Genoa has long been a rival of Marseilles, and now that the Simplon Tunnel is nearing completion, and new railways between Grenoble and Turin, between Nice and Genoa are contemplated, her position becomes absolutely menacing. A prolonged strike at the French port or a continued state of uncertain and untrustworthy dock labor there would mean absolute and permanent ruin for Marseilles. With the tunnel open and new railways in operation, the products of Western and Central Europe would certainly seek Genoa, where the Italian Government has provided against strikes on transport lines by making strike leaders who refuse to arbitrate grievances amenable to the law of conspiracy.

THE OPEN SHOP AS A STRIKE PRODUCT.

It is an interesting fact that the important strikes of recent date have all resulted in establishing the open shop in the trades in which they have been brought. It was so in the clothing strike, it has been so in the meat strike, and it will probably be so in the building strike if the natural course of events is not interfered with.

Mr. WILLIAM ENGLISH WALLING, referring in The Independent to the struggle now in progress, says:

"If the employers' campaign is successful it means the elimination of the trades unions as a factor in American industry." On this subject many of the best-informed students of the labor movement in this and other countries differ from Mr. WALLING as widely that the difference is irreconcilable. It seems the purpose of a great body of the professional labor leaders of the Mitchell and Gompers type to maintain that the unions cannot exist in the presence of the open shop; but a great many others who are equally wise and presumably as honest take the opposite ground and insist that if the unions depend upon the co-operation of employers in denying employment to those not in their membership the whole movement is doomed to irrevocable ruin. We have already quoted a number of very representative labor leaders on this subject, and can add the views of Chief STONE of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who during the past few days has been active in the discussion between the elevated employés and the management of the Interborough Company. In an address lately delivered at Fort Worth Mr. STONE, while standing as a firm believer in union labor and the right of laboring men to organize, declared with emphasis that when a union compels any man to join it against his will it weakens itself and menaces its permanence. He said:

On almost every road in the country we work side by side with men who do not belong to our orders. No man is forced to join us. We try to show him how he would be benefited by belonging to us, and where his interests are, but we never say to him to join us or you cannot earn an honest living by working here. I do not believe any man ever made a good member in any organization who was forced to join it against his will, for the chances are that when opportunity offers he will prove a traitor and betray you.

In promoting the open shop by ill-advised and impracticable strikes it may be that labor is doing itself more good than it realizes. With the open shop and open markets labor would prosper as never before and the industrial future of this country would be assured beyond competition.

A NOVEL TRUST.

We commend to the attention of the intemperate advocates of total abstinence the account given in our columns on Sunday, by our Consul at Nottingham, of the working of the Public House Trust in England. It is the organization the success of which suggested the starting of the Subway Tavern in this city, which the very earnest and well-meaning class referred to so sternly condemn.

The prime purpose of the trust, as described by our Consul, is the "public interest and not private interest." The essential rule of its administration is that the liquor it sells shall be of pure quality, and that the manager shall derive no profit from its sale. The trust has its associate organizations in every county in England but four, and in some of the counties of Ireland and Scotland, and is particularly strong in the latter country. In England some 150 houses are under its management, and the number is steadily growing under the pressure of the demand from land owners, large manufacturers, and public opinion generally. The capital invested is at present above $1,500,000 and is in the way of being increased. The following is the statement by the trust association of its principles:

The general arrangement and management of the house shall be on the lines of a house of refreshment instead of a mere drinking bar.

Food and a good variety of non-intoxicant drinks shall be as easily accessible to customers as beer and spirits.

The licensing laws enacted by Parliament for the regulation of public houses and the promotion of temperance shall be most strictly carried out in every particular.

A holder of a license is in a sense a servant of the public, and he must study the comfort, well-being, and health of his customers; his house must therefore be scrupulously clean, and the rooms most used by the public must be comfortably arranged, well warmed in Winter, and well ventilated.

We think it may be assumed that a movement fostered by many of the most eminent and philanthropic of the leaders of opinion in England which has made such substantial progress is worthy of careful study and may prove to be worthy of adaptation to our own situation.

EFFECTIVE CHILDREN'S CHARITIES.

The death rate of this city for the past two months has been abnormally high. According to the records of the Health Department this is largely due to the extraordinary number of deaths among young children in the tenement quarters. It is believed by experienced physicians that much of the sickness among the children is attributable to ignorance in matters of feeding and clothing, and to lack of food.

The organized children's Summer charities have been energetic and effective in their efforts to prevent sickness among poor children, as well as to cure them. The Sick Children's Mission of the Children's Aid Society has had ten physicians employed for this purpose since the first of June. A corps of trained nurses has assisted them, and has instructed the mothers with respect to feeding and clothing, and the sanitary care of their homes.

The Health Home of the society on the seashore at Coney Island has been taxed to its capacity in caring for sick infants. In many cases their condition is considered hopeless in the city; but with sea air, proper food, and intelligent nursing they recover. Since July 1, 3,500 mothers and sick infants have enjoyed a week's outing at this health-giving resort, while a weekly average of 350 poor mothers and delicate children were sent to spend a day there.

At the Summer Home at Bath Beach, under the auspices of the Children's Aid Society, about 3,000 children from the poorest homes in the tenement quarters of the city were sent to spend a week or longer enjoying the sea bathing and a variety of games and amusements. Here a pretty cottage has been built specially for crippled children. About 200 of these unfortunates are cared for during the season. Most of their ailments and deformities are incurable, but a stay of two or three weeks at this cottage effects a decided improvement in their condition.

During this Summer about 4,000 poor boys were taken to the Brace Model Farm School at Kensico, N. Y. Many of these boys had never been in the country. A large number of them are expected to enroll in the membership of the school and will ultimately graduate as farmers.

It is the intention of the Children's Aid Society to keep these places open for a week or two longer if sufficient funds are received. Mr. C. LORING BRACE will receive and acknowledge contributions sent to him at 105 East Twenty-second Street. Checks may be drawn payable to A. E. HEPBURN, Treasurer.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Two of our correspondents have found reason to criticise our choice of words, though fortunately they do not claim to have had any difficulty in understanding what we said in the sentences that offended them. The first is troubled by a recent reference to the "Vicereine" of Canada—a reference, by the way, which we do not remember making, but if we did we can bear the responsibility easily enough. "Your authority for the title," declares the troubled one, "is traversed in a desire for accuracy," and, having begun so well with a stately phrase, used only by the first families, he continues: "The wife of the Viceroy of India is Lady CURZON, and not Vicereine. The wife of the Archbishop of Canterbury is Mrs. DAVIDSON, and not her Grace of Canterbury. Your correspondent is anxious to be corrected if in error, and to offer apologies for his presumption. In no other country has he seen the title of Vicereine used, but we live in a creative age." A very pretty combination, that, of fact and—fancy. Lady CURZON most certainly is Vicereine by all the accepted definitions of the word, both English and French, since every one of them, boiled down, is "the wife of a Viceroy." Our friend should remember that marriage does a lot for women in matters of this kind even if it doesn't make "her Grace of Canterbury." It makes, for instance, a present "Queen" in England—one who is called so no less accurately than was her husband's predecessor, though she is a Queen of a very different sort. The real objection to "Viceroy of Canada" is the fact that Canada has no Viceroy. The Canadians, however, use both titles constantly—possibly in compunction for having taken from the Governor General about everything else in the way of power, glory and affection—and we might have followed their example without violating any one of the really important proprieties, verbal or other. The second grievance is that, after deriding and denouncing the automobilist for the unnecessary use of French terms we ourselves weakly yield to silly custom and employ the word "chauffeur." There is something in that indictment, now, but oh, so very little! The name of a thing may be good, bad, or indifferent, but whatever its quality, name of the thing it is just the same. Linguistic morals are full satisfied when one has tried his best to kill the bad name on its first appearance. If the effort fails there is nothing to do except to accept the inevitable with such grace as the circumstances permit. "Chauffeur" still annoys us, but it would be the height of affectation to ignore its unquestionable existence as an English word in common usage, with a meaning now instantly appreciable by all.

—Anybody at all disposed to judge harshly those of his fellow countrymen who are rather distant neighbors could find a fairly good excuse for seeing in the current Southern reports about a "Before Day Club" merely the results of a not very ingenious effort to excuse past lynchings and to incite more of them. The criminal possibilities of the vicious negro are undoubtedly large—quite large enough to make credible the temporary banding together of a few of them for purposes of murder and arson, but the story of a great secret organisation of that kind, covering several States, is some distance beyond anything like easy belief. That one or two negroes under the strenuous pressure of a Southern examination have confessed to membership in such a society is far from being proof of its existence in any such shape and extent as charged. The confession, accompanied as it has been in every instance by the inculpation of other negroes still to be captured, is a convenient, and perhaps the only possible, device for delaying the infliction of vehement punishment upon the prisoner in hand, and the readiness with which it is resorted to is fairly good evidence that the "Before Day Club" is for the most part, at least, a product of imagination and exaggeration. Whatever else negroes may not know, they know each other, and they are slow to trust and slower to obey leaders of their own race. This trait explains the absence of labor unions among them, and it is not at all likely that they have submitted themselves to any such despotic government as the conduct of a great murder society would necessarily involve. Inability to combine is a marked negro trait, and to it, perhaps more than to any other, is due the frequency with which the race has been held in slavery by masters of inferior strength and numbers, but firmly united for vigorous action against the individual serf.

—By the common consent of humanity the ordinary ethical standards have been considerably relaxed for application in judging the stratagems by which an ardent lover overcomes the difficulties that impede the success of an honorable suit. This relaxation has crystallized into the proverb that "All's fair in love and war"; and though that is recognized as being an excessive and therefore dangerous exaggeration of what honest folk are willing to admit, yet it has as much truth as most proverbs possess. It is therefore interesting to inquire whether that young man was within the indefinite rights of a lover who took his sweetheart to Liberty Hall and intentionally "missed" the last boat, thinking that the situation thus created would be so full of embarrassments that to escape them she would consent to the immediate marriage at which she had hitherto balked on account of the opposition of her parents. As things turned out the scheme failed dismally, for there was no clergyman within reach, the lamentations of the alarmed fair attracted the attention of a sympathetic soldier, and the enterprising lover, under pressing interrogation, lost his nerve and confessed that his accident was not accidental at all. That, of course, put him instantly out of court, being a blunder that certainly was a crime, however it may have been with his original plan. It is to be noted that the officer who came to the maiden's rescue and insured her immediate safety from all danger, including that of Mrs. Grundy's criticism, had a kindly feeling for the guileful youth, called him a "plucky kid," and prophesied his ultimate attainment of the desired bride, but that was merely a military judgment, and everybody knows that the military are not wholly trustworthy guides in problems of this sort. The condemnation of the lover in his failure. That was unpardonable. He should have known that the clergyman was at hand and that the nearest justice of the peace would have married them in two shakes of a lamb's tail, or, at all events, would have acquiesced. As it is, however, we at least must decide against him and his ruse.

—Long experience in defeat has failed to teach the Russians caution in the wording of their dispatches from the front. Momentary success at a single point seems to intoxicate them, and then they send out "news" that makes pathetic reading in the light of subsequent events. Yesterday, for example, they permitted us to read that "the retreat of our troops from Liao-Yang . . . was carried out in good order, and the enemy's insignificant attempts at pursuit were stopped by our rear guard." One doesn't have to be a Russian sympathizer to be sorry that those lines were written and made public. In less tragical circumstances they would be funny, but nobody can laugh at them as it is.

JUDGE KEOGH FOR GOVERNOR.

Nomination Would Please Masses, Says Westchester Democrat.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your excellent editorial of Sept. 2 exactly describes the requisites of a Gubernatorial candidate for the Democracy in this State. No subservient pliable tool of any machine can be elected this Autumn. A man of "such independence and self-sufficing ability" that he will need the support of no boss, as you well say, should be nominated. We should have a man who will be in himself a platform to vote for. Such a man is Judge Martin J. Keogh, of Westchester, and it is an inspiration to all Democrats to feel that some of our party leaders are wise enough to bring such men forward, for such candidates can only give added strength to the organization itself, though they are not to be ruled by it. Ability and character are the standards to measure to, and in both ability and character Judge Keogh yields to none. A winning, sympathetic personality adds attraction to force. Long the leader of the Westchester County Bar, where his qualities as an advocate, especially before juries, were highly prized and sought, he gave much of his time and abilities to the aid of the friendless. A poor devil who found none to plead for him always found in him a friend.

Always interested in the Democratic Party and its principles, but never having been an office seeker, he was nominated in 1895 as a Supreme Court Judge in the Second District. He swept Westchester County and was elected—the only one of three candidates then running for Judgeships on the Democratic ticket to be elected. He is one of the two or three Democrats who have carried the county for the last ten years and is the only Democrat who could be nominated who would carry it to-day.

Judge Keogh's strength lies not alone in Westchester County, for the District in which he was elected covers Dutchess, Rockland, Putnam, Orange, Nassau, Queens, Kings, and Richmond as well as Westchester County. He is in no way involved in the factional quarrels of the Manhattan and Brooklyn leaders, and stands well with and is respected by them all. His nomination could not be claimed as a victory by either faction. It would mean a people's nomination. He organized alone in his home city of New Rochelle a series of free lectures kindred to those of the People's Institute, that all the people might attend, seeking to extend their means of knowledge. Some of our best-known citizens have come to speak there—men like Edward M. Shepard, President Schurman of Cornell, Charles Sprague Smith, and others for the discussion of questions of the day.

We hear much of Mill, Belmont, Sheehan, and others from our friends the enemy. I believe them to be working unselfishly for the cause of good Democracy, but the Democracy is the people's party. Judge Keogh is of the people, and his nomination would stand for their recognition; the recognition of the great mass of honest, hard-working toilers, whose votes bring the party its strength, because they believe that in its ideals that party stands for them. An ideal would be attained by them in his nomination; a recognition would be given them in such a standard bearer. It would supplement the "safety and saneness" sought in the nomination of Judge Parker, with a certain touch of the popular which would appeal to the heart beats of the people.

No touch of Wall Street would be on him; he boss could claim him as his own.

TIME FOR A CHANGE.

Republican Party Has Been in Power Long Enough.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Whom shall we vote for? Which is the best man? Which is the safest and has the coolest head? The American people have an interesting study before them. Here are two good men, yet there seems to be a great difference in their composition.

The Republicans have been in power about eight years. They came in during hard times that were almost unusual, and that have a chronic habit of coming once in ten or twelve years. They are about due again. I hope they will skip us this time. They came as they will come again, no matter who is President. The times had to become better because they could not have been much worse—here and in Europe also.

Sometimes a change, even a change of air and scenery, is beneficial. It is bad policy to permit one party to remain in power too long. They think that they own the whole earth.

Let the ship have a new commander and a safe and reliable one. CITIZEN.

Rights of Tenants in Flats.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some weeks ago there was discussion in your valuable paper concerning "rights of tenants in flats." Over ten days ago a fire occurred on the same floor we live on, and firemen broke in our door, utterly shattering both locks. Our agent refused to put a lock on said door until after the insurance people had settled the fire loss. At our own expense we put a padlock on the door, but wrote again to the agent to repair the door and put a proper lock on the same. Thieves got in and took considerable silver, clothing, &c. Can any one tell us who would be responsible for articles stolen? Is there no law compelling landlords to put a lock on an outside door of a flat? Have poor tenants no protection?

M. P.s Ate 106,520 Meals.

From The London Pall Mall Gazette.

A hundred and fifty-one breakfasts is how the story of the twenty-five hours' outing of the House of Commons is written in the accounts of the Kitchen Committee. The catering in the House is much improved, and consequently is better patronized. During the present session up to the 4th, on July 25, when the accounts were made up, 106,520 meals have been served. Besides the breakfasts, these include 25,00 lunches, 25,000 dinners, 250 suppers, 18,000 teas, and 5,000 stand-up meals at the bars.

FOR BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Bronze Doors by French Shown at the John Williams Foundry.

Three double doors of bronze with six figures in low relief by Daniel C. French are on exhibition at the John Williams Foundry, Eleventh Avenue and Twenty-seventh Street. They are the long-awaited doors for Boston's Public Library on Copley Square. Each of the six wings is eleven feet high and six broad; those for the central portal indeed a trifle higher and broader; and each has been cast in a single piece. They have been placed as they will appear in Boston. Notwithstanding that each weighs between 1,350 and 1,450 pounds they swing easily on their hinges, while they meet exactly when closed, showing that the molds of sand in which they were cast must have been very carefully measured and handled.

Seen through the mingled gaslight, sunlight, and forgelight of the foundry, where the smoke from red-hot crucibles and open hearths adds a tawny tint to the dust-laden air, these reliefs reveal only a portion of their beauty, for in Boston they will have architectural background which will set off the bronze with a harmony of tones that no temporary shop frame can imitate. But the reliefs are so interesting that this will scarcely be felt. Here are great doors not more than four inches thick in those parts of the figures highest in relief and in other places but a half-inch. In each case their decoration is a single figure the size of life, floating unsupported like the figures one sees painted on the walls of Pompeian villas. Over each, on a classic tablet wreathed with garlands of flower and leaf, stands the idea which the allegorical figure represents, and those ideas, running from left to right, are as follows: Music, Poetry, Knowledge, Wisdom, Truth, and Romance or Inspiration.

Romance is a nymph with three-quarters face, whose flowing robes reveal one shoulder and a foot; she holds on high in her left a sword and crown, and in her right a mask, while below her feet is the lettering: "A romance to rede and drive the night away, for methought it better play than either at chesse or tables." Truth soars also without cloud or mountain peak to rest the bit of foot that shows below her voluminous drapery. This has slipped to her waist, and she turns a full face as she raises high a hand glass in her right and a globe in her left. Her quotation runs: "Truth is the strength and the kingdom and the power and the majesty of all ages."

In her figured, embroidered robe the muse of Wisdom floats along with a caduceus in her right hand, the two snakes meeting over a sun-disk, from which rays of light stream out. In her left she holds aloft a goblet covered with a napkin, and her "wise word" is after this fashion: "There is wisdom and spirit subtil clear and loving what is good, pure, steadfast." This is one of the wings of the central portal, and the other wing shows Knowledge as a man, his robe girt round his body below the arms, and one leg seen through the drapery. He is an elderly genius compared with the nymphs on the other panels. On his left shoulder he balances a big volume, and on his right hand, thrust almost straight upward, he displays a sphere and ring, as if to indicate the planet Uranus. His motto reads: "By knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches."

The remaining door shows Poetry and Music, both as floating nymphs in delicately wrought draperies. Poetry raises an antique lamp of two wicks, the smoke from which describes graceful curves. The left hand is also raised, but holds nothing; perhaps the nymph has set free the two birds that fly above. Her text is: "True poetry is like loadstone which both attracts the needle and supplies it with magnetic power." Music leans the lyre against her hip, holding it in place with the left hand, and in her right lifts high up a plectrum, with which she has been striking the sounding wire, and here's the legend: "Such sweet compulsion doth in music lie, to call the daughters of necessity and keep unsteady Nature to her law."

It is very notable as a departure from bronze doors of this kind that each wing is not divided into compartments; nor is there a border. The whole door is treated as an unbroken canvas on which the figure is painted in relief. Not even where two wings meet to form the closed door is there so much as a beading. The figures are conventionalized by the similarity of their pose, by their equal size and the swing of their draperies, also by the repetition of the six tablets overhead bearing their names and the six fields of lettering below their feet. But what will interest lovers of sculpture most is the skill shown in foreshortening the faces and figures, giving the semblance of the round to things in very low relief, and passing from the merest indication of a feature, a lock of hair, a fold of garment, to a saliency that only seems the round because of the art with which the sculptor has managed the delicate gradations.

Great refinement and great sweetness will be found in these figures, and a very even handling throughout. It is difficult to have favorites; perhaps Music has the greatest portion of grace, the most attractive management of draperies. As a rule these doors will be seen open, and thus the light from without will fall advantageously on the low reliefs, bringing them out through high light and shadow. They will form a very graceful and charming greeting to those who enter the library from Copley Square. When the groups by Saint Gaudens for the low pedestals in front of the portal shall have been placed the Public Library will reach a state that may fairly be called finished. These fine doors are a very important step toward the long-deferred goal.

Taxometers on Paris Cabs.

From The London Telegraph.

PARIS, Aug. 25.—Taxometers appeared at last to-day on several hundred cabs, which Parisians, whether they wanted to be driven anywhere or not, took for the pure joy of watching the machine at work, purchasing previously the half-penny fall guide and instructions now hawked on the boulevards. Like everybody else, I hailed an open victoria, with a red flag, which was immediately struck, and gazed on the clock face, in which figures appeared rapidly running up. "This thing is going very fast," I observed to the cabby; "are you did not overwind it this morning?" "It goes fast because my horse goes fast," he replied. When it had reached a franc I stopped the cab. "Of course you do not expect a tip with the franc?" He thought that was a great joke. He conceded five sous would be a sufficient pourbotre for the present. "Suppose we try the machine by the hour," he suggested. The figures began running up again rapidly. When an hour had elapsed the sum due was 2f. 50c. A ten sous tip made it three francs. Under the old system the total charge, including the tip, would have been 2f. 50c. "This is a splendid system," I remarked to the cabman, and he agreed. "The taxometer system, tempered by tips, is the right thing." That was his decided opinion. "No more driving mean skinflints from one end of Paris to the other for 1f. 50c. and six sous pourboire." "Have you had to do that often?" I asked. "Occasionally, and the fare had a piece of my mind every time, I can tell you." "No more pieces of your mind for the fare now with the taxometer," I said, and left him explaining the machine to a large crowd, including a small boy, who wanted to know whether the red flag of freedom denoted an Anarchist cab.

A DEMOCRATIC PLANK IN REPUBLICAN TEXT BOOK.

St. Louis Utterance on Reciprocity Appropriated for Republican Uses.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I obtained yesterday a copy of the Republican campaign textbook, and at once turned to that part devoted to reciprocity, as that is a burning question in Massachusetts, and I was curious to see how the subject was treated. I found that the position is taken, as I expected, in favor of reciprocity with Canada in non-competitive products only. It is stated that reciprocity treaties should be confined chiefly to tropical and sub-tropical products. Further on, however, a faint intimation is thrown out that a reciprocity treaty might be made with Canada, provided it could be done without harm to our productions at home. Then follows, on Page 47, this interesting sentence:

"On this question the Republican [sic] platform of 1904 says: 'We favor liberal trade arrangements with Canada and with peoples of other countries where they can be entered into with benefit to American agriculture, manufactures, mining, or commerce.'"

The only comment I care to make on the above is that it is not taken from the Republican National platform, but on the contrary is the plank adopted by the Democratic National Convention at St. Louis, of which the part relating to Canada was written and presented to the Resolutions Committee by the undersigned.

Imitation is said to be the sincerest form of flattery, and our party has the right to feel flattered at this appropriation of one of its most important planks by the Republican Campaign Committee, even though due acknowledgment is not given.

JAPS TAUGHT BY BRITISHERS.

One Explanation of Their Success in Manchuria.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In connection with the interview with Prof. John Perry of the Royal College of Science, in London, which you publish to-day, it may be of interest to mention that the first professorial chairs in engineering, physics, electricity, and chemistry at the University of Tokio were held by four Britishers, namely, Profs. Ewing, Ayrton, Perry, and Divers.

The students of these men are helping materially to win the battles in Manchuria, for modern warfare is essentially a matter of scientific and engineering skill.

Park Statues Neglected.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to call the attention of the public to the condition of the Park statuary in this city.

Any one who will take the trouble to inspect will find the statues in our Central Park in such a state of neglect as to cause one to inquire whether they were ever meant for works of art. They are bespattered and besmeared with mud and dirt, and bear across their entire lengths streaks of yellow which cause strangers to leave the Park with mingled feelings of disgust and pity for the great City of New York, that is too poor or too unwilling to properly care for its works of art.

I called the attention of Commissioner Pallas to this state of affairs, and he answered that later in the season some steps would be taken to remedy this. That was some months ago, and as yet nothing has been done, and the statues continue to rust and to decay, as it were. Why doesn't the Municipal Art Society take action?

Few French Millionaires.

From The London Globe.

The French Ministry of Finance has just published the statistics of the wills proved in France in 1903, and from this it is evident that the number of very rich people in the country has been grossly exaggerated. Last year only 497 wills, leaving more than 1,000,000 francs, or £40,000, were proved, and of these only 124 exceeded 2,000,000 francs, or £80,000. There were only 8 fortunes of over 10,000,000 francs, or £400,000, and the highest of all was of the exceptional value of £2,000,000. It is evident, then, that the real millionaires in France are very few, but it should be noted that rich men in France marry rich wives, so that a family may be much more wealthy than the will of either father or mother would imply. But the fact remains that the Frenchman is too wise to be given over to the hunger for gold, and that the whole joy of living for him is not centred in piling up dollars, as it seems to be across the Atlantic. He is satisfied with thousands of francs, and with the appearance rather than the actuality of wealth. He likes to retire and live at his ease, and therein he follows the dictates of the old-world philosophy.

Plays King Edward Sees.

William Archer, in the course of an article in The London World, speaks as follows of King Edward VII.'s interest in the theatre:

"A noteworthy, though not a novel, feature of the past year was the close interest with which the King followed the movement of things theatrical. Scarcely any production of importance escaped his Majesty's notice. His visits to the theatre—not counting the Opera and the musical-comedy houses—numbered fourteen in all. He saw 'Cousin Kate,' 'Letty,' 'Richard III.,' 'Little Mary,' 'Mrs. Gorringe's Necklace,' 'Billy's Little Love Affair,' 'The Cricket on the Hearth,' 'The Darling of the Gods,' 'The Duke of Killikrankie,' 'A Queen's Romance,' 'Joseph Entangled,' 'The Arm of the Law,' 'Miss Elizabeth's Prisoner,' and 'Saturday to Monday.' It may fairly be said that, side-shows apart, he missed nothing of any note, except 'The Climbers,' 'The Rich Mrs. Repton,' and 'The Fairy's Dilemma.' Managers certainly cannot complain of any lack of encouragement from King Edward VII."

TO THE GAME COCK OF THE EAST.

(IN RED WINE; NO HEEL TAPS.)

Little Brownie, there's no "whiter" man than you;
You have "done" the Bear—"good, hard, and plenty," too.
You are yellow, but the color's all outside;
You have shown it by the way you fought and died,
And within you're all clear grit and soul and man.

You have played war's game, and won it by sheer pluck;
So, in bumpers, we will drink you love and luck;
First, here's "Banzai!" to the fighting host;
Then, here's "How!" Mikado—(that's our soldiers' toast);
And here's "hand to hand across the sea"

SUBWAY TRAINS READY FOR 10,000 AN HOUR

Twenty School Trains Were Running Up and Down Yesterday.

ALL MOVING LIKE CLOCKWORK

Third Rail Covered—Telephones in Stations and Signals in Perfect Order—Employes Learning Rapidly.

If there had been a strike tie-up of the elevated lines in Manhattan to-day the rapid transit subway before nightfall could have handled something like 10,000 passengers an hour.

Although neither the Interborough Rapid Transit Company's officials nor the city authorities chose a hasty opening of the tunnel road in preference to a formal beginning of operation after every detail of the work was completed, an emergency would have found the underground trains ready for immediate service, despite a few unfinished jobs along the line, a few half-decorated stations, and the sight of an occasional storage yard not cleared for the aesthetic view of a critical public.

Not a minute has been wasted by the training crews. Twenty underground trains were running up and down from the City Hall loop station to Ninety-sixth Street and Broadway all day yesterday. On each train were from twenty to fifty men, learning now to be motormen or guards, or conductors. A six-car train carried fifty men, each platform being occupied by eight or more, who took turns wrestling with the door levers, pulling the signal bellcords, shouting station numbers to imaginary passengers, and listening to the instructions of a competent leader standing in the centre of the group.

The trains were of all lengths from two cars to six. At times they ran on a five-minute headway, but there were lapses on account of switching operations at Ninety-sixth Street or tests at other points. It is estimated by the officials that they could establish a three-minute headway service on less than a day's notice. That would mean about 500 passengers (in a six-car train) every three minutes, or nearly 10,000 passengers an hour. Some of the officials think they could do even better.

Besides the school trains that run regularly, their front platforms filled with apprentice motormen under experienced guidance, hundreds of cars are stored along the line wherever there is room for them. On the wide platforms of the Ninety-sixth Street station yesterday there were assembled several hundred men. As a train stopped at the end of its northward run one crew was transferred for another, and so during the day and far into the night new hands were continually being instructed in their duties.

Most of the new men were former railway employes of one grade or another, some of them having worked here and some having come from other cities. A minority consisted of entirely green hands, but before night most of these had joined the ranks of the knowing.

"They learn fast enough," said one of the trainers. "The newest, of course, are being whipped in as guards, and their duties are not very difficult. An intelligent fellow can learn the job in two or three trips without trouble."

About the greenest applicant that the trainers found was one who was put aboard a train up town at noon. He was stationed in a group on the platform between the last two cars. At each stop, during his first run, when his instructor shouted "All ready!" the new man put his hands to his mouth and shouted forward, "All ready there; go ahead!"

"Hey, you!" the instructor yelled; "pull the bell!"

The new man hesitated a moment, looked all about him, and finally grasped the idea that he was to jerk the cord over his head. After the trip was over he was as quick as any of them, shouting the names of stations and handling the cord as if he had been a guard all his days.

A policeman stood guard at the Ninety-sixth Street station entrance, and employes of the company were on hand to see that those who entered were applicants for jobs. To any one on a train everything appeared to be in perfect shape, and the only delays to be noticed were attendant on the switching about Ninety-sixth Street. Here there seemed to be some confusion, but it was explained that the operatives were instructed to take their time in order to test every combination of switches. The two-car trains were shifted to the end of four cars; those with six were cut up and sent off in small sections. All kinds of combinations were made, so as to give the trackmen a chance to study every condition they might be called upon to face in the course of regular operation.

A return journey from the loop station to Ninety-sixth Street served to prove beyond doubt that the subway was no longer a matter of the future. Having entered the loop station with the necessary credentials for a "deadhead" ride, a passenger was perplexed by a long bell-ringing that echoed through the prettily ornamented station.

"What's that?" he asked.

"Telephone," was the response of a man who seemed to know all the tunnel matters. "The phones are in operation in every ticket office this afternoon."

A man in the office answered the ring. Just then, at the end of the station toward the Post Office, two red lights against the wall suddenly flashed green.

"Clear track," remarked the man who knew, and from the curve at the other end of the station a six-car train, announced by two brilliant red lights, swung alongside the platform.

The eight or more guards on each platform shouted "City Hall Station" in unison. There was a rattling of vestibuled doors, a crash as they closed again, a shout of "Brooklyn Bridge next," and the trip up town had begun.

The signal system, the third-rail protection, the lack of noise, the elegance of the stations, and the absence of jarring in the heavy cars were the features that most impressed the passenger. Barring the rough edges, such as portions of uncompleted station work, periodic heaps of building materials stored on platforms, and an occasional stretch of uncovered third rail, the tunnel looked as spick and span as a new house, and while there was some drifting dust owing to the work still in progress, it was evident that one of the traits of the completed subway would be cleanliness.

For the trial trains the middle or express tracks are being used, so as to leave the outside or local tracks free for the laborers still moving to and fro. From the loop up to Astor Place the speed is not very fast—not more than ten or fifteen miles an hour. In Fourth Avenue it increases a bit, and under Broadway, after the turn from Forty-second Street, the motormen instructors show their charges how to go at a clip of twenty-five miles, or sometimes even thirty, an hour.

Looking out of a front car window on any of the trains one sees at intervals the signal posts, each of which carries two lights. The frequency of these signals is controlled automatically. If they show green the train may go ahead at full speed. If they are red it means that the train ahead has not yet passed the second signal in front, and the motorman behind must wait until the green flashes.

The protection for the electric third rail is something new in railroading. Over the deadly steel, supported by metal brackets, is a flat wooden guard—a board about four inches in breadth. In order to touch the live rail one must reach it from the sides or below. He cannot fall across it from above.

THE LUCK OF GERTRUDE.

Fell Into a Clothesline Life Net and Wasn't Scratched.

Gertrude Wehrback, six years old, of 352 Congress Street, Jersey City, fell out of a window on the third floor of her house yesterday. Just before the accident Mrs. Wehrback had hung several sheets to dry from one of the windows. The bottom of one of these sheets had been carried by the wind to a parallel line stretched from another window and wound about it. It formed a cradle, into which the girl fell. She carried both clotheslines and sheets to the ground with her, and the janitor, who was in the yard, had considerable difficulty in unwrapping her.

"Are you hurt?" he asked anxiously.

"I don't know," said the child; "wait till I ask mamma."

Mrs. Wehrback carried Gertrude upstairs. A careful examination showed that she had not received even a scratch.

HUGH KIDNAPPED HIMSELF.

Night's Lodging in the Doghouse Caused Much Anxiety.

Hugh Fraleigh, the seven-year-old son of Conrad Fraleigh of 1 Sherman Avenue, Richmond Hill, L. I., and Ponto, a bull terrier, who occupies an apartment in the back yard at the same address, swapped residences on Monday night.

Ponto started out with the police on Monday night to look for the tow-headed darling of the Fraleigh household, who had been kidnapped, according to the most trustworthy reports that could be obtained from his companions in Richmond Hill. Oh, yes, they averred, they had seen a veiled woman, dressed in black, who rode up the street in a cab drawn by a spotted horse, snatch up little Hugh and carry him off.

The family told the police, and Ponto, who was the boy's constant companion, was pressed into service as a bloodhound to follow his tracks. The police and Ponto returned late, and on account of his faithful services, the bull terrier was allowed to sleep in the house. Yesterday morning he took a canine fancy to visit his abode in the back yard, and as he poked his nose into the front door, he got a shock when it came into contact with Hugh's tow head. Ponto barked his delight in no uncertain tones, and when the family piled out into the yard to learn the occasion for this unusual noise, Hugh extricated himself by degrees from the dog house, and the family got its shock. Later the shock was communicated to Hugh by a stern parent, who had been sitting up all night bemoaning the fate of his son and heir in the hands of the veiled adventuress in black, and waiting for the demand for ransom.

Little Tessie Underhill started the story about the woman and the cab with the spotted horse, and she told the Fraleighs in detail how the bad woman had coaxed little Hugh away with a big stick of candy. The fact was that the lad had wandered over to Distler Park, where a picnic was being held, and while the people there were filling him up with soda pop and popcorn Hugh forgot all about his home in Richmond Hill until it was dark. He knew what would be in store for him if he went home at that time, so after turning the matter over in his mind and finding Ponto's abode deserted, Hugh crawled in and was soon asleep.

Hugh didn't gain much by staying out all night. He merely delayed the denouement by about twelve hours.

BANG! CRASH! BIG CROWD.

Converging Streams of Humanity Excited by a Kitten's Death.

Bang! went a revolver on Park Row yesterday afternoon.

Simultaneously there was an explosion of glass in a window over the telephone operators in the switchboard room of the Astor House and a commotion at the spot where the shot had been fired.

Bullet-stung Astor House communicated the occurrence to Broadway; Park Row met oncoming Broadway and also essayed an explanation. There was a wild rush in quest of the facts of the case. Presently a vast crowd gathered around Patrolman Connorton of the Oak Street Station. He stood with a revolver over the body of a little kitten that had inadvertently "thrown a fit."

"What you all worryin' about?" he demanded. "It's dead, all right!"

WILHELM DER GROSSE HERE.

Omaha Man Jumped Overboard in the North Sea—Many Arrivals.

The steamship Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse arrived in port yesterday morning after a remarkably good passage, on which she averaged 22.30 knots. Practically all of her passengers were Americans returning from Summer trips abroad. There were 785 of them in the cabins.

While the vessel was in the North Sea Walter Sigmund, a steerage passenger and an American citizen, became mentally deranged and jumped overboard. His body was not recovered. He lived in Omaha, and was thirty-one years old.

The passengers on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse included Mr. and Mrs. D. V. Arthur, W. W. Thomas, American Minister to Sweden, and Field Marshal Lieut. Gustav Ratzenhofer.

IN THE SHOPS.

Very pretty things are to be found in plaid silks for Winter waists. There are different combinations of blue and green with lines of red and yellow running through them, as well as red plaids. There is the greatest variety in the taffeta, which costs $1 a yard, but there are also pretty designs in the loudines, which are softer and more serviceable for a waist for general wear, and which cost 75 cents a yard. The silks are twenty inches wide, four yards for a waist.

There has been a reaction in furniture, as there is apt to be in everything when extreme styles have been in vogue. Nothing could be more severe than the heavy wooden mission furniture, and new pieces of furniture which are coming out this Fall are upholstered from top to bottom, none of the framework, only the feet, visible. This does not mean that the mission is going out, but that the other is to reinforce it. A big, soft, tufted Davenport divan with rather low arms and back will cost $85. An even larger Davenport, with higher back and arms, this made on a wire frame, costs $110. They are delightfully comfortable, the most luxurious articles that have been seen for some time. A Colonial piece has a mahogany frame, is on the order of the big old-time sofas which were covered when they were previously in vogue with black haircloth, and this will cost $125. It is smooth-covered, not tufted, and not soft like the other pieces.

***

A big stuffed arm chair to match the Davenports will cost $45. These are all covered with a green denim which can be retained for an outer covering in rooms simply furnished. Supposedly, however, the pieces will be recovered to suit the furniture with which they will be placed, and they may cost any price, according to the quality of the covering. A full line of this stuffed furniture will be in before long. It makes for comfort and also for labor for the housewife.

***

A little steamer-chair head pillow with "Auf Wiedersehen" upon it in white, the cover of dark green, costs $1. These pillows are not only useful for the steamer. The girl frequently likes her steamer chair, which has many pleasant associations for her, in her room, and the pillow does good service through the Winter.

***

A small girl and boy doll are dressed to match in sailor suits fancifully trimmed, with gold anchors, sashes, and caps, and little white slippers on the small feet. The sailor lad has brown and the sailor lassie golden curls.

***

Souvenir pictures have been used this Summer in a fashion which makes them possible gifts. They are to be found upon the backs of playing cards, which are really welcome to many men and women, while the usual souvenir articles—well, the less said about them the better. In Portland, Me., which is the gateway to the whole Pine Tree State, many of the very pretty views of the harbor and islands were to be found upon the backs of playing cards. They cost a fancy price, to be sure, 75 cents a pack, but they were much better worth while than other things which soon go to decorate the family ash barrels. The omnipresent Flatiron Building has come out on playing cards in New York. These, too, cost rather more than the average good quality card, but they are not beyond thought, being only 50 cents a pack.

***

Two bronze cigars, realistically designed, and with a cigarette lying across them, make a paper weight for the man's writing desk.

***

Beautiful clocks are to be found in the shape of lyres. One of these is in ebony decorated with dark gold, and another is in a lighter polished wood showing the grain. The clock face, which is round, is sometimes in the upper and again in the lower part of the lyre.

***

One of the most exquisitely beautiful of screens is a large one of Japanese work with four folds. A peacock with an enormous and exquisitely beautiful tail covers three folds of the screen, each feather and part of a feather, looking as if it was real, standing out distinctly upon the black background, but little of which is to be seen. On the fourth fold of the screen, where a few feathers of the expanded tail rest, is the quieter figure of the peahen.

WOMEN OF THE STAGE SPEAK FOR PARKER

Set the Two-Minute Limit and Keep to It Well.

ALL WISH THEY COULD VOTE

Miss Amelia Stone Sure She Doesn't Want a King Ruling America—Mr. Towne Talks.

The first regular meeting of the first, and so far the only, Theatrical Women's Parker Club was held yesterday afternoon at the Lyric Theatre, on Forty-second Street. Long-winded masculine campaign speakers ought to have been present to get points. Only one of the women's speeches was five minutes long, and if Miss Amelia Stone had not missed her place in her notes her remarks would not have exceeded the two-minute limit of her club confrères, despite the calumnies upon the feminine tongue.

There was nothing theatrical about the meeting except its setting, the scenery of "The Royal Chef," and the remark of a facetious individual that the meeting was well cooked. This, it was explained, was a joke. In general character the gathering resembled a religious experience meeting. The actresses gave their reasons for approving of the Democratic candidate in a heart-to-heart fashion, without tiresome statistics, while the men speakers told how much they thought of the theatrical profession in general, and the members of the Theatrical Women's Parker Club in particular, with a few other remarks about the good old Jeffersonian Democracy.

Miss Bertha Blake, the organizer of the club, was the first woman speaker called upon for remarks by the presiding officer, her sister, Nina Blake.

"I have been to call upon Judge Parker," said Miss Blake, who was soberly dressed in black, "and he was most courteous. Any one who could be so courteous to ladies as he was would make a good President. I would give him my vote if I had one."

Then as the audience listened open-eared for more she sat down.

"I don't know very much about politics," said Miss Amelia Stone, who occupied a central position on the platform. "I don't know enough to be sure whether I am a Democrat or a Republican, but I do think that every man who has convictions ought to vote. If the men don't vote—" There she lost her place in her notes, laughed prettily, and the audience laughed with her. "If men didn't vote," she continued, getting her bearings again, "we wouldn't have a President; we should have a King, and some one has told me that if Parker isn't elected we shall have a King anyway."

Miss Helen Chester was on her feet before her name was called. Her speech was the shortest of all.

"I have known Judge Parker previously," she said, "so I know that he will make a good President."

David Lewis of "The Royal Chef" company, the opening speaker, told a story about a voting experience of his when he had persuaded an old friend to go home with him at his expense to vote. "Well," he said, "when we had both voted I clapped my friend on the shoulder, saying: 'I do feel better now I have voted for McKinley!' 'McKinley!' exclaimed my friend. 'Why, I voted for Bryan!' And I spent $27 to cancel my own vote."

Charles A. Towne was the chief speaker of the afternoon. Most of the scheduled speakers were noticeable for their absence. Mr. Towne told the assembled gathering how much he and they had in common, because at one time all actors were considered vagabonds and all politicians knaves. "Now," he said, "the actors work for high art and the politicians are statesmen. I suppose I am a statesman, for I am going to Tammany Hall to-night," he proclaimed.

Two bona fide Congressmen who were present wound up the meeting. One was Mr. Slayden of Texas and the other Mr. Dinsmore of Arkansas. Mr. Slayden told the audience that at the caucus of the House of Representatives was made up of members like theirs he would never miss a meeting and neither would his handsome bachelor friend Dinsmore.

"Mr. Dinsmore is a member of the Runaway Company," he added as the latter slipped hurriedly out into the corridor. He returned, however, in response to calls of "Dinsmore! Dinsmore!" and silvery peals of feminine laughter, to say that he was a tenderfoot, not accustomed to a bubbling cauldron like New York. He told the women he knew they would succeed in the work they had undertaken, and elect the right man, so that the whole country should not become a seething cauldron like New York. But the "heritage of the fathers" would be preserved.

As the applause died away the presiding officer was heard to say she hoped that the actors present would be influenced by the meeting to exercise their God-given right of franchise before the election, and knew it the speakers had drifted out of sight and the meeting was closed. It had begun promptly at 2 and was over before 3.

KING EDWARD HAD TO WALK.

Franz Josef Disliked Elevators—Marie Cahill Touches Elbows with Royalty.

Miss Marie Cahill got home on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse yesterday. She is to appear this season as a leading member of the Lew Fields company at the Lew Fields Theatre. With her comes her husband, Daniel V. Arthur. They traveled all over Europe, spending most of their time at Marienbad, Austria. They were there when the King of England met Emperor Franz Josef of Austria.

"I was standing near them when they met," Miss Cahill said yesterday, talking of the two monarchs. "They met in Weimar's Hotel. I saw King Edward motion the Austrian Emperor to the elevator and heard Franz Josef say: 'No, I don't care for those new-fangled affairs; let's walk.' And the stout King of England had to puff his way up the stairs.

"The first time I saw King Edward I was almost struck dumb with surprise. He wore a blood-red linen shirt, a light-blue satin tie and vest, brown coat and white stripes at least an inch and a half wide. And the next day the only difference was that the stripes were red and dark blue.

"And I met him, too—accidentally—in a linen shop. I was buying a dozen handkerchiefs for my husband when he came in with the British Ambassador to Austria. I had bought the very handkerchiefs they wanted, as it happened, and the Ambassador asked me to let him have some of them. Then he introduced me to the 'Duke of Cornwall'—that's the name the King went under."

MARDI GRAS AT CONEY.

Big Three-Day Festival Planned—Everybody to be in It.

At a meeting of Coney Island Business and amusement men held yesterday in the Concourse Park Hotel plans were formulated to celebrate by a three-day "Mardi Gras," beginning on Sept. 21, the semi-centennial, it is said, of Coney's settlement as a pleasure resort. The plans devised provide for a carnival bigger and more varied in character than Coney has ever engaged in.

On Tuesday, Sept. 20, the eve of the first day of the fete, a "king" and "queen" will arrive at Coney. They will be met by a Citizens' Committee, led by the island's bands, and municipal and State authorities who will turn over to the mythical potentates mythical keys of the island. The festivities will really begin with this preliminary ceremony, the first step of a gay four days' the island of the king and queen, preceded by bands and citizens, accompanied by red fire and met by salutes and fireworks, showers of confetti, and variegated streamers. The programme for the next afternoon provides for free pony races on the beach, a fifteen-mile yacht race, swimming contests of many kinds, games of water-polo, a sham battle, canoe races, and life-saving exhibitions.

On the evening of Wednesday, Sept. 21, the semi-centennial anniversary, the King and Queen will be publicly crowned. After the coronation Coney will offer the first of three gala Mardi Gras night pageants. In these parades will be all of the principal features of the island's multiple attractions, including all of the strange peoples and animal exhibits of the different parks, and all of the island's civic and amusement interests.

SCHOOL PUPILS LIKELY.

Registration for Monday's Opening Well Under Way.

Superintendent Maxwell declared yesterday that no child of six years or over would be denied admission to a school of some kind at the opening next Monday. Mr. Snyder, the building superintendent of the Board of Education, took an optimistic view of the ability of his department to provide seating for the greater number of new pupils this year, declaring that he had had no difficulty in getting bids for work on the new buildings this year, despite the strikes, while a year ago it was impossible to get bids on rush work. Reports are received daily, Mr. Snyder said, on the progress of all new work. The situation yesterday was about the same as it was in the middle of last week, when about a dozen buildings were tied up.

According to Mr. Maxwell, the registration as of September 1 can be approximated by adding 50,000 to the May registration, which showed 529,834 full-time pupils and 75,396 part-time pupils, a total of 605,230. The estimate of this year, therefore, will show a registration of about 655,000 pupils of various grades.

In preparation for the opening of the public schools on Monday, the principal heads of departments and clerks in the various schools will be on duty this week to register new pupils, and to transfer pupils already enrolled. The first meeting of the associate superintendents was held yesterday, and plans were discussed for taking care of the part-time pupils, who, on account of the building strikes, may number three times the 35,000 first estimated. Under the new rules for the registration of pupils which will be put in force this year, principals must require that the parent or guardian of a child shall produce a certificate from the Department of Health, a passport, a baptismal certificate, or other satisfactory evidence of the date of birth. Should such evidence not be immediately available, the child, if apparently over six years of age, will be admitted on condition that the necessary record of birth be subsequently produced.

Children desiring to be transferred from one school to another are required to secure a transfer card from the school at which they were in attendance. Accompanying such transfer cards must be the written or personal request of parent or guardian, stating the reasons for asking such change. The hours of registration will be from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M. each day, except Friday, when registration will cease at noon.

STATE RAISES $900,000.

Taxation Levy Yields $150,000 More Than Legislature Expected.

ALBANY, Sept. 6.—The State Board of Equalization met to-day and adopted the equalization table for the coming State tax year. On this table will be assessed the State tax of 13-100 of a mill to be levied. This will raise the sum of $900,000. The Legislature expected to raise but $750,000. The greater sum will be realized because of the increase of assessed valuations. The State Board of Tax Commissioners in its report to the board says:

The assessed value of all property liable locally to State taxation, as returned by the Boards of Supervisors of the various counties for the year 1903 is as follows:

Real estate, $6,740,509,658; personal property, $819,236,165; less amount not liable locally for State purposes, $122,236,996. Total, $7,446,476,-127.

An increase over 1902 in real estate of $1,451,-746,079; in personal estate, $140,229,930. Total increase, $1,591,976,009.

This increase of nearly 27½ per cent. in real estate was made chiefly in Greater New York and Erie County, and the equalization will add to the assessed valuation of many counties heretofore reduced.

The total equalized value of real and personal estate in New York and neighboring counties:

Counties.	1903.	1904.
Kings	$767,627,941	$901,915,214
New York	2,980,231,345	4,021,449,491
Queens	101,854,925	134,552,988
Richmond	48,078,500	46,626,894
Westchester	155,909,910	186,287,580

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Newport, Far Rockaway, and Manchester-by-the-Sea have been much interested in horse shows this week, and, although there were many returning from the week-end house parties, the general flitting from the seaside resorts will not take place until next week. In the suburban watering places society will linger until after Thanksgiving.

The county fairs are beginning, and in each locality attract much attention from resident society. At the Richmond County Fair, in West New Brighton, there was quite a representation of well-known people, including Mr. and Mrs. H. Alexandre, the Misses Cameron, J. R. Willmerding, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Bonner, and others.

THE NEWS OF NEWPORT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Sept. 6.—Two large entertainments were on the social programme to-night, a dinner by Mrs. William B. Leeds, followed by a vaudeville entertainment and a dinner by Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, followed by a cotillion. Mrs. Leeds arranged her programme to accommodate Mrs. Fish, so that her guests could go later to Mrs. Fish's dance. Mrs. Leeds entertained fifty guests at Fairlawn. The vaudeville programme included Lafayette in feats of magic, Marshall P. Wilder, and Mme. Ameta, a mirror dancer.

Mrs. Fish entertained 150 guests at dinner, and a large number came in from other dinners for the dancing. An elaborate decorative scheme was carried out in which only scarlet flowers were used, hence the name of "scarlet ball" which was given to the dance. In the main hall the most elaborate decorations were placed. About the wall were heavy strands of green entwined with scarlet flowers. One mammoth scarlet horseshoe twelve feet high served as a screen to hide the musicians and to hold the hundred or more little scarlet horseshoes which were used as favors in the cotillion. In the dining room were five round tables, each accommodating twenty persons, and each bearing a large sheaf of wheat. These sheaves were filled with scarlet flowers. Other tables were set on the piazza opening out of the dining room and inclosed with mirrors framed in scarlet flowers in such a way as to reflect the decorations of the adjoining room. The scarlet flowers amid the green garlands made a striking effect against the white Colonial decorations, which are a feature of Crossways.

Dinners were also given to-night by Mrs. Richard Gambrill, Mrs. Francis O. French, Mrs. George B. de Forest, Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Charles A. Childs, Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, and Mrs. George S. Scott. Mrs. Joseph F. Knapp gave a musicale at the Cliff cottages.

A FLIMSY LOVE PLOT IS "THE SPELLBINDER'S"

"Absolutely American Comedy" Artificial and Factitious.

HINGES ON ODOR OF ONION

Struggle of Honest Politician Lost to Sight in a Play That Is Flatly Impossible.

Needy dramatists in search of a plot have resorted to filmy and unsubstantial expedients to separate their true lovers; but in "The Spellbinder," at the Herald Square, Messrs. H. H. Winslow and Charles Dickson have reached the limit of flimsiness. Grace would have loved Howard, madly and eternally, except for—a breath!

To be sure, it was a potent breath—a veritable searchlight of a breath! The Spellbinder had eaten onions to cure a husky voice, got by much spelling of binds in the open air. And when he breathed out to Grace the long-pent secret of his heart, it made her start away and turn pale. In reality she was very fond of Howard, but he, seeing her leap from him like the frightened gazelle she was, concluded that she did not and always, always, could not love him, and so in turn he dissembled his own tender passion. False, fleeting Gracie, whom a breath could change! Foolish Howard for forgetting the onions!

Grace never told her grief, but tottered to the door, like patience abdicating her monument, and let concealment, like a worm in the bud, feed on her damask cheek. This was the climax of the first act, and the orchestra, taking up (as orchestras will) the tremulous flutter of the heroine's emotions, so onion-permeated and so tenderly played soft music. Truly the course of true love never was roughened by obstacle like this!

From the foot, lo! Hercules. And from that breath, behold "The Spellbinder." The programme calls it "an absolutely American comedy." Is it? Theatregoers of a quarter of a century back will recall many popular native plays in which artificial devices and transparent violations of nature and probability passed for fine strokes of the theatre. Frequenters of modern stock company houses may see these pieces revived to-day. We could name such plays if we had the time to paint the finger of scorn at things which were good of their time, and therefore venerable. But we venture to say that nothing so flimsy, so artificial, and so factitious ever passed for absolutely American, absolutely anything else except shallow and absurd. To-day, when we are accustomed to the sincere and finely realized comedy of the leading English playwrights, to say nothing of the very creditable work of a few Americans, such a play as "The Spellbinder" is little short of an insult to the intelligence of the playgoing public.

The subject of the play, it is true, is absolutely American, and a matter of vital importance to all patriots and lovers of true dramatic art—the struggles of an honest and high-minded politician against the cynical dishonesty of a party boss. All that is needed to make a true and moving comedy drama is to treat it sincerely and from the point of view of the life we all feel about us. It pleases the authors to treat it from the point of view of the stage, to trifler away a great opportunity in cheap devices for raising a laugh. But it does not please the public, and the sooner our playwrights and managers learn that it does not the better for all concerned.

There were several capable actors in the cast. Ralph Delmon needs only a possible part to prove his worth. At present he is shamefully wasted. Mr. Dickson, part culprit in writing the play, revealed at moments no little ability. Miss Townsend is not without charm and histrionic possibilities. But the less said about their present performances the better. No actor can redeem flat impossibility.

Children to See "The Little Princess."

A thousand children from the Hebrew Orphan Asylum and the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society will attend a special matinee of "The Little Princess" at the Harlem Opera House this afternoon, by courtesy of William Wood, manager of the show, and Alex Lichtenstein, proprietor of the house. The boys of both institutions will carry their musical instruments with them and render selections between the acts. This evening forty children from the Educational Alliance of East Broadway, who will render the play during the coming Winter, will witness the performance, and on Saturday afternoon the house will be occupied by children from the New York Juvenile Asylum, New York Catholic Protectory, and the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum.

No "Isle of Spice" Injunction.

Judge Lacombe, in the United States Circuit Court, yesterday, denied the application made last week of William J. Block for an injunction preventing Bertram C. Whitney from producing the "Broomstick Witches" and "The Isle of Spice" at the Majestic Theatre. The court held that Mr. Block had "failed to show that the scene in question was included in the dramatic composition for which he obtained copyright."

THIEF OF TIME HELD.

"Procrastination," Calls Court Clerk, and Right Man Is Produced.

"Procrastination," called out a wag of a clerk in the Adams Street Court yesterday, and a wag of a court officer, who understood, led forward one Thomas Morgan, no home.

"What is the prisoner charged with?" asked the court.

"Stealing ten alarm clocks from a store at 159 Myrtle Avenue."

"Thief of time, we will hold you for the Grand Jury," decided the court.

ANEURIN JONES DEAD.

Served as Superintendent of Parks in This City and Brooklyn.

Aneurin Jones, who had been a Superintendent of Parks in this city and in Brooklyn, died yesterday at Los Angeles, Cal., in his eightieth year. He was a Welshman by birth and a landscape architect by profession. His action in cutting down a number of handsome trees in Central Park in 1883 while he was Superintendent of the New York Park Department aroused public indignation, and there was a general demand for his resignation. He explained that he had the trees cut down to open a vista behind the Snake. He was removed from office in May, 1885.

Mr. Jones again came in for much criticism after his appointment as Superintendent of Brooklyn parks. By his order artists were forbidden to sketch in Prospect Park, as it was alleged that they trampled down the grass and otherwise injured the park. Mr. Jones continued making "vistas" by cutting down some of the finest trees in Prospect Park. Vigorous public protest was made by artists all over the country and his resignation was demanded by Park Commissioner Brower.

The climax to Mr. Jones's troubles came when he was appointed under the Van Wyck administration to the newly created office of chief engineer of boulevards and drives for the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens. Mr. Brower was serving as Park Commissioner. A disagreement arose between the two men over a gravel contract, and Jones was removed from office in October, 1899.

FOUR FAVORITES BEATEN

Headmaster and Waterside Were the Successful Choices.

PULSUS WON THE HANDICAP

Three-Year-Old, in Front All the Way, Was Easily First at the Sheepshead Bay Track.

Results only proved the ruffling element of the racing at the Sheepshead Bay track yesterday. Following the holiday crowd of Monday, the "regulars" and professional horsemen found much comfort in the reduced attendance and the cool and clear weather, and with a fast track and fairly well-balanced fields in the six races of the programme the afternoon furnished everything that racegoers could desire except successful favorites. Four post choices were beaten, and to make the rout of the form followers as exasperating as possible, one of the two favorites that did get to the winning post first was at a price simply prohibitive. This was Headmaster (formerly Semper Idem) in the race for the gentlemen riders' steeplechase, the Oakdale Cup, for which only two horses ran, two others of the field promised being withdrawn. As Headmaster was at 3 to 1 on, few even of the steeplechase plungers cared to back him, and Headmaster, in effect, ran for the bookmakers, and, romping over his fences in front all the way, won by the length of the stretch from Cock Robin, the racing coming as near being ridiculous as any jumping contest of the year.

The one other successful favorite was J. E Madden's Waterside, in the race for the Autumn Stakes, six furlongs down the Futurity straight, for which five two-year-olds ran. Because of Waterside's good performance when he beat Lady Amelia and a big field in a handicap Saturday, the Madden colt always was at a short price, starting at 13 to 10, with the Western colt Jack Lory the second choice. Waterside, ridden by O'Neill, broke in front and went straight on, leading every stride of the distance and being under a pull when Pasadena went after him in the stretch. As soon as Pasadena made his move, however, O'Neill let down the Waterless colt, and the favorite came away without effort and won handily by a length, while Pasadena, ridden out, was second, a length and a half before Jack Lory, third.

The first of three long-chance winners in the last three races was Fred Gebhard's Pulsus, the three-year-old colt that for a time early in the season figured as a factor in the big Spring handicaps. Major Daingerfield was the top weight of the five that ran, Eugenia Burch being withdrawn, and in the betting Cloverland and Major Daingerfield were the two best backed, Cloverland starting favorite at 6 to 5. Pulsus was backed consistently by his stable following, however, and went to the post at odds of about 5 to 1, with the Western light-weight jockey W. Davis riding him. The barrier was lifted with Pulsus the first to move, and from the moment that the field went away Pulsus held command. Marmee, another of the light-weights, went after him, and closed on him to the far turn, where she took a place at the Gebhard colt's throatlatch, and hung with him until they were well into the stretch, the others then being far back and practically out of the race. On the straight Davis had only to ease his mount a bit, and Pulsus drew away with ease and won by a length and a half, while Marmee, ridden out after the winner, was three lengths before Cloverland, third. Summary:

Richmond County Fair and Horse Show.

The principal attraction yesterday at the Richmond County Fair and Horse Show, which began on Monday at the Cove grounds in West New Brighton, and will last through the week, was the judging of the horses in the show ring. The class for ponies over 13 and under 14 hands, shown to traps, had seven competitors, and was won by A. S. Janin's Dunmore, with George Thompson's Spot second, and Z. L. Alexander's Eureka third. Six roadsters were shown in light harness to wagon, horse counting 50 per cent. and appointments 50. W. W. McFarland's Bolatte obtained first, Jacob I. Houseman's Smuggler second, and Charles A. Griffith's Margaret Dean third. In the class for carriage horses 15 hands and under 15.3, six were shown, and George Cole's Taffy obtained first prize, with David Gould's Sporty Boy second, and J. H. Alexander, Jr.'s, Lady Dainty third.

Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

Jockey Raynor, who had the mount of H. B. Durham's mare Dekaber in the mile and a quarter handicap at Sheepshead Bay yesterday, had his leg badly torn by being crowded on the fence at the middle of the last turn. He was so injured that he had to be lifted from the mare when she stopped of her own will at the paddock turn, but before complaint of foul riding could be made the Stewards accepted the result as the horses finished, and the official placing was announced. Cloverland and Major Daingerfield were outside Dekaber when the crowding took place, and it seemed that Martin, on Daingerfield, was at fault for the happening.

For the victory of E. E. Smathers's horse Dick Bernard in the opening race J. L. McGinnis, owner of the second horse, Brooklynite, exacted a penalty amounting to 22 per cent. of the value of the purse by bidding up the winner, entered to sell for $1,700, to $3,000, the stable then retaining him for the usual $5 advance.

Roehampton, the veteran of many campaigns in the colors of J. G. Follansbee and one of the fastest horses on the turf as a three-year-old, has broken down beyond hope of his training again. He has been unsound for the past three seasons, but each year managed to pay a part of his stable's expenses.

Cock Robin, owned by W. C. Hayes and the only starter against Headmaster for the Oakdale Steeplechase Cup, bled after the first round of the course, and fell further and further away from his opponent, but Mr. Mather, who rode him, either did not recognize the trouble or was determined to get second money, as he rode the horse over the full course, Cock Robin pulling up with his chest covered with blood.

J. L. McGinnis made the unusual effort of starting the three-year-old Brooklynite in two races yesterday, the colt running in the first and finishing second to Dick Bernard, and then coming back again in the last race of the card. He was backed to be third in his second trial, but the pursuit of Dick Bernard in a mile run in 1:39 seemed to have been too much for him, as he had no speed in his repeat.

J. E. Madden saddled two winners yesterday in Waterside, running in the Madden colors, and Pulsus, running in the colors of Fred Gebhard. Pulsus is the colt that was regarded as the star of the Gayosa Stable, in which was Highball, early in the Spring of a year ago, and was bought from "Bud" May by Madden and H. Thomas. Later Mr. Thomas became dissatisfied and sold out his interest to Mr. Madden, who raced the colt successfully last season. Pulsus this Spring was transferred to Mr. Gebhard, and now gives fair promise of justifying the opinion that was held of him when he was sold for $25,000 as a two-year-old.

In retaliation for the bidding up of one of his horses by the owners of the Patchogue Stable, James Blute yesterday took away the value of the purse won by the Patchogue Stable Eagle in the last race at Sheepshead Bay. Eagle was entered to sell for $900, and was bid up to $1,500, his owners then retaining him for $5 additional.

OPEN POLO CHAMPIONSHIP.

Two Strong Teams Representing New York and Boston Entered.

An innovation in American polo will be the open championship tournament sanctioned last season by the Polo Association, and which will be played next week on the big polo field at Van Cortlandt Park. When the tournament was planned it was expected that several foreign players would be here, chiefly for the purpose of taking part in the proposed World's Fair games at St. Louis. The expectant visitors, however, have not appeared, but the Polo Association has decided to hold the event all the same. The entries closed yesterday with Chairman H. L. Herbert, and he announced that two strong teams had entered, but it is expected that one or two more may decide to play during the week.

One team will be composed of Foxhall P. Keene of Meadow Brook, Joshua Crane, Jr., of Dedham, Devereaux Milburn and R. L. Agassiz of Myopia, while the second team will be made up of Lawrence Waterbury and J. M. Waterbury, Jr., of the Westchester Country Club, J. E. Cowdin of Rockaway, C. R. Snowden and Bryn Mawr. The first team will probably be called the Boston team and the latter the New York team.

QUAKERS DEFEATED TWICE

Greater New Yorks Assumed Lead Again in American League.

NATIONALS WON FROM BOSTON

Washington Took One Game from the Champions—Even Break for Pittsburg and Cincinnati.

The Greater New Yorks assumed the lead again in the American League yesterday by defeating the Philadelphia team twice, and despite the fact that Waddell, the Quakers' crack pitcher, officiated in one contest and struck out fourteen men. Boston received a setback at the hands of the Washingtons, the latter winning the first game from the champions this year. In the National League the New Yorks were required to play ten innings before beating Boston, although having a big lead in the first half of the game. No game was scheduled for Brooklyn. AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Waddell Strikes Out 14 Men, but Greater New Yorks Win Two Games.

Two victories for the Greater New Yorks resulted from the double-header with the Philadelphia Athletics at American League Park yesterday, and both were essentially contests between pitchers. In the first "Rube" Waddell and Orth were pitted against each other, and, notwithstanding the fact that Waddell struck out fourteen men and held the local players down to seven hits, his team was beaten by a score of 5 to 2. Every New York player, with the exception of two, was included in the list of Waddell's strike outs, and up to the sixth inning Davis at first base did not have a put out to his credit, and the entire Philadelphia team had but one assist.

Bunching of hits in the third inning was responsible for the New Yorks' success. Waddell had struck out four men in the first two innings, and Orth, the first batsman in the third, received the same treatment. Dougherty, however, got to first on called balls, and Keeler advanced him by a hit over second base. Elberfeld's hit to left field scored Dougherty. Anderson placed the ball in Davis's hands, but the latter made a wretched throw to second to head off Elberfeld, and Keeler scored. Williams scored Elberfeld and Anderson on a three-base hit to left field. Then Waddell struck out Ganzel and Conroy. In the fourth inning, with two out and two strikes on Dougherty, the latter hit to the right field fence for a home run. The Quakers' first run was scored by Lave Cross on a three-bagger to centre field and Murphy's long fly. Seybold scored the second run in the ninth inning on two hits, a sacrifice, and an out.

Griffith and Henley were the opposing pitchers in the second game, and both were finely supported. Griffith was in splendid form, only one safe hit being made to the outfield. Both of the other hits were well fielded by Conroy, and the runners reached first by the narrowest margin. The New Yorks' runs were scored in the fourth inning on Dougherty's safe hit toward short stop, Keeler's sacrifice, and Anderson's long hit to right field, which bounded away from Seybold. The Quakers escaped a shut-out in the ninth on Hartsel's hit to Conroy, a wild pitch by Griffith which sent him to third, and Davis's out at first base. The scores:

BOSTON WON AND LOST.

BOSTON, Sept. 6.—Although Boston won the first game to-day, 4 to 1, the Washingtons registered their first victory of the season over the local players by defeating them 6 to 3 in the second game. As a result Boston dropped to second place in the League standing.

The opening game was a battle between poorly supported pitchers until the locals bunched their hits in the seventh inning. Ferris's injured thumb caused his retirement.

Washington went after Dineen in determined fashion in the second game, and won by hard hitting. Patten was highly effective in all but the fifth inning, when he was touched for three hits and five runs. Scores:
